Side two contains very typical Yes songs, with only one title proving otherwise. "Cinema," which was written by Squire Rabin, White and Kaye, is strictly a guitar and drum concerto. Recorded live at the Air Studios in London, "Cinema" may have been titled so because it was to be the name of Squire and White's tentative band before Yes' regrouping. If "Cinema" is what Squire and White's brainstorm would have yielded, Van Halen would have a run for their money.

"Hearts" is the closing track of the album and is a song very similar to "Into the Lens" on the "Drama" album, complete with haunting lyrics, and orchestral riffs. Anderson's exceptional talent in writing powerful lyrics is illustrated here; one can relate to the fact that heart and soul are one.

The standout cut on "90125" is "Changes," a tune which may contain every possible musical instrument, all utilized to form a melodious blend of synthesized music.

Lyrically, the composition is wonderful; Anderson encompasses the fact that with each day life changes, and that we cannot survive change without a bit of sorrow, perhaps caused by a loved one.

"90125" is the epitome of both old and new. Yes, in fact it is explosive, pensive, full of hope, and musically complex, yet simple in its theme. For a stepping stone, "90125" has allowed Yes to leap into the limelight.

Miniature Masterpieces: Bantam's Collection

By JAYNE M. STUART

The short story is a difficult form to utilize for several reasons. An author of such a style must be concise, to the point, and very imaginative. In the history of the written language, there have been countless short stories; but a few particular stories and authors endure, such as Tolstoy, Chekhov, Thurber and Hemingway, to name a few.

Any book that can boast of a well-rounded collection of authors and works is a must for the short story lover. One such book is a recent release by Bantam Books titled simply Short Stories: An Anthology of the Shortest Stories. It is edited by Irving and Ilana Howe, and a commendable job they do.

The unifying link for all these pieces is that they address humans and their nature. Although many of the stories are incredibly brief (2-3 pages), they have the ability to make statements, powerful and lasting.

Most of these authors are from the past and familiar: Joyce, Pirandello, de Maupassant and Crane (in addition to the authors mentioned earlier), yet their stories remain immortal. This is a collection of timeless masterpieces that can be read again and again and never grow stale.

To delve into this book is to enter into a diverse world of images, senses, sights and sounds. There is Joyce's Eveline, leaving home to venture into new worlds. "She was about to explore another life with Frank . . . Of course, her father had found out about the affair and had forbidden her to have anything to say to him."

There is Crane's vivid and well-known depiction of war, ". . . they too swung their heads, so that for another instant all hands, still silent, contemplated the distant forest as if their minds were fixed upon the mystery of a bullet's journey."

The touching story by Jerome Weidman about his father who insists upon sitting in the dark, alone, doing nothing, is priceless. "What do you think about, Pop?" I ask. His voice is quiet and even again. "Nothing," he says softly. "Nothing special."

This anthology of the shortest stories is a real treasure. It has a full array of authors and works, complete enough to familiarize any new-comer with some of the most brilliant short stories ever; and it also is a satisfying refresher for those who are short story lovers already.

To make this book, Short Stories: An Anthology of the Shortest Stories even more appealing, it is a paperback and can be purchased for only $2.95.

Endearing Terms Make An Endearing Movie

By DEAN C. BALSAMINI

"Terms of Endearment" is a touching film that looks at the relationship of a mother and daughter over a period of 30 years. Directed by James L. Brooks, (whose past credits include writing and producing the "Mary Tyler Moore Show"), "Terms of Endearment" explores the interaction of people and their understanding of one another's limitations.

The film, which stars Debra Winger ("Officer and A Gentleman," "The Urban Cowboy"), Shirley MacLaine and Jack Nicholson, is essentially a comedy according to director Brooks. But often "Terms" is a study of people's search for happiness and the disappointments that often await them. Brooks himself has said that "I really did not see this as some gentle piece about relationships or as a woman's picture. I couldn't get anybody to believe that I really meant what I was saying, save for Shirley MacLaine. She immediately shared my feeling that this was a comedy."

Whether or not "Terms of Endearment" comes across as comedy, it is an excellent movie. Like "The Big Chill," this film takes a look at people and what makes them act the way they do. Shirley MacLaine is very good as Aurora Greenway, a wealthy middle-aged widow. Debra Winger is excellent as Emma Horton, the unsophisticated but likable daughter of Greenway. Winger has no problem passing herself off as a teenager (resplendent in braces) at film's beginning, and her metamorphosis into a woman is quite believable.

Still, it is Jack Nicholson, who portrays Garrett Breedlove who steals the film. Nicholson, who is cast in a supporting role is simply brilliant. Breedlove is an astronaut on the "flip side" who has problems dealing with the humdrum of daily life after being a famous astronaut. Breedlove has pictures of himself all over his walls, chases after women and sports a paunch that he seems proud to show off. Nicholson's famous wry grin and scenes with MacLaine are the most enjoyable parts of the movie.

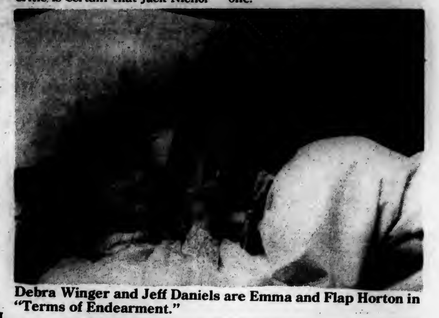
The crux of the film shows Emma and her mother usually baiting and disagreeing with one another. Aurora will never give her daughter her due, while Emma goes out of her way to do as she pleases. Greenway is also a woman who is bitter and has lost her zest for life. That is, until astronaut Breedlove rekindles the spark inside of her.

In one of the movies best scenes, Aurora invites Garrett to come over to see the "little Renoir" hanging in her bedroom. The repartee between MacLaine and Nicholson here is fabulous. In another scene where Aurora and Garrett aren't hitting it off, she still invites the former astronaut into her home. "I'd rather stick needles in my eyes," retorts Nicholson's Breedlove.

As the film progresses, the relationships between the characters change somewhat. Emma and her mother never really become very close, but as close as they could realistically ever be. Aurora and Garrett learn that there is something within each other that they do need, and are drawn toward one another.

Overall, "Terms of Endearment" succeeds because the film has no superheroes. Everyday people who just seek happiness from life are the stars here. As an audience, we can identify with the people and problems that they each face. We become involved with the characters emotionally, and feel drained at film's conclusion (keep a handkerchief handy).

"Terms of Endearment" is one of the year's best films, and this critic is certain that Jack Nicholson will walk away with another Oscar for his performance. Originally, there was an ending written for this review, but Nicholson's feelings about "Terms of Endearment" are more apropos. "If the critics don't like this one, they really ought to get a different job. Their own misery's got to be too deep, if they don't respond to this one."



Debra Winger and Jeff Daniels are Emma and Flap Horton in "Terms of Endearment."

Rita's Education is Not Just In School

By KELLY O'NEILL

"Educating Rita" is a refreshing film which delights and captivates the viewer. Set in Dublin, Ireland, at Trinity College, the movie depicts an ill-read woman of twenty-six and her desire to become "cultured." She is in search of a "new song," as she puts it, and she believes that by learning about literature she will find herself, and in turn learn to sing a new song. Michael Caine plays Dr. Frank Bryant, a tired and somewhat drunken professor of literature who has become disinterested in teaching.

Julie Walters' performance as Rita is commendable and stands out as one of the highlights of the film. Walters' portrayal of an unaffected, simple, yet spirited individual, is delightful and humorous, and enhances the character of the film. As the tutor, Caine's character complements Rita's enthusiasm for learning while he discovers new meaning in his career. Through her eagerness to learn, Rita rekindles Dr. Bryant's lost enthusiasm, which has been dulled and suppressed by overburdening tradition and "culture." The chemistry between the two characters is invaluable.

Because "Educating Rita" is similar to "Pygmalion," or 'My Fair Lady," the film was somewhat predictable and at times a bit drawn out. The professor's drinking problem was made clear to us continually, almost to the point that it loses much of its effectiveness and purpose towards the story line.

During the course of the movie we see a constant change taking place in the character of Rita, the clothes she wears, the way she speaks, and the company she keeps. By becoming educated she believes her life will change so she brings about that change on her own, losing sight of the person she really is, the person Dr. Bryant was so initially charmed by.

Rita's simple, straightforward manner is what makes her so attractive to Dr. Bryant, and to the audience. Walter's portrays this "knowing" innocence superbly and she is believable in her most brash moments, while at the same time completely convincing in the most tender ones. She is a breath of fresh air for Bryant and he wishes for her to remain so.

Rita's flat-mate, Trish, played by Maureen Lipman was an important person in Rita's new life, (although the part was a small one in terms of screen time). She possessed many books, loved fine music, was very intellectual and represented everything Rita was striving for. In Rita's eyes she had herself together, and only when Trish attempted to commit suicide did Rita finally put things in perspective. She realized what Dr. Bryant was trying to make her understand: education only enhances the person you are, it does not create the person you can become. Yes, Rita ends up singing a "new song," but we must question, as Rita does, whether it is a better song.

All in all, the viewing of "Educating Rita" was an enjoyable and worthwhile experience, a refreshing change from the typical movies we see today. The character of Rita has the ability to captivate Dr. Bryant's attentiveness almost as much as she captivates the audience. It is this interaction which

Simon's Sounds are Sweet

By LEONARD J. LaBARTH

Perhaps if this artist had not put his last name on the album, he would not be suffering from any unfair comparisons. However, with that moniker and the eerily unfamiliar album cover photo, comparisons have been made. These semblances must be encouraging for the artist because sales for the album have been good as the curious and others pick up the LP.

Simon Townshend, the younger brother of Who lyricist and guitarist Pete Townshend, has released his first album titled "Sweet Sound." Produced by his virtuous older sibling, Townshend's album is a creative piece of work, fun to listen to once all the comparisons have been made and either retained or discarded.

The younger Townshend is eighteen years behind his legendary brother. When Pete Townshend was playing Bo Diddley and Little Richard compositions in every hall and dive around England, in an early form of the Who called The High Numbers, Simon was still a toddler. So as far as musical influences go, Pete wasn't exactly around a lot to encourage Simon, who began playing guitar and piano when he was 8 — right about the time the Who sprung the rock opera "Tommy" on the world.

With the advent of mega-electronics use in the mid-70s, the teenage Simon Townshend was right there with the rest of the crowd, forming garage bands with such names as On The Air, Shea Ramah, and Sounds of Green Lightning, all performing a different style of music.

Soon tired of putting up with the ego conflicts that go along with being in, and fronting a band, Townshend began producing his own demos, playing all the instruments himself. After a few years of refining his sound, brother Pete heard the end product and suggested producing his brother's work.

On the 21/Polygram label, "Sweet Sound" is an enjoyable album, if bogged down in electronic effects. Of course, if one is expecting "Who Are You," "Love Reign O'er Me," or "5:15," it can cloud over the work. There are similarities in the vocal style between the brothers and certain arrangements have the pattern of Who compositions, but what musician/band hasn't been influenced by the Who? Actually, Simon Townshend's sound is more of a cross between Warren Zevon's growl and Steve Winwood's whines that dissolve into synthesizers.

Forget about listening for comparisons and influences and concentrate on the tight musicianship and sharp vocals.

Backed by keyboardist Chris Stainton, bassist Steve Barnicle from Visage, and Big Country drummer Mark Brzeyicki, Townshend is effective with tough, solid songs like "I'm The Answer" and "Palace In The Air." Lyrics such as those from "Heart Stops" are a good example of Townshend's style: "Where you gonna be when your world stops/ How yer gonna go if your aiming too high/ Where you gonna be when your heart stops/ Head up in the clouds and so much slipped by."

Some of the songs grow sluggish in Winwood-esque synthesizer usage but not such that it detracts from the lyrics.

Record stores have unfairly categorized "Sweet Sound" with Who and Pete Townshend records, hoping to capitalize on the popularity of those sales to promote Simon Townshend. Many of the record retailers have gone as far as to make record displays with "Sweet Sound" flanked by Who releases. It's too bad because Simon Townshend deserves the separation he requests.

"Sweet Sound" is an impressive debut album that will appeal to any one appreciative of rock 'n roll with the mix of electronics.

Most likely, any Who fan will rush out and buy it, if for name only. But don't expect any real similarities, Simon Townshend has thrown away musical familial connections to embark on his own style. A wise move for Simon.

Cats Claw Hawks in Debut

By N. JOHN CAVUTO AND MARY AGNES MATYSZEWSKI

If Wednesday night's game is any indication, then the season ahead should leave Villanova basketball fans with hypertension, ulcers, and gray hair. The Cats, never a team to coast to an easy victory, had to take St. Joseph's into overtime before finally disposing of the Hawks, 57-50, in the Big Five season opener.

At center court to start the game for Villanova were guards Gary McLain and Frank Dobbs, forwards Dwayne McClain and Harold Pressley, and seven-foot center Chuck Everson — making his starting debut in place of the injured Eddie Pinckney. As Head Coach Rollie Massimino was later to explain, "Ed's had some foot trouble and frankly, I just wanted to give Chuck a break, and he gave a nice try."

Despite scoring the first field goal, on a Dwayne McClain jumper at 19:09 — which sent blue and white streamers flying on to the court — the Cats strugged early on as they could only manage outside shots against a tough Hawk defense.

With 12:46 remaining in the half and the game tied at ten all, Ed Pinckney entered the game, much to the delight of the Villanova fans who soon began the familiar chant, "Ed-die! Ed-die!" However, Pinckney soon became plagued with foul trouble, picking up his third with 4:27 left in the half.

With 3:26 on the clock and the score 23-18 in favor of the Hawks, St. Joe's went into a stall, forcing the Cats out of their zone defense and into a man-to-man. This tactic enabled the Hawks to enter the locker room at halftime leading by the score of 30-20.

Villanova's locker room, however, was faced with the task of making adjustments for the second half of play. Concerning the Wildcats performance in the first half, Dwayne McClain commented, "We weren't executing our offense too well. We were rushing it because it was a big game and we had a lot of young kids in there." In addition, Coach Massimino was concerned with the Wildcats rebounding as Villanova found itself getting only one shot on offense while allowing St. Joe's several opportunities to score: "They were beating us to the glass every time," he said.

Despite a ten point deficit at the start of the second half, the Cats showed that they could not be counted out of the ball game.

In the all-important first minute of play, two baskets by Harold Pressley — the first coming from a nice feed from McLain off a break — enabled the Cats to quickly narrow the Hawk lead.

However, with 14:30 left in the half, St. Joe's was able to widen its lead to nine points, forcing the Wildcats to call a time out to regroup. This proved extremely beneficial to the Cats as they were able to pump in the next eight points.

With St. Joe's protecting its now one-point lead, Pressley was able to strip the ball from Hawk center Tony Costner. In the process of diving for the loose ball, Pressley was elbowed in the lip and had to be taken to the locker room where he received four stitches.

A Gary McLain twenty-foot jumper from the top of the key tied the game at 37. Less than a minute later, the junior converted both ends of a one-and-one to give the Wildcats their first lead since very early in the game.

Coach Masimino was extremely pleased with McLain's overall performance, stating, "I thought Gary played very well. He controlled both the team and the basketball tempo."

McLain ended the game perfect from both the field and the line for the night, hitting on all three field goal attempts and four foul shot tries. He also contributed a game high ten points.

"Villanova controlling the ball for the last shot in a 45-43 game, Pressley re-entered the lineup. According to Massimino, "I don't know how good it was to put him back in, but we needed him to run that special cut and he was ready."

At this point in the game, McLain and McClain proceeded to play catch with each other at half court, winding the clock down to 30 seconds at which point Villanova called a time-out. Ten seconds later, the Cats called another time out to set up their final shot. However, the play did not go as designed. Eddie Pinckney was forced to put up a 15-footer and a tip-in by Dwayne McClain failed to make the buzzer.

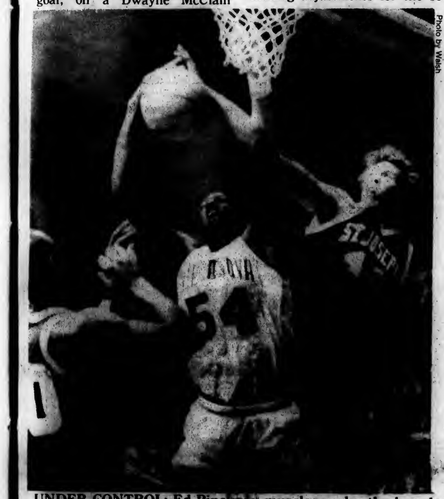
Dwight Wilbur later exlained the failed final play: "We wanted to get the clock down to ten seconds and then get the ball down low to Ed, but we lost track of the time and Ed had to take the shot given to him."

The encounter thus proceeded to overtime. However, this soon proved to be a whole different story as Villanova took command from the beginning. Pinckney took control of the tap and later fed Pressley on a layup to give the Cats a quick 45-43 lead.

A 6-1 scoring spurt, which included a pair of free throws from both Wilbur and McLain, and another layup by Pressley, put the game on ice.

High scorer for the Cats was Pressley with 16 points, while Tony Costner pumped in 17 for the Hawks.

Overall, Coach Massimino was pleased with his team. "The kids played really well. I think it was a heck of a game for a first game of the season." Even St. Joe's coach, Jim Boyle, was impressed, "We just played a darn good team."



UNDER CONTROL: Ed Pinckney muscles under the boards against St. Joe's Wednesday night at the Palestra.

Women Trample Golden Rams

By BOB HELLER

Senior guard Nancy Bernhardt commanded the Villanova fast break to spark Villanova to a 98-46 victory over West Chester in their season opener.

The Wildcats scored fifteen times on eighteen fast break attempts, while stopping West Chester cold on their only fast break attempt of the game.

The Wildcats came out charging in the first half, putting 15 points on the scoreboard before West Chester scored its first two. Villanova continued to increase its lead throughout the first half and led 48-23 at halftime. Villanova shot 50 percent from the field as opposed to West Chester, which shot 25 percent in the first half.

The second half was much like the first as Nova scored 50 points. Villanova shot 21-for-36 from the field in the second half and 41-for-76 overall for a shooting percentage of 53.9. From the foul line, the Cats shot 16-for-23 for a 69.5 percent rate.

After the game, Coach Harry Perretta was pleased with the Wildcat fast break, but was slightly concerned with the team's sloppy play early; "I was surprised with how great the break worked. But early in the game we looked sloppy even though the number of turnovers did not reflect this." Villanova committed 11 turnovers in the game compared to 28 for West Chester.

The game marked the Wildcat debut of seven freshmen players on Perretta's young squad. Shelly Pennefather started the game at forward and collected 15 points and 11 rebounds. Guards Karen Hargadon and Lynn Tighe scored 11 and nine points respectively. Coming off the bench in the center spot were 6-1 Mary DeLorey and 6-2 Mary Beth Kulp to grab seven total rebounds. Also coming off the bench were Kathy Miller and Denise Lamay who scored a basket apiece. Assistant Coach Andy McGovern commented, "I hope the freshmen will continue to improve and help the team."

"It was a good opener for us. I hope the freshmen will continue to improve and help the team as the season progresses."
— Andy McGovern

Starting at the guard position were two seniors, Nancy Bernhardt and Andrea Burton. Bernhardt made nine of 11 shots for a team high 18 points while Burton contributed 10 points and six assists to the Wildcat totals. Starting at the other forward spot along with Pennefather was sophomore Katrina Messenger, who grabbed eight rebounds and scored six points. The Wildcats starting center was junior Sandra Williams who added eight points to the Wildcat total of 98. Other scorers for the Wildcats were senior Mimi Coleman with four points and four assists; junior Kathy Razler with nine points; sophomore Kym Goodnight with three and DeLorey with one.

Mary Ellen McGowan.

As far as women's cross country goes, Villanova has one of the best athletes in the country on the team. This gifted young athlete is Mary Ellen McGowan. As a junior, McGowan has earned national recognition as a runner. According to her coach, Robert Shoudt, "There is no doubt about it that Mary Ellen has proven to be one of the top runners in the country."

Recently, McGowan ran in the national championship cross country race at Lehigh where she placed 21st in the 5000 meters. The top 25 runners to finish this race are considered to be All-American athletes, therefore making McGowan an All-American runner. She is the only runner on both the men's and women's cross country teams to receive this type of national recognition at Villanova.

Ever since her arrival at Villanova, McGowan has qualified to run in the national championships for cross country. She ran in the national championship last year where she placed 67th as a sophomore.

Cross country is not the only sport the junior has excelled in. She also runs indoor and outdoor track and has gained recognition for her efforts here as well. As a sophomore, she qualified to run the 1500 in the outdoor championships in Houston, Tx. with a running time of 4:12. As a freshman, McGowan was an All-American in the AIAW in the 3000-meter race. There has not been a year when she has failed to achieve a new title or a better time than in her past years.

According to Coach Shoudt, "Mary Ellen has been an outstanding runner all year long. She is also a great stabilizing factor on the team." She is obviously a leader and sets a great example for aspiring underclassmen. As a very talented athlete, Mary Ellen McGowan deserves the recognition she has received over the years.

The Dawning of a New Era

It is time for the changing of the guards, the ending of an era for Editor's Angle and the beginning of a new column — On The Sidelines. As the days become shorter and winter spreads its chill over Villanova, Larry Goanos has handed the reins over to the new sports editors — Mary Agnes Matyszewski and John Cavuto. We salute Larry for his fine work during the past year and we would especially like to thank him for all that he has left us — a file full of drawers of heaven only knows what, hours of reorganization, tremendous relations with all of Villanova's sports teams, a demand for covering every major Villanova sporting event, and a roast beef sandwich in the refrigerator. But seriously, Larry, we would like to thank you for your "guiding hand" in these past few weeks and we hope to continue your fine journalistic undertakings in the twelve months ahead.

The upcoming year will be an exciting one in sports at Villanova. As everyone knows, the Wildcats possess one of the finest basketball programs in the country, and this year's team will be sure to continue the Cat's fine tradition — "roaring to the top." The women's basketball team is a preseason favorite to capture the Big East title. Nova's Icecats are beginning their first full season on the Division III level, and should prove to be powerful foes for their competition. The men's and women's track teams, both coming off fine recruiting years, should also excel during their respective seasons and live up to their internationally renowned reputation.

As editors, it will not be possible to satisfy everyone's demand for coverage, as limited space forces us to economize and determine which stories warrant top priority. However, we, with the help of Assistant Sports Editor Michael Irons, hope to keep you, the readers, up to date and fully aware of what is happening on the sports scene at Villanova.

In this column, we hope to inform the Villanova campus not only of the action taking place under the spotlights, but also to let you become a part of the game by relating the events occurring off the field or court as well as on the sidelines.

Football Championships Decided

By CATHRYN CYBULSKI

The Villanova women's intramural football season climaxed on Nov. 20 with a 19-0 victory for the Mud Gang over the Mighty Mates. Ann Hannigan led the potent Mud Gang offense by throwing for two touchdowns and rambling in for another.

The Mud Gang jumped out on top with a 25-yard scoring strike from Hannigan to senior wide receiver Dona Hurley. The extra point failed, enabling the Mighty Mates to head into the locker room at the half trailing only by a 6-0 margin.

In the second half the Mud Gang attack exploded for two more TDs, one coming on a 40-yard reception by Sharon Cecchi, and the other on a six-yard burst by Hannigan. Beth Hannigan hauled in a three-yard pass for the extra point.

"The offensive line did a great job of protecting me," said an exhausted Ann Hannigan after the game. "They allowed me to sit back in the pocket and watch the patterns develop."

The Mud Gang defense did a great job on the Mighty Mates throughout the contest. Two defensive letdowns were compensated for by Jennifer Cryor's pair of interceptions. Beth Robertson and Julie Cypher also made key defensive plays down the stretch to preserve the Mud Gang shutout.

"We used alternating zone defenses to keep the seams covered during the passing downs, while our rover back was used extensively to offset overloads on the weak side," explained defensive captain Helen Kelly.

The Mud Gang is an exceptional team in that it has no coach, conducts no practices, yet hasn't lost a single game in the past two seasons, running its record over that span to a gaudy 18-0.

Also on the roster of this remarkable squad were Joanie Doyle, Mary Ann Dailey, Lynn LaBanca, Maureen Stack, and Mindy Levengood.

The Gladiators scored on a three-yard Jim Hurley plunge with only 53 seconds remaining in regulation time to defeat Pi Kappa Phi on Sunday, Nov. 20 and capture the coveted men's intramural football title with a 12-7 victory.

Randy Henzes opened the scoring for Pi Kappa Phi with a six yard roll-out into the endzone in the first half. The extra point was good thanks to a John Guttridge reception which put the Pi Kaps on top 7-0.

The Gladiators answered that, however, with a 42-yard bomb to Pat McMahon, good for a touchdown. Hurley's TD was the last score of the game and it put the finishing touches on a sparkling 9-1-1 season for the unheralded Gladiators. The Pi Kappa Phi squad also finished up at 9-1-1.

Icecats Split Pair

By TOM KOLON

Last weekend, the Villanova Icecats split a pair of games to bring their overall record to 3-4. On Saturday, Nova traveled to St. John's for an ECAC matchup and were handed their fourth straight defeat, 7-2. The Redmen thus lowered the Division III record of the club to 1-2. Saturday's performance was certainly not up to par for Villanova, as they were constantly outskated and outchecked by their opponents.

Sunday afternoon, in the friendly confines of their home ice, the hockey team snapped its skid with a 14-0 explosion over the University of Scranton to become 2-1 in the MACHC.

In a game that seemed more like a passing and shooting drill for the Icecats, Scranton's goalie was pounded for 64 shots. As nearly the entire team contributed pointwise to the offensive effort, Nova jumped out to a 9-0 first period lead. They added three more in the second and dumped in an extra two in the final period.

Leading the scoring for the Cats were junior John Padova and freshman Pete Geraghty, with two goals and two assists each. Frank Segreto added a goal and four assists, while Steve Thorley chipped in one goal and three assists. The rest of the goals were distributed among the team, and everyone contributed well by hitting the open men with crisp passes and skating hard throughout the match.

Coach Skip Probst was pleased with the performance of the rookies on Sunday, since it was the first game for many of them. With the promise of the new men, Probst is likely to see some changes for this weekend's Boston trip, as he searches for the winning combination.

Women Defeat Bryn Mawr

By LAUREN SEAVER

It was their first official meet of the season. In the Wildcat tradition, the Villanva women's swim team pounced on Bryn Mawr.

By a score of 97-43, the women defeated Bryn Mawr, taking first place in 12 out of 16 events. In 11 of the events, the Wildcats took second place.

Although the women did not anticipate the meet to be a very competitive one, they found it to be a good meet to start off with. According to Head Coach Chris McKee, the Bryn Mawr meet "gave us a good opportunity to see the freshmen compete and to see how we stand."

Judging from the meet, it appears as though the team stands strongly. "We look pretty good," said Coach McKee, "I feel optimistic that we can do as well this season as last, if not better."

Last year, the Wildcats finished their season by placing third in the Big East Championships. Although they are faced with the same tough schedule, the overall feeling of the team is very confident.

According to junior Nancy Bowman, who currently is suffering from a back injury, "We have a very strong team and are very supportive of each other." The mutual support among the girls demonstrates their desire to excel both individually and team-wise.

With the exception of three graduated seniors, last year's team members have returned along with five new freshmen. Nancy feels that the freshmen "give a lot to the team."

"We are looking forward to the season because we've been training for a long time," said Coach McKee. Working out since September, the girls practice for two hours every day.

A very demanding and disciplined sport, motivation is an essential part of swimming. "Most of practice is face down looking at a black line," commented McKee. "But the girls have a great self-motivated attitude."

Stretching into February, the women's swim team has a full season ahead of them. While their perennial rivals are Drexel and LaSalle, Coach McKee feels that the Boston University/Yale meet and the Princeton meet will be the most challenging.

According to Co-Captain Gen Mulderig, "We're optimistic about the season and we plan to be the best in the area."

...showed their true colors and
...played very well and the freshmen
...did a fine job. I was extremely ...pleased with the job everyone did
...this year to make the team a suc...cess."

Regarding the future, McGinnis stated, "Next year should be a re-building year for us with the loss of three seniors. Players like Alix Zuckowsky, Karen Rank and Tracy Smith should continue to improve and this year's freshmen will be very productive. If we have another good recruiting year like last year, we should be able to equal last year's record.

Notes: Playing well for the Wildcats was Tracy Smith, and as a result of her fine play, she was named to the Big East All-Tournament Team . . . Co-captain Stephanie Moore stated, "The level of play in the whole tournament was pretty good. Except for a few mental mistakes and a few calls that went against us, we might have been in the finals."

CANCER. NOT KNOWING THE RISKS IS YOUR GREATEST RISK.

A lot of people think cancer is unbeatable.

That simply isn't true. In fact, over two million people have had cancer and survived to lead happy, normal lives.

And not only can cancer be beaten, it can also be prevented.

There are definite precautions that have been proven to decrease your risk of getting certain cancers.

Ask your local American Cancer Society to send you a free booklet about cancer risks.

Learn the facts about cancer.

And make not knowing the risks, one less risk.

The Villanova men's swim team started the season with a splash, winning its first two meets. On Nov. 19, they swam in a dual meet at the University of Connecticut, beating the Huskies, 81-32, and beating Georgetown,

Coach Ed Geisz

Coach Ed Geisz feels the team "swam very well for November. The times were decent, but they weren't outstanding. It woke us up, though. Tomorrow (Nov. 29), we swim against Yale and Boston University. I think we'll be twice as good as we were two weeks ago. We'll never beat Yale and Boston University with the times we had against Connecticut and Georgetown."

The Watercats have been practicing since Sept. 10. Geisz, who has been coaching swimming at Villanova for the past 31 years, said "they're one of my strongest teams in all my years here." He's only had five losing seasons and has won 65% of his meets. This season, Nova has 16 dual meets and two separate championships — the Big East's and the Eastern's.

The team's record last season was 10-6; they came in third in the Big East Tournament, and seventh in the Eastern Championships. Geisz and the team feel that they can improve on that record this season, bringing it up to 13-3 at least. "We want to try and move up to fifth place in the Eastern Championships, and we're out to win the Big East this season," Geisz said.

Crew Wins

By PAM HAJINIAN

While most Villanovans were busy spending the last weekend before Thanksgiving finalizing plans for the trip home, Villanova's men's and women's crew were busy on the Schuylkill River, rowing to victory.

The Frostbite, which is a 1500-meter race, took place on Nov. 19, and proved to be a most rewarding Regatta for Villanova crew.

Early in the day, Villanova's freshmen novice women's crew moved into first only with the last 15 strokes, beating such schools as Ithaca and Marietta. The next Villanova crew to cross the finish line first was the freshmen novice men's crew. Next off the starting line for Villanova was the men's varsity four. Closing the day's events were two consecutive races by the women's varsity crew. The varsity "A" faired well, finishing fourth out of seven. The women's varsity "B" rowed nicely finishing sixth.

Welcome to the Villanovan's 1983-84 Big East Preview. With a squad that is 10-man deep, Georgetown rests securely at the top of the conference pack. But Boston College, Villanova and Pitt should all be expected to challenge the Hoyas in the league race.

A preview of each team appears below in the order of the writers' predicted finish.

Abbreviations: p.p.g. - points per game; s.p.g. - steals per game; a.p.g. - assists per game.

Georgetown (22-10 NCAA, 11-5 Conference)

Watch out for the Hoyas. With all five starters returning from last season and the addition of high school All-American Reggie Williams, Georgetown, a team in everyone's national top ten, looks like the one to beat in the Big East.

Patrick Ewing, of course, will be at the center of the Hoya's success. The 7-foot junior averaged 17.7 points and 10.2 rebounds last year in leading a freshman-sophomore-dominated squad to the Mideast Regional of the NCAA Tournament. Ewing, who blocked 106 shots a year ago, should get some rebounding help from 6-8 freshman Michael Graham and the 6-7 Williams.

But Williams, the national high school player of the year, should add to the already-solidified offense as well. The Dunbar HS (Balt) grad poured in 25 points per game in his final year and should become a threat at both off-guard and small forward.

Although guard-forward Anthony Jones has transferred to Nevada-Las Vegas, Georgetown still has a host of offensive stars back from last year. The 6-7 junior Bill Martin (11.6 ppg) will help out up front, and Gene Smith is a defensive specialist (68 steals) in the back court. Fred Brown, out last year with knee trouble, appears ready to take over the playmaking duties.

Those players will be complemented by three sophomores in the backcourt: Michael Jackson (10.6 ppg), another point guard; 6-5 David Wingate, a swingman last season who will press for a starting role; and Horace Broadnax, an outside threat, expected to come off the bench.

It comes down to this: if Ewing gets more rebounding support and those sophomores and juniors profit from last year's experience, few will challenge this team come tournament time.

Villanova

Villanova (24-8, 12-4)

Gone are John Pinone, Stew Granger and Mike Mulquin, and with them, 4000 points, 1400 rebounds and 1000 assists. But Villanova, led by a trio of juniors, will once again be ready to challenge for the Big East crown.

One of those expected to lead the way is Ed Pinckney, Nova's top rebounder the past two seasons and a Street & Smith's All-American this year. The 6-9½ junior contributed 12.5 points per game and rejected 66 shots in helping the Cats reach the Midwest Regional finals a year ago.

Pinckney will get some help underneath from second-year defensive specialist Harold Pressley, who, coming off a slow '82-'83 campaign, started things off right this year with 16 points and 16 rebounds against the Swedish National Team.

Dwayne McClain, the second of the Class of '85 threesome, adds scoring (10.6) to the Cats' frontcourt, which should also get some rebounding support from 6-7 freshman Connally Brown. Sophomores Chuck Everson and Wyatt Maker will also give Villanova a boost inside.

Gary McLain, the third junior, is a point guard displaying fine ball control skills (one turnover every 12 minutes). Three others will share the guard duties: Harold Jensen, the Parade All-American who can play both backcourt positions; Dwight Wilbur, the sophomore marksman; and senior Frank Dobbs, another Wildcat expected to assume some leadership responsibilities.

With Pinckney taking over inside where Pinone left off, and Pressley assuming more of a presence offense, Villanova should remain one of the best in the conference.

Boston College

If there is a team that can challenge Georgetown, it is Boston College. The Eagles are returning four out of five starters, with center John Garvin to the Cleveland Cavaliers. BC's attack is paced by 6-11 senior [illegible] (17.7 ppg, 8.1 rpg) and 6-8 junior [illegible] (14.2 ppg, 8.1 rpg). Senior [illegible] (5.2 ppg, 3.0 apg) also returns to the Eagles' attack.

[illegible] will be counted on to help at the offensive guard position. [illegible] will be looked to for help at the offensive guard position. [illegible] will be looked to for help at the offensive guard position.

Pittsburgh

[illegible] in the Big East in scoring and rebounding. [illegible] will be looked to for help at the offensive guard position. [illegible] will be looked to for help at the offensive guard position. [illegible] will be looked to for help at the offensive guard position.

won't replace John Garvin with one player. But we may be able to compensate by having several players who contain value for us."

Three sophomores lead the roster: Marvin Clark (8.4 ppg, 4.0 rpg) and Dominic Pressley (5.8 ppg, 1.8 apg).

The Eagles have a deep bench with juniors Stu Primus and Terrance Talley and sophomores Reggy McCready, Mike Sinicki, and Ted Kelly all contributing last year. Sharp-shooting freshman Rodney Rice should improve BC's offense, which finished first in the nation last year.

Last year's team won a school record of 25 games following the departure of John Bagley to Cleveland. This year, they must again adjust their offense due to the loss of their star. One thing to keep in mind is that in the past three seasons, only three schools have reached the Final 16 each year: Virginia, North Carolina, and Boston College.

four of five starters, including offensive machine, forward Glenn Vaughan. Vaughan led the conference in scoring with 21.9 points per game and was the team's top rebounder with 9.2 boards a game.

Pittsburgh's major worry is the lack of a true center. Chipman hopes that transfer Jeff Robinson, a 6-10 center from Cincinnati, will "give us the scoring and rebounding we were missing last year." Another important newcomer is high school All-American guard Curtis Aiken, a pure shooter and good ball handler who will back up returning starters George Allen (9.0 ppg, 1.5 apg) and Bill Culbertson (6.6 ppg, 5.1 apg). Allen and Culbertson are two of the flashiest guards in the Big East, and it will be their job to take some of the pressure off Vaughan.

Forward Andre Williams (9.1 ppg, 5.0 rpg) is the other starter coming back. Williams played center last season, but with the arrival of Robinson, will be moved to his natural forward position.

Pitt has a good bench with guard Joey David and forwards Chip Watkins, Keith Armstrong and Steve Beatty all returning.

If the Panthers can get strong play from their center and play consistently each game, Pitt will be competitive all year.

St. John's

St. John's (26-5, 12-4)

It's rebuilding time for Lou Carnesecca, whose Redmen must rebound from the loss to graduation of forwards David Russell and Billy Goodwin, and guards Bob Kelly and Kevin Williams.

To do that, St. John's will rely on some new faces and old. Chris Mullin, of the old guard, returns for his third year of action as a pre-season All-American and the bearer of the bulk of the Redmen offense. Mullin netted 19.1 points per game a year ago, and, with Russell (15.4) now gone, must add to that this time around.

Stepping in alongside Mullin in the backcourt will be Mike Moses, a 5-11 transfer from Florida who should more than make up for the loss of Kelly. And 6-3 freshman guard Mark Jackson should plug the hole left by Williams.

Likewise, the frontcourt will see a mixture of experience and inexperience. Seven-footer Bill Wennington and 6-10 Jeff Allen return, and Carnesecca has indicated that the two might see playing time together if Allen properly recovers from an injury-plagued summer.

Ron Stewart, a 6-8 junior who averaged only 3.0 points per game last season will have to produce more this year. Willie Glass, a 6-5 freshman swingman from Atlantic City, can help inside and might gain a starting role as the season unfolds.

St. John's would have been a lot better off if 6-9 redshirt Walter Berry had stayed academically eligible at the University. He will now spend a year at San Jacinto Junior College in Texas.

Joe Carnesecca summed it up, "All in all, it's a team with a lot of question marks, but if we can get some consistency, and if some role players step forward, this is a team which could be very tough."

For [illegible] point guard Ricky [illegible] and [illegible] scoring Stan Jackson has put a dent in the team's offensive plans. In trying to replace Jackson and his 18.9 scoring average, Mahoney will look to All-American junco transfer Brian Waller, a 6-5 swingman.

As for the Tucker replacement, well, that is not quite as clear. Newcomer Billy Donovan seems to have the playmaking ability for the position, but is a freshman. Sophomore Harold Starks, who really impressed observers in the team's recent victory over the Swedish National Team.

Now that Jackson has left, senior Carl Hill becomes the Friar's best outside shooter, but he has yet to prove himself. He will get some competition for the other guard slot from sophomore Don Brown, Germantown's Ernie "Pop" Lewis, and Dick Pennefather.

The one spot where the Friars have no doubts is at center, where Otis Thorpe, a second team Big East selection this year, takes to the court for the final time. Thorpe was Providence's main force inside a year ago, grabbing an average of eight rebounds per game and shooting a Conference high .642 from the field.

Forward Sean Canty, a 6-7 senior, will provide Thorpe with some help underneath, as will 6-6 Keith Lomax, sophomore Al Roth and 6-7 freshman Dave Kupfer.

With an improved Thorpe, the Friars should again pull some upsets, but the 6-9 center will not be enough to lift the team from the depths of the second division.

Connecticut

Connecticut (9-18, 5-11)

The Huskies have the scoring punch, but lack any inside threat. Earl Kelly, the Big East Rookie of the Year, returns with a 16.7 scoring mark and the responsibility of once more shaping Dom Perno's offense.

But Kelly will have some help in the scoring department, as Perno went out and landed two junior college offensive machines, Alvin Frederick and Ray Broxton. The 6-5 Frederick averaged 27.5 points per game last season in gaining first team junior college All-American honors, and might see immediate action for the Huskies as a swingman. Broxton, a 6-7 forward, chipped in 19.8 for his North Florida Junior College squad.

"Both Alvin and Ray bring immediate valuable experience with their basketball skills," said Perno. "They have the talent to score points coupled with excellent quickness which will enhance our running game."

Three-year starter Karl Hobbs, who averaged 11.8 points per game, will once again be instrumental at guard, as will reserve Vernon Giscombe (9.4).

If the backcourt appears solid, the frontcourt does not. Bruce Kuczenski was the team's top rebounder a year ago but has since gone the way of the NBA draft. Right now, there is no one to fill that space. 6-7 sophomore Tim Coles and 6-9 Larry Stanton can give it a try, but neither averaged more than five boards per game last season.

Perno added many newcomers to help at the frontcourt, including 6-10 Mani Kasanganay and 6-9 Ben Moore, but it looks like another uphill battle for the Huskies this year.

Seton Hall

Seton Hall (8-23, 1-15)

The Pirates ended up with a 1-15 record in the Big East last year and will be back in the bottom this season too. Even though Seton Hall returns all five starters, there can be little hope for the undersized Pirates among the tall timber of the Big East.

Sophomore forward Andre McCloud leads Seton Hall with 16.6 points per game and 6.6 rebounds. McCloud is the Pirate's main offensive threat and will need much help to make this team competitive. The return of 6-7 Sir John Collins and Nate Rogers should strengthen Seton Hall's frontcourt.

The Pirates, like Pittsburgh, lack a legitimate center. If 6-10 junior college transfer Jim Wright does not [illegible], the [illegible] will be 6-6 Marvin Morris (8.0 ppg, 4.0 rpg).

In the backcourt, sophomore Ricky [illegible] (6.1 ppg) will direct the offense. [illegible] will be looked to for help at the offensive guard position. [illegible] will be looked to for help at the offensive guard position. [illegible] will be looked to for help at the offensive guard position.

A stone lion was stolen from the front porch of a home on Curwen Road. The lion has great sentimental value to the family; consequently, they would appreciate its return. Anyone who may have information about this lion should contact the Dean of Students Office.

SNAP

There will be a Christmas Party and meeting on Dec. 13 at 7:30 p.m. in Bartley 209. Take a break from studying and join us! Refunds for those who attended the convention will be given. Current stationary is in; pick it up at the meeting. Hope to see you there!

Anniversary Mass

On Dec. 15 at 7 p.m. there will be a Mass in the Main Chapel to celebrate the 100th Anniversary of the laying of the Cornerstone of that building. Bishop Louis DeSimone, Auxiliary Bishop of Philadelphia and a graduate of Villanova, will be the Main Celebrant. Fr. Henry A. Greenlee, O.S.A., Provincial-Emeritus and former Pastor of St. Thomas of Villanova, will deliver the homily. There will be a small reception in the Villanovan Room of the Connelly Center after the Mass.

Shelter

A new shelter for homeless men will be opening soon at the Old Reform Church, 4th and Race Sts., Philadelphia. Villanova University has been asked if they would participate in providing volunteer coverage of the shelter on Friday nights, 10 p.m. to 8 a.m. These new shelters cannot exist without the help of volunteers, seven days a week. So, if you are male staff, student or faculty member of Villanova and would like to participate once or twice in this program next semester, please come to an information meeting on Dec. 12 at 6 p.m. in Campus Ministry.

Gifts of Music

Over the years the music played at University liturgies has been recorded and albums made. These albums are available at the Campus Ministry office. They make great Christmas gifts.

Sorority Rush

Sorority rush registration continues but is quickly coming to an end. Register in the Student Activities Office in 214 Dougherty Hall. Registration ends on Jan. 17, 1984. Don't miss your chance to get involved and BE UNIQUE . . . GO GREEK!

Secret Santa

If you don't have money to buy lots of Christmas gifts, you can still show someone they're special. Send them a Secret Santa package filled with Christmas surprises for only $1. Sign up at the North Lounge Dec. 9-17 or the Connelly Center Dec. 12-14, or see your favorite woman swimmer.

Villanova Night

Attention Long Islanders: Villanova Night at Rumrunner's is on Jan. 6! Be there!

Spring Semester Trips

As you know, the Graduate School office and the Graduate Students Council have for several years sponsored trips during the Mid-term break during the Spring Semester. Some of the most successful have been to Bermuda, Hawaii and Cancun.

This year we have three choices:

(1) BERMUDA — Monday, March 5 to Friday, March 9, $449 + $40 Tax and Services

(2) CANCUN — Saturday, March 3 to Saturday, March 10, $539 + 15% Tax and Services

(3) IXTAPA — Monday, March 5 to Monday, March 12, $519 + 15% Tax and Services

The cost includes round-trip airfare from Philadelphia International Airport, transfers, baggage handling and gratuities, and accommodations. The Bermuda price also includes full breakfast, tea and dinner each day and all gratuities to hotel personnel, including the dining room.

If interested please get in touch with the Graduate Office (Extension 7090). There is a deadline of Dec. 16 for a $100 deposit.

Bon Voyage

Leisure Courses

The search is on! We want those of you who have any hobby, skill or talent to share it with others. Teach a mini-course this spring. Applications are available in the Union Office, and the deadline for the return of these applications is Dec. 20. If interested, contact Diane O'Brien in the Union Office at 645-7280.

Music Contest

Enter your original music in a national contest! If you've got what it takes, your material might be included on a record to be released nationally. For info call Marianne at the WKVU Studios, 645-7200.

Theatre Meeting

An important meeting for undergraduate theatre majors and minors and others interested in theatre will be held at 4 p.m. on Dec. 12 in Vasey Theatre.

Decorating Contest

The R.S.A. is sponsoring their annual Christmas decorating contest this weekend. Judging will take place on Dec. 11 beginning at 7 p.m. Floor units who wish to enter must do so by Dec. 8 with their House Council President.

Prizes will be awarded in the following categories: Best Doors — 1st, 2nd, 3rd places; Best Hallway/Public Area; Best Theme Concept; Best Overall Residence Hall.

Good luck to everyone!

One - Act Festival

Villanova Theatre is presenting a one-act festival in the spring semester. We are looking for original scripts to be submitted to Vasey 108 by January 17, 1984.

Scholarship

The National Space Club will award a $3,500 scholarship for the academic year 1984-85. The scholarship is in memory of Dr. Robert H. Goddard, America's rocket pioneer. The award is given to stimulate the interest of talented students in the opportunity to advance scientific knowledge through space research and exploration. The 1984 Award Winner will be introduced to the nation's leaders in science, government and industry at the Goddard Memorial Dinner to be held on March 16, 1984. For further information, please contact the Financial Aid Office at 645-4010.

Villanova Ski Club

The Villanova Ski Club is offering a week of skiing and partying Jan. 8-13 at Sugarbush, Vt. The price of the trip is $245 and includes transportation, lift tickets, and mountainside condominium lodging. Don't miss out. Sign up in the Connelly Center Ticket Office or stop by B-332 (Prof. Klinger).

Midnight Mass

The Villanova University Midnight Mass will be held at St. Mary's at 9 p.m. on Dec. 24.

Study Break

The R.S.A. will be sponsoring coffee and donuts during final exams on the following dates:

Wednesday, Dec. 14
Thursday, Dec. 15
Friday, Dec. 16
Sunday, Dec. 18
Monday, Dec. 19

This will be held in the Day Hop from 9 p.m.-midnight on the dates listed. Stop by for a cup of coffee and relax for a while!

Class Correction

The following is a correction of misprints in the Spring Preregistration Master Schedule (Page 20). The Modern Greek Courses to be offered this spring at Villanova University are:

141-1012-90, Modern Greek II
T R, 6-7:15 PM Beginning Level

141-2251-90m Reading in Authors II
T R, 4:30-5:45 PM Inter. Level

Those who have had Modern Greek in the past, or others who have been exposed to the Greek Language, are strongly encouraged to join these courses with the instructor's permission. For further information contact Dr. N. Henderson at 885-5971.

Bulimia/Anorexia

Counseling is available on campus for students suffering from bulimia or anorexia. If your eating is out of control, if you are struck in the binge-purge cycle, or if you or someone close to you is on an "endless" diet, even after becoming very thin, you might benefit from talking to a counselor. The University Counseling Center provides free, confidential counseling on campus. We are sensitive to the dilemmas of being anorexic/bulimic while being a student. For an appointment, stop by Room 106 Corr Hall, or phone Ext. 4050.

Alcohol could only be brought into the room; it could not be taken out. Another aisle was cordoned off for people to come and go from the party once they had been admitted, but no alcohol could pass through here.

According to Paul Ignas, there were ten Union members handling each shift and twenty to thirty Union people in the room, as well as twenty University employees.

It had been announced that a Villanova University student ID was required for admittance.

"I don't anticipate any problems with people trying to get in who are not from this school," he said.

The semi-formal was intended for underclassmen. It was apparent that a large percentage of the people entering the party were going to be underage. "I am personally liable, not just because I'm running it, but a letter was given to everyone when they bought a ticket, and the letter had my name signed on it, telling everyone how much wine they were allowed to bring."

Belmont stated that the criteria of admission had to be attendance at Villanova because of the Union's emphasis on providing a place for students to socialize on campus. "When you run an event of this type and you do it BYOW, just carding for Villanova ID, you assume that if anybody has got wine, they got that wine because they're twenty-one," Ignas said.

There were no violent incidents at the door, and little friction. "One guy was a little drunk when he got here," said one staffer, "but he didn't have anything with him."

"I was surprised by how many people brought alcohol," said one person working at the door who estimated that ninety-five per cent of those in attendance brought [illegible] Union estimates were lower.

Dr. Richard Neville

One person in attendance commented that he would have come even if no alcohol had been permitted, "but not with as much enthusiasm. You know people are going to come here, because there is alcohol."

"It's a well-organized event," Patrick Leahy, student body president, said after visiting the semi-formal.

Leahy said that another alternative would be parties where participants with proof of age can drink and those without are admitted but cannot drink. "I was at the last Austin Hall party at the Day Hop. It was a success in my eyes as well as the eyes of Father Stack and Dr. Neville."

Such parties would be the perfect solution, Leahy said, "if the students who aren't twenty-one won't drink."

Law Admissions Tips

By SARAH BELSON

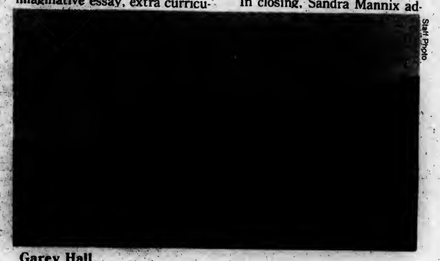
Sandra Mannix, director of admissions at Villanova Law School, spoke before the Pre-Law Society on Dec. 1 in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall. Rather than giving a prepared lecture, Mannix spent the hour-long session answering students' questions about law school admissions.

"The first thing any law school [admissions council] looks at are the numbers: The LSAT and GPA," Mannix said of the admissions process. She added that at every law school a certain percentage of acceptances are based on grades and test scores, and almost every applicant with an LSAT score of 46 and a GPA of 4.0 will be accepted. Villanova Law School admits 48 percent of each class strictly on "numbers."

While Villanova receives approximately 2200 applications for each freshman class of 220 students, the admissions council, according to Mannix, realizes that nine-tenths of those applicants are probably capable of becoming successful lawyers. Hence, the Law School must choose students who will give variety and diversity to the class as a whole.

"We love Villanova undergraduates. We accept more students from Villanova than from any other school," said Mannix.

"After the numbers factor," said Mannix, "the single most important factor has got to be your personal statement." Admissions counselors look for an intelligent, imaginative essay, extra curricular activities which developed specific skills, or any work experience that may have allowed the applicant to apply related skills or that helped the student pay for his undergraduate education.



Garey Hall

Some applicants who are not immediately accepted into Villanova Law School are put on a waiting list. Those applicants are then ranked from most to least qualified and eventually between 75 and 90 people listed are accepted.

In closing, Sandra Mannix advised prospective law school students to major in philosophy as undergraduates. "It makes you think, makes you write and makes you read."

AdHoc Committee Goals Outlined

By DIANA K. SUGG

The Student Government ad hoc Committee to Restore Social Life is currently working on ways to improve campus social life.

They are concentrating on four areas: alcohol and visitation policies, community relations, and the restoration of football.

Recently formed and officially sanctioned by the Student Government, the committee consists of ten members, including Coordinator Mark Rupprecht and Chairman Patrick Leahy.

Rupprecht stated that the committee was not formed to "make demands," but to "facilitate some kind of change."

In the area of the alcohol policy, changes have been directed towards organizing on-campus weekend activities, such as the Underclassman Holiday Semi-Formal held last Friday night. Rupprecht described the dance as the "foundation" on which other activities can build, if it is successful.

Another major issue which the committee is addressing is the visitation policy. Although no official proposals have been developed yet, there are several under consideration.

"The Residence Life staff is in favor of receiving some positive proposals," commented Rupprecht. He stressed that "we don't want to work against them, but work with them."

This attitude of "cooperation and communication" carries over into the area of community relations. The committee met with Assistant District Attorney Arthur Shuman this past Wednesday to discuss, among other things, the way the surrounding community views Villanova, and any steps the school can take to clear up problems. Rupprecht suggested that getting the community on campus more would help. He said that reserving rooms in the Connelly Center and attending some campus activities would give them the opportunity to know Villanova better.

The last major area of concern is the football issue. The committee's main goal here is to keep the question visible, so that students know what is going on and can then decide for themselves whether they want it back.

Rupprecht emphasized that "the students must be heard," and that the committee is willing to address any issue which is a social concern to Villanova's students. Towards this end, a survey will be taken allowing a number of students to express their opinions and ideas on this issue.

The students will be selected by a computer as a good representation of the school's population, based on age, sex and other factors. The results of this survey will be a great help in "just giving a direction" to the committee's efforts by showing exactly what the students want, Rupprecht said.

The members of the committee were appointed by Rupprecht and Leahy. Each chose four students — one from each class. They tried to include students with a wide range of ideas to attain a fair representation of the student body.

The Football Issue: A Synopsis

By JOSEPH MARUSAK

Villanova's Board of Trustees will determine the fate of football at the University when it gathers for its final meeting of the year on Dec. 13.

Since the dropping of the program on April 14, 1981, various groups have lobbied back and forth either for its reinstatement or continued absence. The following is a chronological summary of significant dates and happenings in the football debate:

May 7, 1981. The alumni's Committee to Restore Football raises over $100,000 at a gathering at the Covered Wagon Inn.

Alumni Association president-elect Doug Murray says in a letter at the time, "It is the opinion of many alumni and friends of Villanova that this [the dropping of football] is an ill-advised and intemperate decision . . . Perhaps rather than questioning the value of intercollegiate football we should question the ability and management skills that find it necessary to start dismembering our university."

July 14, 1981. By a 20-1 vote, the Board reaffirms its earlier decision to drop the football program. Father President John Driscoll says after the meeting, "I do not see any possibility for a reversal of opinion — at least not in the foreseable future. The action has been taken and the issue is closed."

December 1, 1981. At the request of the Committee to Restore Football, Bob Hope entertains in front of a crowd of 2,000 at Philadelphia's Academy of Music. "I'm available," Hope sings in his opening number. "Anytime you need my talents, I'll be there . . . That's why I'm here at Villanova."

Murray indicates that the benefit is expected to net nearly $30,000. "We want to demonstrate that we can raise money every year. We will continue doing it," he tells reporters.

April 15, 1982. Citing six reasons for its decision, among them the volatile football issue, Villanova's General Alumni Association calls for Driscoll's resignation as university president. They announce their action at a press conference held at the Presidential Apartments on City Line Ave.

In an interview with the Villanovan the following week, Driscoll responds "no way" to the resignation call. "I've received a vote of confidence from the Board of Trustees, the Senate, the student government, and there's a clear indication of faculty support."

October 22, 1982. Paul Tufano, the student body president, announces the formation of a Student Government Committee to Reinstate Football. "The goal of the committee," he says, "is to find a program the students will support."

The Rev. Edward McCarthy, O.S.A., chairman of the Board of Trustees, responds, "The Board doesn't think it made the wrong decision to drop footbal. It will take real evidence to change that notion."

November 2, 1982. Tufano announces that 96 percent of students surveyed would support a proposed $35 student fee to help fund a football program. The results of the poll, in which 4309 students participated, are given to the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees.

However, certain faculty and administrators later question both publicly and privately the poll's validity, claiming that it is an advocacy, not an opinion sampling.

November 12, 1982. The University Senate Athletic Advisory Committee releases a 14-page study on the potential for a new football program at Villanova. The committee cites three conclusions in its report: football benefits participating students; it provides visibility for the school; and it is a rallying point for student and alumni activities.

The Senate, presented with the study, passes by 33-0-1-1, a motion to approve a resolution that says: "the University Senate respectfully recommends that the Board of Trustees conduct a comprehensive review of the entire athletic program, including consideration of participation by the University in an intercollegiate football program . . ."

December 15, 1982. The Board of Trustees agrees to review its stance on football by calling for the appointment of a Committee of the Board to define a program satisfying the following criteria: financial sustainability; consistency with the University's academic goals and standards; and attractiveness to the various segments of the school's constituencies.

The Board's decision is in response to the Senate motion, the student body poll and the various efforts of the alumni's Committee to Restore Football. The Board's committee has one year to report its findings.

March 17, 1983. The Board's committee issues its findings. It concludes that its proposal "successfully addresses all of the criteria set forth by the Board of Trustees [on Dec. 15, 1982]."

April 22, 1983. Villanova's chapter of the American Association of University Professors conducts a poll which indicates that approximately one-third of the professors favor Division I-AA football and another third, Division III football. In all, 65 percent favor its return on some level.

July 8, 1983. The Rev. Lawrence Gallen, O.S.A., vice president for academic affairs, releases the "Administration's Response to I-AA Football Proposal" to chairpersons and directors. The report is intended to counter the findings of the Board's Special Committee on Football.

Gallen writes, "We fail to see anything convincing in the I-AA proposal that should make the Board reconsider its decision to drop football."

October 15, 1983. Dominic Toscani, a longtime fan of Villanova football, sponsors a "Villanova Day" at the Temple-East Carolina game at Franklin Field. "All we want is for President Driscoll to know we care," he says.

December 5, 1983. In an interview with the Villanovan Gallen says, "We favor bringing the football program back at the Division III level, but only after the bonds (issued for University improvements) are paid off."

A Second Chance for Football?

Thirty-one months have suddenly turned into four days.

Next Tuesday, the Board of Trustees will finally resolve what has turned out to be one of the most heated issues on campus in recent years — football. Since the Board's original decision to drop the program, on April 14, 1981, countless arguments have surfaced among myriad groups either in favor of or opposed to the reinstatement of the sport at the University.

Although various factions have had a say in the matter, no one group has been more prominent than the Alumni. They began their reinstatement efforts back on May 7, 1981, when their Committee to Reinstate Football raised over $100,000 at a gathering at the Covered Wagon Inn. They brought in Bob Hope later that year, and, in April 1982, the General Alumni Association called for the resignation of the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., as president of the University; football was one of six reasons contributing to the decision.

Yet, if there were to be a turning point in the football debate, it would come not from the alumni but from the Board itself. On Dec. 15, 1982, it agreed to review its position on intercollegiate football and appointed a committee of the Board to define a football program based on three criteria: financial sustainability; consistency with the University's academic goals and standards; and attractiveness to the various segments of the University's constituencies.

By March 1983 that Board committee had come up with results that seemingly met the criteria of the Board.

Then along came the Rev. Lawrence Gallen, O.S.A., Villanova's vice president for academic affairs. In the "Administration's Response to I-AA Football Proposal," which he authored, Gallen attempted to counter the Committee's findings with some facts and figures of his own. His report wasn't made public until the Villanovan caught hold of it and reported its details in the Sept. 30, 1983, issue.

That was good timing for the Gallen camp. This semester, student participation in the issue has reached its nadir, and that fact has not hurt Gallen's cause any.

Little has been accomplished by the Student Government on the issue since the November 1982 student poll conducted under former Student Body President Paul Tufano. In November, the current Student Government saw fit to defeat a proposal for a student rally, which could have been a final, emphatic display of student willingness to support football.

As the Alumni so clearly outlined in its approach to the football question, words can help to an extent, but only as a support to something more effective — action.

Instead, a void was created, one eventually filled by Gallen's 11-page study. This week, the final touch was added, as Gallen told the press, "We favor bringing the football program back at the Division III level, but only after the bonds are paid off." The amount that must be paid off? Over $16 million.

The final decision, however, lies not with Gallen but with the 22 members of the Board itself. Now, all we can hope for is that the Board listens to its own committee, and fully appreciates the efforts and concerns of the Alumni and majority of undergraduate students. Football deserves a second chance.

Cab Driver Says Thanks

To the Editor:

Editor's Note: "The following letter was sent to former editor-in-chief Leonard J. La Barth from Bill Mousseau, a Philadelphia taxicab driver who recently was cheated out of a fare by four Villanova students."

Dear Mr. La Barth,

Since my last writing, response to your superior editorial, from my cab association and others, has been astounding. Our career drivers were totally impressed with your in-depth interest and action taken concerning the matter.

Please let it be known that Villanova people will not be blackballed because of this matter. It happens at all classes or levels or whatever you call it. We just appreciate your interest and we need more copies of that issue. Like I say, this request is not intended to jeopardize Nova people at all; just send five to ten copies of that issue. We enjoy reading it.

Note: Rev. J. Driscoll was contacted by official note by Silver Top Cab President, as you were. You responded — he did not bother to return a message at all. It must be too small a matter for him. It wasn't for you and we appreciate that. Thanks.

Bill Mousseau

Women's Sports

To the Editor:

I am very glad that you listened so effectively to the plaintiff pleas of the Women's Volleyball Team, which finished its season only to find itself unmentioned in the weekly issue of the Villanovan. With the debut of the 1983-84 basketball season, you admirably featured equally both the men's and the women's basketball squads.

I sincerely hope that such acti-

Behind the Scenes at Semi-Formal

To the Editor:

I am currently serving as the Social Functions Coordinator of the Villanova Union. The Social Functions Committee ran the Holiday Semi-Formal last Friday night in the Villanova Room, and I would like to thank some people and express my thoughts on Friday evening.

The committee started working on this program in October under the supervision of Karen Magosin, the chairperson for this particular event. She primarily wanted to run a Freshman Semi-Formal for an opportunity for her class within the current alcohol policy.

At this time, we were aware of the Dean's Advisory Board's actions and forthcoming proposal and were encouraged by Tom Belmont, Union President, to approach Dr. Neville about a B.Y.O.B. policy with wine only, to add to the desired atmosphere.

During the following week, the student protests occurred. Often speaking with Dr. Neville, it was decided that we should enter a formal proposal and open this event to all underclassmen (seniors were not included because this was the same night as the 150 days party). This was a hard decision for us because we were changing the basic reason for this event; to give the freshmen a channel to socially gather as a class.

We were faced with deciding between a dry freshman dance, and a wet underclassman one. As is evident, we decided, if permitted, that we would try to provide the most students possible with a B.Y.O.B.-type event. Dr. Neville decided to use this as a trial run, so we proceeded with certain restrictions.

Those restrictions were: no publicity could mention B.Y.O.B., and it could not be on the tickets either. A letter was also to be included with the tickets explaining the alcohol policy of one liter per couple, and it would have to mention either myself or the Union as responsible. At a later date, after much discussion again with Dr. Neville, we were able to raise the limit to one liter per person or eight ounces per hour.

When tickets went on sale Monday, the initial sales were slow but promising. By Thursday night, 120 tickets were purchased and the Union was optimistic about breaking 200 by Friday at the door. We needed 150 sales in order to stay within our budgeted loss figure for this program. On Thursday night, Karen addressed the Campus Council of RSA as a one last-ditch publicity effort.

I left campus 11 a.m. Friday and returned at 1:30 p.m. to discover we had sold out the original 300 tickets we had printed, and had just placed 100 more tickets on sale for an anticipated attendance of 400 plus. Our biggest fear at this time was that the semi-formal, being sold out, would turn into another "Days Party," with people talking their way in and faking tickets.

After a frantic afternoon of shopping for supplies, decorating the Villanova Room, and getting dressed ourselves, we prepared for the onslaught of 400 students. Onslaught is putting it mildly. The program started at 9 p.m., and people were already lining up at the door. It took a staff of 10 students working feverishly, but politely and formally, until 11:30 to get everyone inside to the dancing, hors-d'oeuvres, light show and their wine.

I would like to point out one interesting fact: only 50 percent of those in attendance brought wine, and only about 20 people tried to bring in beer or hard liquor. With all the noise lately about Villanova's alcohol policy, half of the students didn't even bring alcohol to a program where it was permitted.

The whole evening was a success with only minor problems, which we hope to alleviate in the future. I would like to thank the Villanovan for mentioning this in your editorial on Friday. My thanks also to all the coat checkers, hostesses, security people, bartenders, and the maitre d', along with the Connelly Center and its extremely helpful staff for giving this harried coordinator a chance to provide the responsible students of Villanova with a night to remember.

Paul J. Ignas, Jr.

on your part is a harbinger of similarly good things to come. Women's sports should continue to receive equal coverage in the Villanovan. The women athletes may not draw the crowds, nor be rooted on by cheerleaders and pep band, but they certainly train and work as hard as the men athletes. They rejoice at their victories and agonize at their defeats.

Our women athletes are a credit to Villanova; they must not go unheralded! Thank you, Villanovan, for a job of recognition well begun. Be sure to follow up your creditable start.

Corr's Rudeness

To the Editor:

The Christmas tree lighting ceremony has become a tradition here at Villanova. It is an event enjoyed by students and faculty alike. It is a time to gather with friends, to lift the spirits of all present, and to remember those a little (or a lot) less fortunate than ourselves.

It is a shame that people who are "mature" college students can not respect the feelings of others. What we are referring to is the fact that some members of Corr Hall felt that blasting their music out their windows during the ceremony was appropriate. It was an uncalled-for act of rudeness, and was especially inconsiderate of the Villanova Singers and the Glee Club.

We hope the members of Corr Hall will recognize their poor manners and refrain from such actions in the future.

Annoyed Students

The Villanovan will print "Letters to the Editor" received prior to the deadline, Tuesday at 5 p.m. All letters must be signed, although the editor will withhold a name upon request. Because of limited space, all letters may be printed.

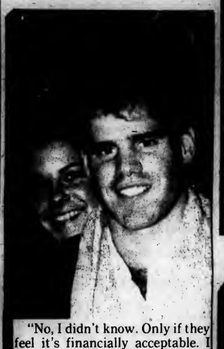
On Campus

This week the Villanovan asked students: Are you aware that the Board of Trustees will decide the football issue on December 13? Do you think they will reinstate football? How do you feel they should vote?

By LAUREN ROACHE and ALESIA DUFFY

"Yes, I am aware. No, they have postponed their decision this long. If they have to make a decision now, they will say no. Maybe in five years or so, they'll restore football. Maybe!"

Pamela Perrin
Junior, Psychology

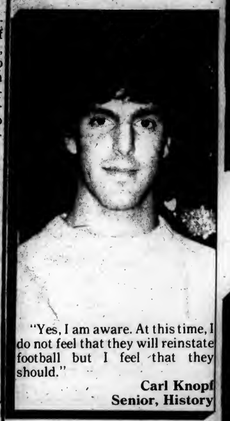


"No, I didn't know. Only if they feel it's financially acceptable. I feel they should reinstate football just for the school spirit, if anything."

Michael Failla
Senior, Communication Arts

"Yes, I am aware. I do not think that they will restore football because the school can't afford it financially. I would like to see football back, but as always, the answer is based on the bottom figure."

Lisa Narcisi
Sophomore, Accounting



"Yes, I am aware. At this time, I do not feel that they will reinstate football but I feel that they should."

Carl Knopf
Senior, History

"No, I wasn't aware. I don't know if they will, but they should reinstate football or we will all have to transfer out. Football and alcohol are not much to ask for."

John Galligan
Sophomore, Liberal Arts

"Yes, I am aware. I'm not sure if they will or not, but I think they should."

Robert Held
Freshman, Electrical Engineering

Sports Injuries Seminar

By BOB HELLER

The Villanova Sports Medicine Department presented a sports medicine seminar last Thursday night. The Seminar focused on common problems of the ankle and knee and was held in Bartley Hall 110 starting at 7:30 p.m.

Speaking at the seminar were Villanova athletic trainers Daniel Unger, M.S., A.T.C., and Fran Raggazino. Also speaking was Michael J. Koury, a physical therapist from York Hospital (York, Pa.) who specializes in sports medicine.

According to Raggazino, "Letters were sent to 10 area high schools inviting their athletic staffs to attend the seminar. In addition, posters were put up on campus to invite both students and faculty."

The seminar dealt with first aid and basic anatomy of the knee and ankle as well as the prevention of and rehabilitation from injuries sustained in these regions. "Our main aim of the seminar," commented Unger, "was to try and educate both students and athletes on the risks involved in athletic competition." Discussion of the ankle's anatomy and how specific injuries occur to the ankle joint was the first topic. After some lengthy discussion, Raggazino introduced the audience to the anatomy of the knee joint and some of the injuries involving it.

Koury then proceeded to speak on the different types of therapy used to help treat the various injuries that can occur to both the ankle and knee joints. Afterwards the floor was open to questions. "The population in attendance asked intereating questions during the discussion," commented Raggazino.

Raggazino also hopes the interest in sports medicine continues as another seminar can be held in the spring. Both Unger and Raggazino were pleased with the turnout at the seminar. "I was very pleased with the amount of people attending and the outcome of the seminar as well. Hopefully we will hold another one in the spring, this time concentrating on upper body extremities," said Unger.

Liquor Law Reviewed

By GARY R. DYER

Philadelphia Assistant District Attorney Arthur Shuman spoke Wednesday night about Pennsylvania's liquor laws to the members of Student Government, the Dean's Advisory Council, The Student Government ad hoc Committee to Restore Social Life, and 17 house council presidents.

Shuman, a graduate of Villanova, had volunteered to speak to the student leaders.

"We've got an overview of the entire situation," Student Body President Patrick Leahy said, "with the laws in Pennsylvania which affect the consumption and distribution of alcohol. It was enlightening in that respect."

"He presented the particulars and then it was opened to question and answer," Leahy explained. "I didn't know the particulars of all the laws, and the penalties."

"He really wasn't addressing the facts of a BYOB proposal or something like that," Tom Belmont, president of the Villanova Union, said. "He was outlining the criminal liability for the individual, for the university, and we haven't had any time to sit down and talk with Dr. Neville and Father Stack and discuss how this would affect BYOB policy."

"I don't think the law is really clear as to how it will affect us," Belmont commented. "We have to do a little more research."

Patrick Leahy, student body president.

"We have to get together again as a group," Leahy said.

Shuman has been asked to come back to speak to the students as a whole about the laws regarding alcohol.

Car Stolen

By DAWN R. OLIVER

At 5 p.m. on Dec. 1, Mark Page walked into the main parking lot only to discover that his car was missing. The 1982 burgundy Pontiac Firebird had been parked at 10 that morning, and Page did not return to it until 5 p.m. After discovering that the car was missing, he notified security, and they took him through the lot one more time. "Before we notify the police, we have to check as best we can because many kids don't remember where they parked their cars," stated Sgt. Harrity, acting director of security. "When we do discover it's missing, we immediately notify the police; then it's out of our hands."

Radnor Township Police stated that it was clear that the car was stolen, and that, to date, there were no further details.

Page said that at first he was angry with Villanova, but afterward he realized that "Villanova has no responsibility. We take our own risks when we park in the lots."

Harrity explained that this was the first car reported stolen in a long time. Other cars were said to have been stolen, but then were discovered in the lot somewhere.

A Look Back at VU's Jim Croce

By ANDY MILLER

This year is the tenth anniversary of Jim Croce's death, one of Villanova's most famous alumni. The Philadelphia native died tragically on Sept. 20, 1973, when his plane crashed following take-off from an airport in Louisiana. He left behind a wife, a two-year-old son, and a short but brilliant career.

Croce's music reached into the very heart of America, and his songs and stories were the result of his experiences and the people that he met. A man he met while he was in the army, for example, gave him the idea for "Bad, Bad Leroy Brown."

He had the rare ability to make a concert in a huge hall or auditorium into a personal and touching affair, and his easy, "everyday" manner exuded warmth and humor.

Croce was born in Philadelphia in January 1943. At that time, in his neighborhood, the accordion was the instrument to play, and his parents had him take lessons at a very young age. By the time he was eight, he could play songs on it.

He was a good student, but to Croce the enjoyment of life was always important.

By the end of the 1950s, as a teenager, he was rebellious and a non-conformist, "a real greaser" by his own admission. A nine-to-five lifestyle did not appeal to Croce, for it looked dull and bleak. He developed into a free spirit, and would remain one the rest of his life.

Like most musicians, Croce saw music as a force, a way of communicating with people on a personal basis, and it quickly became a major factor in his life.

By the time Croce entered Villanova in the early '60s, the most popular kind of music was folk music. He was just in time for it. While he was here, he had a double major in psychology and German, and played fraternity parties for spending money. He was also a member of the glee club and a disc jockey for the radio station.

It was in his junior year that he met his future wife, Ingrid, at a talent show sponsored by a singing group at Villanova, as a benefit for handicapped children.

In the spring of that year, the government was sponsoring a musical tour of several countries in Africa and the Middle East. They were looking for young, unknown musicians. Croce won the chance to go, and the experience opened his eyes to the power and mass appeal of music.

Soon after he graduated from Villanova, he had a serious accident in which he smashed the index finger on his right hand with a sledge-hammer. This forced him to develop his own style of guitar playing, in which he succeeded brilliantly. He then served a few years in the army.

After he was discharged from the army, he took various odd jobs. He drove a truck for a while and had teaching positions at a summer camp and at a junior high school in Chester ,where he proved successful with problem kids, but unpopular with the administration.

Croce then moved to New York City, where he cut his first album with the help of a former Villanova classmate, Tommy West. The album was called "Jim and Ingrid Croce," and was a complete failure. Extremely discouraged, he was ready to give up music altogether.

But, suddenly, luck came to Croce. He was encouraged by West to cut one more album, and he tried again. This album, "You Don't Mess Around With Jim," broke into the top ten albums in the country on the popularity of two tracks, "Operator" and "You Don't Mess Around With Jim." A successful tour of Europe followed. Remarkable success had come literally overnight.

"Life and Times" was his next album. It went gold. It was carried mainly by "Bad, Bad Leroy Brown," which was his first number one hit and sold over a million copies.

His songwriting had a tremendous range. he could write fast, humorous songs such as "Leroy Brown," deep, introspective songs like "Time In A Bottle," or love ballads, such as "I'll Have To Say I Love You In A Song."

But, one night, following a concert in Louisiana, his chartered plane crashed immediately after take-off, killing everyone aboard. Four years later it was proven that the pilot had been unfit for duty.

Jim Croce on his Life and Times album.

Jim Croce died at the age of thirty, just as he was becoming extremely popular. Throughout North America and Europe. He was truly one of music's most promising newcomers.

Commercial Christmas Blues

By SUE FRENCH

The Menorah and Christmas tree in the Connelly Center aroused my suspicions; a trip to K-Mart confirmed them. "Attention K-Mart shoppers, only 15 more shopping days and 9,243 more blue-light specials 'til Christmas," a venerable voice from above warned.

I quickly selected one of the miniature artificial trees, and, carefully avoiding the desolation of the toy department, handed over my $29.99 amid a ring-a-ding-ding chorus of silver-belled cash registers. I wanted to get out of the store before the next shipment of Cabbage Patch Kids was announced.

So, this is Christmas in the '80 s, I thought, as I screwed together my spruce. The old live tree with brightly colored paper chains, popcorn strings and sticky candy canes just doesn't compare to today's aluminum timber with twinkle lights and plastic Santas. Those real trees always catch fire, so, either way you get a smelly house, if it's not black smoke, it's that permeating natural pine scent. Those new trees stay new-looking only because nobody has the urge to touch them.

A centuries old celebration has finally caught up to our standards of celebration. Christmas is no longer Christmas to America without the rituals of spending money and acquiring goods. The supreme sacrifice is now closely related to scraping together enough cash to pay both the VISA bill and next semester's tuition.

Don't misunderstand, religion is still very much a part of Christmas. On the way home from K-Mart I admired a creche (manger scene) in front of a church while stopped at a light. It's really amazing how lifelike those Chinese and Korean factories can make plastic figures, I remember thinking. What really impressed me was how well they can capture the essence of Christianity in a Nativity scene — and to think, they're Buddhists! In the old days,you had to imagine what Christmas looked like.

I'm also not implying that people today lack Christmas spirit, or that they have lost respect for Christmas. But, how many of you still believe in Santa Claus? Every self-respecting five-year-old knows that Commodore computers come from Kiddie City, not the North Pole.

You want spirit? Watch Sullivan try to kill Sheehan in a snowball fight, or go to Kelly's — you'll see plenty of jolly and spirited people. None of that serious attitude about holidays and holiness and reverence from when you were a kid around here. Christmas 1983 is secularized.

Look how far Christmas gifts have come. Toys are no longer powered by mere carbon batteries, but by solar cells. Games are no longer manufactured in flimsy cardboard, but in alloys of plastic. The stuff that populates toy department shelves is more likely than not to talk back to the child who abuses it. Who buys footballs for their kids anymore?

If for some reason you didn't get rid of those holiday aggressions at the mall, you could do to your little sister's Cabbage Patch doll what Clark DeLeon said his wife did to his daughter's: made cole slaw.

Cabbage Patch dolls are to the Christmas of '83 what Rudolph was the Christmas of '63: a symbol of the times. This vegetarian tale of violence and capitalistic intent is the sort of chiller that keeps our Christmases cold. Unfamiliar with the Cabbage Patch story? Let me recount it:

T'was the month before Christmas and all through the store, ev'ry creature was scurrying and clamouring for more.

The dolls were crammed on the shelves without care, in knowledge that shoppers would soon be there.

Modern Christmas Comparisons

By PETE BERKERY

Silent night, holy night,

The 1800 U.S. Marines now stationed in Beirut must be hoping that their nights will be silent; that they won't be awakened by the blasts of bombs and the screams of the dying. Sleep can't come easy when 2000 religious fanatics have vowed to die rather than see U.S. troops in Lebanon. The role of a peacekeeper is never easy; keeping peace with a gun is next to impossible. It's almost like being a drug counselor addicted to heroin. Guns were made to kill, they serve no other function.

All is calm, all is bright,

The future cannot be too bright for the families of the 239 servicemen killed in Beirut and the 18 soldiers killed in Grenada. This Christmas will be one they'll never forget as husbands and fathers are fondly remembered and sorely missed. For some, the pain will seem unbearable; others will console themselves in the thought that their men died for their country. This is certainly not a matter to be trifled with; it takes great courage and dedication to die for one's country. But wouldn't it be better to live for one's country?

Round yon virgin, mother and child,

A rather interesting anti-nuclear demonstration took place at the Greenham Common airbase in Great Britain over the past two years. A group of about 100 females, most of them mothers, set up camp day and night to protest the deployment of U.S. cruise missiles in Europe. It's a tough job to try and bring up children in a nuclear world. Recently, they watched helplessly with tears in their eyes as the first cruise mis-

Holy infant so tender and mild,

In Honduras this month, the U.S. began its largest military maneuvers since the Vietnam War. Big Pine Two, as the operation is called, was planned months in advance and includes a marine amphibious landing force, infantry units, Army Special Forces, combat engineers, medics and a communication specialist. The number of combat troops now present exceeds 5000.

Sleep in heavenly peace,

Stanford biologist Paul Ehrlich and Cornell astronomer Carl Sagan recently held a conference on the long-term, worldwide biological consequences of nuclear war. They picked as their scenario a 5000 megaton explosion that they projected would block out 90 percent of the sun's light, plunging the earth's temperature to 13 below zero. Nothing would grow, those humans who survived the blast and radiation would either freeze or starve to death. The explosive power of all strategic nuclear warheads possessed by the U.S. and the Soviet Union is thought to total 12,000 megatons, more than twice that detonated in the Sagan-Ehrlich scenario.

Sleep in heavenly peace.

The true message of Christmas is a message of peace. The terribly difficult thing about peace is that it must start with the individual. We cannot possibly hope to to have peace in the world unless we are at peace with ourselves. But why bother? War has existed since the dawn of time; there is nothing we can do to change it. Yet the destructive capacity of war has been constantly increasing and we now face the very real possibility of destroying ourselves. We have two choices: either peace or perish. "All we are saying is give peace a chance."

— Procrastination Haunts Unwary —

By JAMIE KITT

Let's see. Procivity . . . procon-sul? . . . aha! Here it is, procrastination. My trusty American Heritage Dictionary claims that procrastination is derived from the Latin verb procrastinare, meaning, "to put forward until the next day." That definition sounds so harmless! It even sounds noble! One can picture a Roman emperor "putting forward" a great feast until the war hero arrives. Indeed, to procrastinate would be honorable. But we know better.

Procrastination is to be feared. It is a dreadful monster that mankind vows to overcome, but to which its inevitably succumbs. Procrastination sneaks up so stealthily that the victim never realizes he has been snared until it's too late.

Naively he thinks, "My English paper isn't due until Tuesday. That's a whole week away!" The monster has sunk in his claws and cannot be shaken off. Suddenly, anything is more fun than creating an essay: watering the plants, writing a letter to Grandma, rereading letters from Grandma, picking lint off sweaters.

Finally, Monday night the dupe miraculously escapes his captor, but still quakes: he has no topic! Bewildered, he wonders where, oh where, he spent the past week, as he hands in the essay with a word spelled "Mi¼i??i½i." He swears furiously never to let procrastination win again. He doesn't realize the battle is hopeless. Procrastination is stronger than we are, I myself struggle, but still have four hundred pages of history to read, five loads of laundry to wash, and yesterday's Russian assignment to prepare. Naturally, I put it all off because I want ice cream right this minute.

Perhaps the American Heritage Dictionary should update its definition. The entry could read, "Procrastination. An unseen force that takes over one's body and renders him temporarily insane, thus causing him to put off all important matters until the very last minute. It causes nothing but poor grades, ulcers, and embarrassment." Actually there is one person who does benefit from procrastination, the grandmother who receives all the letters!

Committee Helps Homeless

The Villanova Committee for the Philadelphia Homeless is a relatively new organization that was formed last year by a group of concerned students and staff members of Villanova. The group meets to discuss what can be done to help the estimated 8,000 people who live on the streets of Philadelphia.

This year, the committee is divided into three subcommittees: the Soup Kitchen-Hospice Committee, in which volunteer work is done in Philadelphia soup kitchens and hospices, the Street Committee, where students go directly to the streets to distribute food and clothing, and the On-Campus Committee, which attempts to raise the awareness of the Villanova community and supply the other committees with the necessary supplies and funds.

For this year's clothing drive, there was a monetary prize for the hall that collected the most. The winner was Simpson Hall, with St. Rita's coming in second. The committee would like to thank all those who contributed to the drive.

... MERRY CHRISTMAS TO ALL,

JOHN WALSH

... AND TO ALL A GOOD NIGHT!

A Return to the True Christmas Spirit

By CINDY CALLA

The season once again approaches with traditional thoughts of Christmas brought to mind as shoppers scurry around laden with packages on streets bedecked with tinsel and fake angels, as they hum a yuletide tune. Since my childhood, I remember the same capitalistic cycle continuing each year as Bamberger's, Wanamaker's and Sears advertise their wares as if they were liquidating their entire stock.

The Christmas season is when sales profits reach their height for the entire year, since American shoppers are caught up in the commercialism of Christmas, rather than remembering the true religious implications of the season. Greed, depression and arguments are prevalent as a result of this adulteration of Christmas and the obligation to purchase a tangible show of love.

Christmas is a heartache instead of a joyous time to adults because they are conditioned to shop for gifts; whereas children believe that their heart's desire is as close as Santa Claus' lap.

Traditionally, generations of people have celebrated the birth of Christ in the same manner by lavishing gifts on each other.

Ideally, to stop the commercialism of Christmas, the date must be removed from the calendar as a holiday, along with the halt of gift giving, tree erecting, decorations, and Christmas vacation. In order to find purpose in celebrating the nativity of Christ, it's necessary to do away with worldly distractions and to emphasize Christ's importance to mankind.

My memories of Christmas are similar to those of Marya Mannes as she expresses them in her writing, "Xmas." Christmas has always been thought of as a time of giving and receiving presents, with an emphasis on receiving. The urge to buy gifts for family and friends comes along with the cold weather of October. This feeling is justified as stores display gaudily dressed window fronts to promote their Christmas sales and the impulse of shoppers.

Oftentimes gifts are bought out of obligation rather than from a willing heart, stemming from the traditionalism of the season when it is appropriate to give a gift to a loved one. Throngs of people flock to shopping malls up until the day before Christmas to search for endless hours for the ideal gift for that special someone.

Finally, after finding the right size and color, the only fate that awaits them is a long line to the cash register, and to confront a grouchy cashier.

Sadly enough, most people have been caught up in the materialism of Christmas which has replaced the real intention of the holiday as a commemoration of Christ's birth.

The Calla family moves away from the traditional celebration of Christmas by trying to emphasize the meaning of Christ and his birth, instead of the materialism of the holiday. Our home differs from other houses on the street because it's never adorned with flashy lights or Santa and his sleigh, and yet the inside is bubbling with the true spirit of Christmas.

My siblings and I were raised to believe in Christ's birth instead of in Santa Claus, who supposedly brought toys to good children. Gift giving is at a minimum since each member of the family receives one or two thoughtful items rather than ten or twelve meaningless tokens.

Oftentimes gifts are given on birthdays or when the need arises, instead of the annually dubbed twenty-fifth of December. The Christmas tree is small so as not to be the center of attention, decorated with homemade ornaments and strings of popcorn. The combined energy of the family is channeled into giving to relatives, friends and needy people the greatest gift of all: the good news of the birth of Jesus Christ.

It isn't unusual to see a person without their own family, or someone who has just lost a job, sharing our Christmas dinner. Hospitality and openness of home help to spread the hot wassail, cookies and fresh baked coffee cakes among the guests.

The reasoning behind our difference in celebrating Christ's nativity is that biblically there is no basis for the celebration of Christmas as such. The Christmas festival, being a recent institution that solemnizes the incarnation of the Son of God, was not practiced until the year 380 A.D.

Formerly, in the early church, the feast of Epiphany commemorated the arrival of Jesus. Christians transformed heathen practices into an alternative called Christmas (literally Christ Mass), although no sacred writing declares it as a day of feasting, such as that of Pentecost, Passover, and Christ's resurrection. Since there is no appointed date known as Christ's birthday, to celebrate it on December 25 is rather arbitrary.

Therefore, it is important to proclaim the gift of the Son of God to all men, especially during the holiday season when hearts and minds are most aware of such inspiration. A sound mind that is focused on Jesus Christ is an effective end to the commercialism of Christmas.

Some Interesting Christmas Gifts

By NICK ANASTASIO

Christmas is only sixteen days away. Final exams are only five days away. So what kind of gifts do college students buy for their loved ones? Here is a list of fairly inexpensive gift ideas that are both interesting and easy to get. Best of all, they are less likely to be returned or exchanged by the recipient. Come to think of it, they are more fun than a barrel of Cabbage Patch Dolls.

Tickets to Concerts

Hot Tuna (Brandywine Club, Dec. 27, $13.50/$11.50) Not too long ago this recently reunited quartet put on a subpar show at the Spectum. Jorma Kaukonen is really all there is to see. For Hot Tuna, psychedelic-1960s, and Jefferson Airplane fans.

Stevie Ray Vaughn (Tower Theatre, Dec. 29, $11.50/$9.50) - One of the bright, new guitarists, Vaughn came to national attention with his work on David Bowie's "Let's Dance" album. His solo work is different, though, and is just as good (if not better).

Robert Hazard (Ripley's Music Hall, Dec. 31, $13.50) - There are better ways to spend New Year's Eve than watching a drunken egomaniac sputter on stage. Yet Hazard fans will want to get a preview of his new album, due to be released in early January.

Blue Oyster Cult (The Spectrum, Jan. 7, $10.50/$8.50) - This is being billed as a "dance concert." Good luck. Blue Oyster Cult is one of the better heavy metal bands, but their songs are not dance material. Sit back and enjoy the show, for they do put on a good one.

Ozzie Osbourne (The Spectrum, Jan. 16, $11.50/$9.50) - Heavy metal-heads only. Osbourne represents semi-intelligent heavy metal, but the two opening bands, Motley Crue and Wasted, are typical mindless, heavy metal bands.

Tickets to the Theatre

"Suffragette City, 1984" (Grendel's Lair) - Scheduled to run only until December 24, but look for an extension. This play combines David Bowie's "Suffragette City," "1984," "Panic in Detroit," and other songs with George Orwell's classic novel, 1984.

Tickets to the 76ers and Flyers

76ers - Why not? For most fans, watching a professional sporting event is a form of entertainment. Any basketball buff will want to see the 76ers take on the Boston Celtics at the Spectrum on January 13. The 76ers-Celtics rivalry is considered the greatest and most intense in all sports.

Flyers - Ditto the bit about entertainment. The New York Islanders come to town (actually, the Spectrum) on January 21.

Video

Games: For Intellivision, Colecovision and both the Atari 2600 and 5200 systems, the best games out now are Joust and Q-Bert. If inspection is required, both games are in the Connelly Center Game Room.

VCRs and Disc Players: Suddenly, theatrical movies are available for home viewing within a few months. As a result, many films from the summer are available (for example, "Flashdance"). What was your loved one's favorite movie this past summer? Of all time? Both are probably available.

Albums

In addition to the albums reviewed in this issue, and the ones reiewed last issue (Bob Dylan's "Infidels," Yes's "90125," Simon Townshend's "Sweet Sound"), here are some new releases that might make good gifts:

Ozzie Osbourne, "Bark at the Moon" - If your loved one likes heavy metal, this is the album to give.

The Doors, "Alive She Cried" - Old live music that still sounds new. Jim Morrison is actually coherent.

Michael Jackson, "Thriller" Now that "Thriller" is a 14 minute video, the few people who do not have this album will want it now.

Culture Club, "Colour by Number" - Boy and the boys have followed up "Kissing to be Clever" with an even better album.

Billy Joel tickets would be a great Christmas present, but both concerts are almost sold out.

Short "Electric Universe"

By JAMES H. DeLORENZO

Earth, Wind and Fire, one of the foremost pioneers in music today, has just released its second album in less than a year, "Electric Universe."

The first single off the album, "Magnetic," clues the listener in to what the rest of the album is like. It is all electric — no horns, no piano, no steel drum, like their previous album, "Powerlight."

Instead Maurice White's lead vocals invite us to "dance in the static," while an electric bass guitar rumbles on. The song "Magnetic" is reminiscent of the Tubes. Perhaps White and Tubes' lead singer Fee Waybill shared ideas during their recent collaboration on the single "Tip of my Tongue."

Anyway, the first side of the album is packed with four solid songs. "Touch" is a good dance tune, with a slight hint of reggae influence.

The snappy, upbeat "Moonwalk" tells us that love is still the most important element of the electric universe. White sings of "a million stars in the sky but only one star shines in my eyes, you."

"Could it be Right" is one of the two love songs on the album. This cut, as in the other three on side one, love is equated with light and energy. White claims that his lover "shines her light on him," and in "Magnetic" he describes a "strange kind of light," which becomes a "tender light" in "Could it be Right."

Only two tracks on side two can be considered exceptional; the first, "Spirit of a New World," features EWF's vision of "a new world we create," where "we're in overdrive" in "the dance of life." Synthesizers build to a crescendo in what could be considered a hymn to man's technology.

The last cut on the album, Electric Nation," is a snappy guitar song, but with different, anthem-like lyrics. This is the "music of a new breed that's gonna bring the world to life." It is a world where science has blended with emotion, signaling the start of "an electric celebration."

White says in the liner notes that "Hopefully, in our design to acknowledge technology, we won't forget to live in peace. As we experience evolution, science will meet emotion and bring light to our planet."

It's hard to say how commercially successful an album like this can be. It isn't what the public wants from Earth, Wind and Fire, yet it appeals to the group's fans because it continues their evolution. They don't do anything twice. Each album is a different experience.

The unique aspect of this album is what makes it worth listening to. No other artists are trying anything like this, which is what makes Earth, Wind, and Fire an artistically successful group.

Merry "Christmas Story"

By BILL SANTOS

It's Christmas time again, and what better way to start the holiday season than with a clean, wholesome Christmas movie?" A Christmas Story" is just that film. A 1940 Chicago Christmas is portrayed as this typical American family prepares for their festive occasion.

The film centers around Ralphie (Peter Billingsly), a nine-year-old who is hoping for a "Red Ryder" BB gun with a compass in the stock, for Christmas. Much to his chagrin, everyone, including his mother, his father, and even a department store Santa, tells him that he is going to shoot his eye out. Little Ralphie goes the extra mile and more.

Flashes into fantasy help the audience relate to the over-active imagination of our star. Fast-motion scenes provide added comedy to this already funny film. These quick shots show a rather maniacal view of this family's normal, everyday experiences. The daily chases with the neighborhood bully, Scott Farkas with the braces and yellow eyes, and the Bumpus' hounds that only bothered the "old man," are examples of this comedic technique.

Director Bob Clark has captured the Christmas that we personally cherish, right down to the department store Santa, and the Little Orphan Annie decoder ring. The movie is chock full of the little things that make Christmas special. Even the obligatory Christmas dinner scene is done to perfection.

Actors Melinda Dillon and Darren McGavin portray a version of Mom and Pop that is as constant as Christmas day itself. Warm and loving, the two deal with life's troubles with a grain of salt and a tongue-in-check smile. The exploding furnance, among other problems, proves their worthiness to be twentieth-century parents.

Based on the Jean Shephard novel In God We Trust, All Others Pay Cash, "A Christmas Story" is a wholesome movie that captures the actual spirit of Christmas. Aside from a slightly bloody scene used to get the PG rating, the film is excellent for the whole family. The look back at this hallowed holiday takes the viewer back in time, giving the children a Christmas laugh before their happy day arrives.

"A Christmas Story" is truly "a

Pi Kapps' Victory in Fraternity Football

Fraternity Football Game

The fraternity league football season was a very competitive one this year. The season came down to the last week of playing before the league champion was decided. On the Sunday night of November sixth, Pi Kappa Phi defeated Lamda Tau Delta 6-0 to win its first fraternity league championship.

The season was extended for three teams who made the regular season intramural playoffs. DKE, PKP, and LTD all fought their way there. DKE was eliminated in the second round by the Moon Unit after beating LKD. LTD was beaten by the Stallions who played very well against them and shut them out 12-0. Pi Kapps' luck lasted a little longer. They climbed their way up to the championship by beating the Low Riders, SMF, Poisson Ratio and losing in the finals in the last minute to the Gladiators 12-7.

Overall the fraternity league turned out to be very successful. All of the teams had a fun season in spite of their winning or losing record. Some of the pre-season picks turned out and some didn't, but all teams are anxiously awaiting next year's season.

Frank Ferrari: An Inspiration

Alpha Phi Delta, one of the newest fraternities on campus, houses 38 brothers, one of which does not seem to fit into the mainstream of fraternal life. His name is Frank Ferrari and being 73 years young, he has not been discouraged from being active ever since his induction back in the early spring of 1982.

Ferrari holds a B.A. in Italian from Temple University and a B.A. in both French and History from Villanova. He is currently studying for what he says is his last degree, Honors.

Ferrari first learned of Alpha Phi Delta during an Italian Club meeting, where an announcement was made concerning the formation of a new fraternity. After attending a meeting, Ferrari was overwhelmed by the enthusiasm of the group as a whole. At first, Ferrari felt he was "an old geezer among the young ones," but later felt comfortable being a brother.

Ferrari has competed in the Big Brother-Big Sister Dance Marathon and has currently been in charge of an Alpha Phi Delta Remedial Reading Program for area children. At its conclusion Tuesday, Ferrari was very pleased with its progress throughout the semester. "All in all, I think its been a success. Each one who participated will come back next semester." Ferrari hopes to expand the program next semester.

All in all, Ferrari is a well-loved brother and friend. The members consider him as "one of the boys." As John Cavuto commented, "One can't help but like Frank. I've known him for three years now, and treat him just as I would any other friend."

Fellow brother Bill Santos also shows his affection for Ferrari. "Frank is a tribute to us all. He gives us inspiration to become better brothers and, therefore, better overall individuals."

Ferrari's youthful, energetic attitude and endless resources, never cease to help Alpha Phi Delta Fraternity progress as it should. His timeless philosophies have been an inspiration to us all. Such witticisms as "Good health and an active mind means a helluva lot," and "You only keep as young as the company you keep," will keep us young until eternity. Thanks Frank, for your never-ending optimism and support.

Thetas Initiated

Thirty Villanovan women were formally initiated into Kappa Alpha Theta, National Fraternity for Women, on the weekend of Nov. 18. These women began their nine week pledge program on Sept. 15, 1983.

Many of the Theta officials from headquarters were present for the ceremonies. Among them were Lissa Bradfor, Grand President, Carol Brehman and Lynn Davis, two of the four Grand Vice-Presidents, Sally Hughes, Alumnae District President, and Marilyn Huseby, College District President.

The weekend began with a Loyalty Service on Friday evening. Saturday afternoon the actual initiation took place, Saturday evening a Banquet was held at Valley Forge Stouffers, and Sunday a mass and reception were attended.

This weekend was extraordinarily different for the members of the Epsilon XI chapter, because they are now founding sisters. Nov. 18, 1983 is now the official founding day for Kappa Alpha Theta on the Villanova University Campus. This has to do with why so many of Theta's top officials were present. It was indeed a special moment for everyone.

IFC Elects New Executive Officers

The Inter-Fraternity Council elected the new 1984 Executive Officers last Tuesday night. The previous board consisted of Joseph Buggy, president, John McGee, vice president, Sil Lutkewitte, treasurer and Bob Gamble, secretary. Replacing them for this year will be, in order, John McGee, (DKE), Joe Brady, (TKO), Jim Hines, (DTD), and Peter Wynn, (DKE). Best of luck to the new officers.

A great portion of the meeting concerned itself with congratulating the old officers for accomplishing their set goals. Achievements include establishing an Inter-Greek council, beginning the Greek Page in the Villanovan, winning the Northeast Inter-Fraternity Council's Lumsford Award for the best IFC in the Northeast, starting two major service projects, the Easter Egg Hunt and the Halloween party, and the list goes on.

Each executive officer received parting momento's as remembrances for their efforts. Thanks to the old guys and congratulations to the new ones.

RUSH

Sorority Rush Registration Ending Soon!

Late Registration: Dec. 2 to Jan. 17 Fee: $6

Applications can be obtained & dropped off in Student Activities Office, Dougherty 214.

MANDATORY* Rush orientation meeting: Wed. Jan. 18 Villanova Room, 7:30 p.m.

See article below for more details!

Sorority Rush - registration for Rush is coming to an end soon! Late registration began Dec. 2 and will extend until Jan. 17. Registration forms can be obtained in various places, such as the Connelly Center, the registration table in front of the Dayhop and in the Students Activities Office in Dougherty 214. All forms should be returned, with the late fee of $6, to the Students Activities Office.

What is "Rush"? Rushing is the time when you and sorority members have an opportunity to become acquainted. During this time, the sororities on the campus entertain rushees at a series of social functions. After paying the registration fee and submitting the form, you will be required to attend a mandatory Rush meeting next semester on Wed., Jan. 18, at 7:30 p.m., in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center. At this event, the Villanova Panhellenic Rush System will be explained further and all questions will be answered. After you have registered and attended this meeting, the schedule will call you to visit all of our sororities.

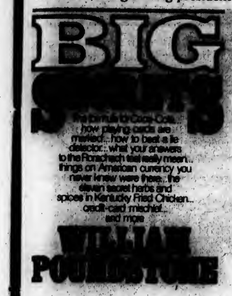
At the end of the rushing period, invitations to membership (or "bids") are extended by the sororities and are matched with your listed preference of chapters. A mutual interest results in pledging.

"Big Secrets" Revealed

By BILL SANTOS

Did you ever wonder how Coca-Cola and Pepsi differ, or what the eleven secret herbs and spices are in Kentucky Fried Chicken? Don't. Big Secrets by William Poundstone is a treasury of secrets that answers these questions along with various other issues of concern. Divided into six sections, Poundstone includes facts about food and drink, money, household products, tests, magic psychics and the media.

Facts on food prove frightening, at the least. There is sugar on Burger King french fries. "In an interview, Burger King president Donald Smith said that his chain's fries are sprayed with a sugar solution shortly before being packaged and shipped to individual outlets. The sugar carmelizes in the cooking fat, producing the golden color customers expect." The eleven secret herbs and spices in Kentucky Fried Chicken only amount to four ingredients, none of which are herbs. Flour, salt, monosodium glutamate, and black pepper are the prize-winning ingredients.



Crest toothpaste is another topic of speculation. It contains sand and rat poison. The sand is in the form of "hydrated silica," that is "certainly processed and finely ground" for human consumption. The rat poison is sodium fluoride, a chemical that "has earned something of a bad name among rat poisons because it is toxic to humans as well as to rats." Not to worry. It is in such a small amount that it can only harm you, not kill you.

If this isn't enough to make your hair stand on end, Poundstone has published secret, governmental radio frequencies. Included are Air Force One, the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA), the Drug Enforcement Administration, the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), the Secret Service, bugs, morse code letter beacons, Number (Spy) Stations and "other inexplicable radio transmissions" such as beeps, screeches, and the Russian Woodpecker. If you think our security system is in jeopardy now, wait until the Russians get their hands on these.

Poundstone also uncovers the sacred secrets of the Freemasons. A Tenth-degree Mason must "consent to have (his) body opened perpendicularly, and to be exposed for eight hours in the open air, so that the venomous flies may eat (his) entrails" if he talks. A Master Freemason would suffer a cut throat and a tongue torn out by the roots if he discloses the secrets. Poundstone found out Masonic secrets such as handshake, password, the secret word, the code, the Shriners' Recognition test, and various initiation rituals and hazing stunts through a Chicago mail-order firm. Is nothing sacred anymore?

William Poundstone

Poundstone reveals other secrets such as how to mail a letter without a stamp, how to cheat on an eye test, how to beat a lie detector, the ingredients to Big Mac's Secret Sauce, the secret behind Harry Blackstone, Jr.'s sawing-a-woman-in-two trick and secret messages on records. In answer to the Coca-Cola/Pepsi differentiation, Coke has a more orangy taste whereas Pepsi has a more lemony taste. From playing cards to perfumes, currency to credit cards, Big Secrets is "the uncensored truth about all sorts of stuff you are never supposed to know."

.38 Special Exhibits Unique "Tour de Force"

By MIKE MATHIS

"Tour de Force," the latest album by .38 Special, has received little airplay since its release in mid-November. The album content is repetitious in some spots and may get tiring after awhile.

.38 Special, a band that hails from Jacksonville, Florida, takes its musical style from the Allman Brothers Band. The members of this "unique" southern band include guitarists Don Barres and Jeff Carlisi, drummers Steve Brookins and Jack Grodin, bassist Larry Justrom, and lead vocalist Donnie Van Zant, who is the brother of the late Ronnie Van Zant of Lynyrd Skynyrd.

"Unique" is used because .38 Special utilizes characteristics not common among many of today's southern bands. Their distinctive blend of blues and rock 'n' roll features twin lead guitarists and two drummers. Few rock bands feature both.

The band's musical approach has changed drastically from their inception in 1975 as a diehard southern band, to a more altered approach at accommodating more melodic methods. Unlike many other southern bands, .38 Special writes songs about love, although one would be surprised at calling a .38 Special song a "love song." The subjects of booze and drugs are hardly an entity of this southern band.

Songs from "Tour de Force" such as "Twentieth Century Fox," "Long Distance Affair," and "Back Where You Belong" feature the distinctive characteristics of .38 Special music; the short guitar riffs and short drum beats.

"I Ought to Let Go" is perhaps the only song that strays from the melodic approach and explores a raunchier brand of music than previous songs. An Allman Brothers Charlie Daniels style song, "I Ought to Let Go" is a blend of strong guitar lines and strong backup harmonies that make it the album's prime cut. In a song relating love and despair, Van Zant contemplates whether to drop his lost love or to stay; "For thinkin' it could work out/ I oughta know better/ I oughta let go" conveys Van Zant's message well, a position in which many people have been before, and can relate to.

Another cut that breeds a bit of originality is "See Me in Your Eyes." Commencing with a mysterious guitar lead and then its eventual fade, "See Me In Your Eyes" does employ the characteristics of a typical southern rock "love" song; complete with short bass licks and strong, vibrant, transitional guitar leads. Although the rhythm section gets a bit monotonous, the song is saved by Van Zant's searing, lyrical delivery.

"Tour de Force" is repetitious. The listener knows what to expect between each song. Lyrically, the songs are poetic, adding a new dimension to a subject that has been written about many times. The music does become tiring after awhile, and this might disappoint all but the most faithful .38 Special fan. For the hard-core music fan, a listening of "Special Forces" or "Wild-Eyed Southern Boys" may be more entertaining and original.

You work hard all your life and what do you get?

Well, depending on where you work, you could get cancer. Asbestos has been proven to cause cancer. Certain toxic chemicals like formaldehyde and freon are being investigated. If you've worked with radioactive particles or even worked near them, your risk is greater.

And even if you've worked nowhere hazardous, it wouldn't hurt to get a checkup. Because the incidence of cancer after the age of 45 to 50 increases rapidly.

Women Swim To Fifst At Drexel Tourney

By RODGER VAN ALLEN

Coming off a tremendous upset at Yale, 58-55, the Villanova women's swimming team continued its winning ways by taking first place at the Drexel University Invitational held on Dec. 2 and 3.

The women competed against teams from Temple, LaSalle, Bryn Mawr, Bucknell, Rutgers, Bloomsburg, and Drexel, and emerged as one of the best teams in the area.

The meet was an unusual one for the women in that it was a sprint meet, consisting mostly of 50 and 100-yard events. "I was a little bit curious about how they were going to do in a sprint meet," commented Head Coach Chris McKee. "We had no sprint meets and no sprint training up to now."

The whole team did exceptionally well, particularly seniors Beth Metzger and Lisa McFadden. Metzger placed first in four individual events winning the 50 and 100-yard backstroke and the 50 and 100-yard butterfly. McFadden won both the 200 and 500-yard freestyle events and placed second in the 100-yard freestyle. Also, in the diving competition, Laurie Bukaty placed first in the one meter dive, defeating 18 other divers.

However, everyone helped contribute to the win. McKee commented that "we had 99 percent of the team score, which made it a total team effort."

The women appear to have made a tremendous start in their busy schedule. For third-year coach McKee, his team has done quite well. "Thus far I'm really pleased with the early progress," he stated.

The freshmen have successfully filled the gaps left by graduation and McKee commented that he was very pleased with the freshmen as they did quite well.

Icecats Drop Two On Road

By MARY AGNES MATYSZEWSKI

Last weekend, in addition to snow flurries, New England greeted the Villanova Men's Ice Hockey team with two Division III defeats. The team travelled to Boston to play Framingham State on Saturday, and Bentley College on Sunday.

In Saturday night's game the Framingham Rams blanked the Cats by a score of 10-0. The final tally, however, gave no indication of how well the team had actually performed during the 60 minutes of play.

On Sunday the Icecats encountered the Bentley Falcons. Villanova soon faced trouble as rookie goalie Geordi Borsari was slashed in the left arm and had to be taken off the ice to later receive six stitches. Despite a fine effort by the Icecats — in a game which included good passing and some excellent plays both defensively and offensively — Bentley was able to end the game with a 5-0 win.

In retrospect, assistant captain Michael Bufano commented, "I don't think the scores were indicative of the way we played. They capitalized on our every mistake."

However, the first road trip for the Cats was successful in that it gave Head Coach Skip Probst a chance to try out some new talent, and gave the players a chance to expand and develop. As assistant captain Jeff Beck reflected, "The combination of Thorley, Gerraty, DeLude, and Davis showed very good effort in their first real test of Division III play. Although the score did not indicate the way we actually played, we still have a lot of work to do in certain areas. Once we improve on these areas, the team's production should be better."

In Bufano's summation of the games, "Our defensive play lacked any enthusiasm. In order to improve ourselves, we must improve our defensive play. The fast pace of the game was a welcome change, and our level of play rose to the occasion to a certain extent. I feel that these two games will better prepare us for other Division III opponents."

"I feel these two games will prepare us for other Division III opponents."

By JAMES H. DeLORENZO

The Villanova women's basketball team upped its record to 3-0 after two victories this past week.

Last Saturday, the Wildcats dismounted the undefeated Knights of Fairleigh Dickinson, 88-63. Villanova scored on its first two possessions of the game, building a 4-0 lead. The Cats never trailed from that point.

Running a near unstoppable fast break, the Main Liners scored on 14 of their 20 fast breaks. As a team, the Cats shot 53.4 percent from the field.

Senior All-America candidate Nancy Bernhardt led all scorers with 29 points, while freshman phenom Shelley Pennefather contributed 14 points and seven rebounds.

Monday night, the Quakers of Pennsylvania weren't feeling their oats, as they fell victim to the Wildcats 66-39. Pennefather had her best game to date, scoring 28 points and collecting eight caroms.

However, Villanova head coach Harry Perretta still is not happy with everything he has seen his charges do. "We're not ready to be a real contender until we play consistently," Perretta explained.

Nancy Bernhardt

The Cats turned the ball over 20 times against Penn in what became a very sloppy ballgame for both teams.

Perretta noted that "our defensive pressure just took Penn out of the game." Penn only managed a 28.9 shooting percentage Monday night.

"In both games, we executed well in sports," said Perretta. "We played well enough to get us the lead. But we have to execute our offensive plays much better."

Villanova's bench is feeling the pain of several injuries. Center's Sandy Williams and Kathy Razler have both reinjured knees that kept them out for most of last season. Senior guard Andrea Burton received a thigh injury in the Penn game, but should be healthy for the Cats next game.

"For Christmas, what this team really needs is a couple pairs of knees," joked assistant coach Andy McGovern.

Runners Open Season Dominate At Lehigh

By PAUL MACCHIA

The Villanova men's track team opened its 1983-84 indoor track campaign on Dec. 3. The Cats travelled to Lehigh University to compete in the Lehigh Open.

The Cats were successful, as they won five running events, which is a good indication of their early season conditioning.

Freshman Gerry O'Reilly started things off by winning the three-mile run. After staying on the heels of Seton Hall's Ahmed Ismael, O'Reilly blew him away in the final stages, closing with a 28 second 200. The winning time was 14:04.7.

In the two-mile run, senior Brian O'Keeffe also won, closing with a devastating kick. Most of the race was run with O'Keeffe hanging on the heels of the lead runner. With a quarter of a mile to go O'Keeffe unleashed a kick that gave him a wide margin of victory. He was timed in at 8:59.8. Dermot Anderson, making his season debut, finished eighth with a time of 9:19.6, just off his personal record.

In the mile, freshman Sean O'Neill led from the starting gun to the finish. O'Neill ran virtually a solo race as he held a ten-yard lead throughout the race. O'Neill was clocked at 4:15.9.

John Marshall, primarily a half-miler, stepped up to the mile run and finished second in 4:17.0, equalling his personal best. J.J. Clark (4:19.3, fifth place finish), Steve Gallagher (4:24.2, 11th), Bill Rahn (4:29.0, 14th) and Charlie Avolis (4:30.2, 16th) also performed well in the field which had close to 30 entries.

In the 1000-yard race, senior John Borgese ran a strong race to win, as he also led from the start to the finish. Borgese summoned a late kick at the end of the race to hold off his opposition and was clocked in at 2:15.0.

In the relays, the Cats took a first-place and a sixth-place finish home. The mile relay team, comprised of Charlie Jenkins, Jr., Mike Saulins, Jim Adams and Martin Booker finished with a time of 3:26.2 to finish sixth.

The two-mile relay team took first in a time of 7:52.1. Rahn, O'Reilly, O'Neill and Marshall competed for the victorious Cats.

Hurdler Booker finished second in the sixty-yard high hurdles with a time of 7.1.

There's something you should know before you hit the slopes again.

Not far from where you are right now, there's a mountain where the lines are short, the slopes are long and the skiing is indescribable.

It's Elk Mountain. And you have to ski it to believe it.

Elk Mountain is the biggest ski mountain in Eastern Pennsylvania—with a vertical drop of 1,000 feet of snow-packed trails—17 all together—some as long as two miles—and six of them lighted. With a new "expert" trail 3,000 feet long.

What all this means is what every skier wants: More time skiing and less time waiting in line.

And, confidentially, it means more time to relax in our friendly new restaurant, cocktail lounge and bar—where you'll meet some very interesting people.

You know it's going to be worth the trip. So come up to Elk Mountain.

The Big and Friendly one.

Manager Tends Cats

By LARRY GOANOS

Did you ever notice that blond guy who sits on the bench at basketball games and scribbles notes on a clipboard, taking time out only to tend to a player's towel or water bottle once in a great while? The guy just sits there, writing for the most part, yet he gets to attend all of the home games free, and he even travels with the team on the road. Pretty easy job, right?

Wrong.

His name is Mark Foerster and he's the senior member of a managing crew (officially referred to as "administrative assistants" by members of the Villanova basketball program) which includes three other students. Along with Vic D'Ascenzo, Rob Wilson, and John Branca, Foerster oversees the minor day-to-day operations that keep the Wildcat program running smoothly. But, as the senior manager, Foerster is also expected to shoulder some major burdens.

"My responsibilities include travel coordination in conjunction with Joan McGukin, the athletic secretary," said Foerster during a time-out from practice earlier in the week. "Under that is included hotel reservations, plane and bus scheduling, arrangement for practice time in arenas on the road, making reservations for pre-game meals and so on," he added.

Sounds like a lot doesn't it? But wait, there's more.

"I'm also responsible for ticket and meal money distribution for the players and coaches," said Foerster.

Whew, that's quite a bit. But wait . . .

"Basically, it's my job to make sure that everything runs smoothly during practices and games," explained Foerster. "During the games I keep track of offensive plays, noting whether a certain play is successful or if it results in a turnover. After the game I tabulate the results and turn them over to Coach Massimino."

All of the aforementioned duties, by Foerster's own estimate, take up about 36 hours per week of his time during the season. In the off-season he "only" puts in between 10-15 hours a week. But he doesn't regret it.

"When I first got here (Villanova) it made my adjustment much easier. I met a lot of people through basketball. It's been very satisfying; I've enjoyed every minute of it. The memories I have will always stay with me."

One of those memories, perhaps one he'd like to just as soon forget, stems from an incident preceeding last Saturday's Loyola game.

"We had just completed our pregame prayer and Coach Massimino asked for a minute of silent prayer," Foerster explained. "I happened to be leaning against the Ms. Pac-Man machine we have in the locker room and my hand slipped and hit the "on" button by accident. All of a sudden this beeping song came on to break the silence of the prayer. Everybody looked at Coach Mass, and he began laughing and everybody joined in. I grabbed at the plug as quick as I could to turn it off."

Other memories hold more pleasant connotations for Foerster.

"My association with the players and coaches is something I'll never forget; they've all become my friends. You always hear the players talk about the family concept and it sounds like a bunch of hype but it's really true. You have to be a part of the program to understand it."

Mark Foerster

The head of the Villanova basketball "family," Coach Rollie Massimino, is glad to have Foerster in the program.

"He's a very sincere person. He ranks in line with all of the other great people we've had as administrative assistants. They get involved with finances, hotels, transportation, and all of the planning. Most have gone on to be successful businessmen," he said.

The toughest part of the job, according to Foerster, is "keeping up my grades. Putting in so much time has restricted me to some extent. It's a challenge, but this has taught me discipline. I use every minute to my advantage."

But for all his time spent around the basketball team, Foerster has yet to improve in one area — basketball. "He's never beaten me in four years," boasts Massimino, "So that shows you how good he is."

On the sidelines

More Than A Game

By MARY AGNES MATYSZEWSKI

Winter has descended around the campus and besides the frosty mornings and the windy nights, it has also brought another feature — the return of the Wildcat basketball season. With the return of the Cats, there is also the emergence of a new spirit. Villanova students have come to look at their hoop team as more than just another sports team.

Basketball is the most strongly fan-supported (remaining) team on campus. As the record-breaking Basketball Club membership shows, Villanovans are very much behind these players. As a result of the dropping of football (a major issue in itself), the long fall season just seems to drag. When hoop time rolls around, the school seems to spring alive, as though long repressed — and Villanovans go wild to buy up the basketball tickets. The seats available at the Field House sold out on the first day.

Moreover, the game itself, and the style with which our players execute it, is extremely exciting to watch. Somehow, there is nothing quite like the aura which is emitted when thousands of students come together under one roof to watch an athletic event. Just being in the comfortable, warm indoors is a big plus — as anyone who has ever frozen at a football game will tell you. As a result, mittens come off and hands come out of the pockets and are soon brought together in endless cheers. In addition, because of the ceiling and walls, these cries remain indoors and add to the frenzy of the game.

At Villanova, an aura remains around the sport. We possess an internationally-known team whose pictures have appeared in many publications. Somehow, when you have a friend who has been written up in Sports Illustrated, you tend to think of him as famous. As all of us can attest to the fact, one of the first questions that greets us upon our arrival home for the holidays is: "You go to Villanova? Do you know any of the basketball players?"

Basketball has come to be one of the "in" things on campus. And our fans follow the games like crazy. Just ask anyone who has ever been to the Palestra or attended a Field House game. The air is filled with electricity. Often we leave the event hoarse. Other students have been known to paint their hair and/or faces blue and white in a show of support. One student even went so far as to shave a "VU" on his chest. The two hours, besides providing Novans a chance to witness some outstanding athletes in action, also gives us an opportunity to "go wild" for a while. We can put down our books and pick up our battle-rattles, throw on some blue and white and throw out some streamers, join our fellow classmates in the Quad and scream and hug because our team just pulled off a fantastic victory at the final second, or just simply gather together in a show of unity and support and sing out the words to "V for Villanova . . ."

Wildcats Cruise Past Loyola

By ELIAS A. PAPSON

When the 3100 spectators at the Villanova-Loyola game last Saturday ambled towards their seats, there was one question on the minds of all of them: "Would the Wildcats have to come from behind and go into overtime again to win, or would they have an easier time with Loyola?" It was not long after the opening tip-off that that question was answered, as the Wildcats took control early in cruising to a 78-50 win.

Despite the rather easy victory, Coach Rollie Massimino is still not satisfied with the team's performance. "Our offensive continuity isn't what it should be," he said after the game. The Wildcat offense committed 17 turnovers.

Once again, seven-foot Chuck Everson started at center. He was accompanied by guards Frank Dobbs and Gary McLain, and by forwards Harold Pressley and Dwayne McClain. Ed Pinckney still has a slightly sprained ankle which allows him very little playing time. Recently, that injury has been complicated by a toe injury. He said of the situation, "I am laying off it and trying to get it back into shape. As for playing against Temple this Saturday, I should be able to play against them."

Despite losing the opening tip-off, the Wildcat defense held the Greyhounds in check on their first two possessions. Pressley started the Wildcat's scoring with a short banking jump shot just 54 seconds into the game. McLain, whose offensive finesse was lacking, was replaced by Dwight Wilbur only one minute into the game. Later, he said of his play, "I was overexcited. I just wanted to play so hard."

The Wildcats went on to score the first four points in opening a 13-4 lead at 14:02.

Villanova's early defense was superb. They utilized various defenses which kept Loyola outside and unable to penetrate underneath. Everson's dominating defensive rebounding did not allow Loyola many second shots, and helped set up a few fast breaks.

Pinckney entered the game at 14:50 replacing Everson, and immediately went to work, scoring on a short banking jump shot.

But after that basket, Nova's offense stagnated. Loyola proceeded to reel off four straight points, interrupted only by McClain's three point play, and then pumped in six more consecutive points, cutting Nova's lead to 18-14 at 9:20.

Throughout the early stages of the game, Massimino continued his unending string of substitutions. After the game he said of that strategy, "I was trying to find the right personnel."

And indeed, he found the right personnel. The Wildcats went on to score six straight points on Harold Jensen's 20-foot jump shot and two consecutive baskets by Dobbs. Their excellent penetration continued to the end of the half. In that seven minute span, they outscored Loyola 22-8 in taking a strong 42-28 lead into halftime.

Both teams came out firing in the second half. They exchanged three sets of baskets before Loyola went on another scoring run. Putting in eight points within two minutes, Loyola closed the gap to 52-37 and were threatening further. David Gately's driving layup capped their run.

Sloppy Loyola offense ensued, and combined with excellent Nova defense, it paved the way for Dobbs' 12-foot jumper at 13:41 that triggered an 18 point scoring massacre. Within that time, Pressley went on a rampage. Blocking a couple of shots and scoring on two slam dunks, he brought the then silent crowd to their feet.

When the dust cleared at 9:48, Villanova had taken a commanding 63-37 lead, and Loyola was again forced to call time out, their fourth of the half.

Commenting on that marvelous residence of slams, and his 16 point performance, Pressley said, "I guess I was hyped to have a good game." He was second in scoring to McClain, who had 19 points. Pinckney, who played only 18 minutes, contributed 10 points to the Nova cause.

Gately led the Greyhounds with 15 points. Tom Gormley added 10 more, while forward Dave Urban and Kevin House each added eight points in the losing cause.

Nova increased the lead to 66-37, and at this point Massimino put his trust in a multitude of nonstarters. R.C. Massimino replaced Dobbs, and Jensen came in for Pressley. As he walked towards the bench, the fans came to their feet in a resounding accolade for his fine performance.

Further substitutions continued. Brian Harrington replaced McClain, and Mike Enright entered the game, as did Steve Pinone. McClain assessed the substitutions: "I think the game was very beneficial to us. We were able to play everyone, to get them all into the flow of the game."

And finally, Wilbur came in for McClain and quickly took control of the game. He scored on a 15-foot jump shot that enabled the substitutes to maintain the momentum in closing out the victory.

Loyola's inability to penetrate the Wildcat defense helped the Nova cause. Unable to go to their big man down below, Loyola was forced to shoot outside. They only shot 33.3 percent from the floor versus 56.1 percent for the Cats. Strong early rebounding by Everson and several blocked shots by Pinckney and Pressley sealed the victory.

The Wildcats are now looking ahead to Saturday's Big Five match-up against Temple. Said Pressley, "The upcoming games are going to be difficult." But there is much optimism among the players. "I think we will do well in our upcoming games," said Pinckney, "but we'll have to take them one at a time."

Budweiser.
KING OF BEERS.
ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Peter Maloney.

Breaking two Villanova varsity records in one weekend is quite a feat, but Wildcat men's swimmer Pete Maloney did just that in the tri-meet against Boston University and Yale.

Maloney broke his own record in the 100-yard backstroke, 52.69, with a new time of 52.1. He set the record in the first leg of the 400-yard medley relay, the only part of a relay that a record can be broken at. This relay took first in the Yale meet. Maloney was also part of the 400-medley relay record set last year.

Maloney set his second varsity record in the 200-yard backstroke competition with a time of 1:57.22.

Besides these accomplishments, he also holds three unbroken freshman records and has six first place finishes in six meets this year. The team is now 6-0.

Coach Ed Geiez feels that Maloney is "probably one of our most versatile swimmers. He's not only an excellent backstroker, but our fastest in freestyle. He's a great competitor."

The reaction of Maloney to receiving this award was one of surprise. "I really didn't expect it. It's good to see this year's team getting more attention than we got last year. I think our team is a lot more together; a little more rounded. We should do better in high pressure situations and I think we'll do well in the Big East Championships."

FOOTBALL IS BACK

Trustees Vote to Restore Football at IAA; Alumni, Students Overjoyed by Decision

By JAMES H. DeLORENZO and LEONARD J. La BARTH

"Convinced therefore that the circumstances vastly change the philosophy of intercollegiate football at Villanova, the Board of Trustees voted today (Tuesday) to establish a new football program at the Division IAA level."

With this statement, the Rev. John Driscoll, O.S.A., president of the University, announced the return of football at Villanova.

"For the past year, the Trustees and administration of the University, in close concert with students, faculty and alumni, have been striving toward a workable decision on whether Villanova will play football again," Driscoll began.

Following a Tuesday morning meeting of the Board of Trustees, Driscoll read a five-minute statement to assembled reporters, and University and alumni officials.

"The question has raised strong differences of opinion among intelligent people of goodwill," Driscoll continued, "and has threatened the unity on which we pride ourselves.

"As a university we are called upon and indeed have demonstrated our ability to accommodate a university of feelings and aspirations, and at the same time, make reasonably sound decisions," said Driscoll.

"It is almost a year ago to the day, Dec. 12, 1982, the Board of Trustees, responding to a request of the student body and the alumni, agreed to review its position on intercollegiate football," Driscoll noted. "A resolution was adopted calling for the appointment of a committee to define a program that would satisfy the following criteria: financial sustainability; consistency with the University's academic goals and standards; and attractiveness to the University's constituency."

"The Board of Trustees has been greatly impressed by the enthusiastic response of alumni and the members of the student body to its criteria, and the willingness of both groups to aid in the financial support of football," explained Driscoll. "Such support means that the University would sustain no additional financial burden with the return of football, and that its major constituents are committed to the strong support of a whole new program."

Driscoll continued, "I must point out here that the backers of football requested, and the Board agreed that the decision at hand not be an invalidation of the April 1981 action to discontinue football, but rather the development of a whole new concept of the sport at Villanova.

"Some excellent presentations along these lines have been made by the members of the Committee to Restore Football," stated Driscoll. "Such a posture or position means that while football was dropped in 1981 for strictly financial reasons, any new program would place an equal emphasis on all three of the Board's criteria.

The announcement, greeted with enthusiastic applause by students, alumni and administrators in attendance, came at 1:32 p.m.

"The trustees at the same time established a committee of the Board to work with the administration in the implementation of athletic policy," Driscoll added. "The implementation of the football decision will take place at the earliest feasible date as determined by the Board.

"The Board wishes to express its gratitude to all the members of the Villanova community, the students, faculty, alumni and friends, for the concern they have expressed over this issue," said Driscoll.

"The precious heritage and goals that we share for the University as a whole, now unite us in the urgent work at hand. Setting "differences aside, we see within our reach a great good that will test the lives of so many. We need each other as never before in order to grasp it," Driscoll concluded.

Frank Dunne, upcoming president of the Alumni Association, addressed the assembled congregation with the announcement: "We would like to congratulate Father Driscoll, and the Board of Trustees, on what we obviously think is the right decision," Dunne stated. "What this decision means is that Villanova is not afraid to grow; it is not afraid of any challenges."

"I'm happy, I'm flabbergasted," said former Student Body President Paul Tufano. "I feel great that they finally have shown that the students have a voice in what goes on around here.

"Unfortunately, I was not as optimistic. I didn't give them that much credit," Tufano explained. "I woke up this morning thinking that perhaps it would be too big a thing for them to do, to say yes, which would go against all the prior decisions to drop it and to uphold it again. I think that besides bringing back football, and all the great benefits that we worked for last year in Student Government, this shows that the Board is now open to other points of view, besides their own and besides the administration, namely the students and the alumni.

"I think now the students will know that what they say counts, and I think it shows that Student Government's got a big responsibility," said Tufano. "For me it's a personal triumph because I devoted my whole senior year to this."

"I'm overjoyed," Pat Leahy, the current president, said. "It's the best thing to happen to Villanova in four years. I wasn't sure about what would happen; all reports from the beginning of September were 50-50 across the board."

Doug Murray, the president of the General Alumni Association at the time the original football program was discontinued, said, "It's terrific, I'm delighted. I felt that we had a shot at it. I don't think I ever felt that we had an iron-clad situation. I don't think anyone knew. I think that decision was made today.

"The reaction has to be totally positive," Murray stated. "I think the general public will be satisfied and pleased."

"The Villanovan did a great job of bringing the entire issue into focus. Independently, the newspaper, and the undergraduates there, kept attention on the issue," Johnson said. "I'm ecstatic. I feel like I've been carrying a child all along, and gave birth today.

"It was very big of them that they addressed it and sent down a decision. It's an exciting proposition," concluded Johnson.

On June 27, 1983, the special committee formed by the Board recommended the restoration of football at Division IAA.

The proposal approved by the Board Tuesday was based on a projected schedule of five home and five away games, with expenses projected at $435,350 and revenues of $696,498.

Included in the revenue projections were student admission fees of $217,595, based on the October 1982 Student Government survey that indicated students would pay a $35 yearly fee for football. The figure was computed based on 6,217 students, the 1982-83 undergraduate enrollment figures.

Also included were Alumni season tickets. A projected total of 3,000 seats per game at $10 each were allocated, based on discussions with officers of the Wildcat booster club, who guaranteed the purchase of any unsold tickets up to 3,000.

Ed Rideout, director of the Alumni Annual Fund, reacted with enthusiasm, "I'm just so pleased. It will be much easier for me to get on the phone and talk about money for Villanova. I would call everyone but I'm too nervous. They're going to be calling me, and I guarantee the checkbooks will open right away."

974 Days: A Review of the Battle

By JAMES H. DeLORENZO

The Villanova Board of Trustees' decision on a return of football to the University at the Division IAA level came 974 days after the original decision to discontinue the original division I program.

That original decision, on April 13, 1981, ended a football program that had continued over 87 years. The decision of the Board was announced at a press conference on April 14.

Once before, in 1974, the Board's Committee on University Structure and Programs recommended that the Univerity discontinue intercollegiate football.

Alumni of Villanova announced the formation of a Committee to Restore Football on May 7, 1981. "It is the opinion of many alumni and friends of Villanova that this (the dropping of football) is an ill-advised and intemperate decision," claimed Alumni Association president Doug Murray.

In July of 1981, the Board reaffirmed its April decision by 20-1 vote. At the time, Driscoll stated, "I do not see any possibility for a reversal of opinion, at least not in the foreseeable future. The action has been taken and the issue is closed."

Thomas Labrecque, a University trustee and former chairman of the ad hoc Committee on Athletics, in an April 1981 letter obtained by the Villanovan said, "The peremptory process used to arrive at the decision was not one to be proud of."

Labrecque, president of the Chase Manhattan Bank, wrote the letter to fellow trustee Joseph Walters, shortly after the Board decision.

Labrecque said in the letter that the "decision is wrong," and it was "unconscionable" that the trustees were not even informed prior to the April meeting that the football matter was being discussed. Labrecque was not present at the meeting.

"This is a low point in terms of our integrity in communicating with each other, and in the decision-making process," concluded Labrecque.

The Rev. John Deegan, former vice president for student life, claimed the original football decision "was a courageous decision and the right one."

In a letter to Driscoll dated May 21, 1981, the Rev. John Deegan, O.S.A., former vice president for student life, claimed the football decision "was a courageous decision and the right one.

"It is my opinion, after ten years at Villanova, that football does not contribute to the mission of Villanova University," Deegan wrote. "We are not or should we ever be a training ground for the pros.

"Do not let a vociferous minority deter you from your rightful path of emphasizing academic excellence. No compromise can be made in this decision. A football team at any division level is not acceptable," the letter read.

"John, we are well rid of it," Deegan concluded. "Please don't compromise! You are right! Insist on your decision! Tens of thousands are behind you!"

The Villanova General Alumni Association called for the resignation of Driscoll at a press conference on April 14, 1982, one year after the football decision.

According to a statement read by Murray, the call for Driscoll's resignation was "not the opinion of a handful of alumni but represents the feelings of thousands of alumni throughout the country."

Driscoll responded, "I've received a vote of confidence from the Board of Trustees, the Senate, and student government, and there's a clear indication of faculty support."

Driscoll also stated, "I as president would attempt to resolve any of the issues with the one exception being football. The Board of Trustees has firmly rendered its decision on that, and there will be no attempt made at restoration in the immediate future."

Villanova's Student Government, led by Student Body President Paul Tufano, conducted a poll of students on financial support of football. The October 1982 survey's results showed that 96 percent of the 4,300 students polled confirmed they would pledge $35 a year to fund a football program.

The University Senate Athletic Advisory Committee released a 14-page study on the potential of a new football program on November 12, 1982. The report cited three conclusions: football benefitted participating students; it provides visibility for the university; and it is a rallying point for student and alumni activities.

When presented with the motion, the Senate passed it, noting, "The University Senate respectfully recommends that the Board of Trustees conduct a comprehensive review of the entire athletic program, including the participation of the University in an intercollegiate football program."

In response to criticism of its original decision to discontinue football, the Board appointed, on Dec. 14, 1982, a special committee on football. The Board appointed its chairman, former University president the Rev. Edward McCarthy, to chair the special committee.

Former Student Body President Paul Tufano organized the October 1982 student survey on the financial support of football.

The special committee was assigned by the Board to define an intercollegiate football program for Villanova satisfying the following criteria: financial sustainability; consistency with the University's mission statement and its academic goals and standards; and attractiveness to the various segments of the University. The Board set a Dec. 1983 deadline for its decision.

According to a letter to the special committee from member Donald Creamer, dated March 17, 1983, the subcommittee "assigned the responsibility of reviewing the financial implications of Division IAA . . . is comfortable with both the expense and revenue projections which were developed."

"The subcommittee is particularly enthused about this proposal inasmuch as it successfully addresses all of the criteria set forth by the Board of Trustees," claimed Creamer.

The subcommittee's proposal for Division IAA football, based on a schedule of five home and five away games, projected expenses at $435,350 and revenues of $696,498.

Included in the revenue projection were student admission fees of $217,595, based on the student government's survey. The figure was computed based on 6,217 students, the 1982-83 undergraduate enrollment figures.

Also included were Alumni season tickets. A projected total of three thousand seats per game at $10 each were allocated, based on discussions with officers of the Wildcat booster club, who guaranteed the purchase of any unsold tickets up to 3,000.

In March of 1983, the Villanova chapter of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) conducted a forum on what the faculty position on football should be.

The AAUP surveyed its members on the football issue. Of the 229 who responded (49 percent of the faculty), 35 percent opposed entirely the restoration of football, while 65 percent favored football at some division.

A letter from the Rev. Larry Gallen, vice president for academic affairs, dated July 8, 1983 and addressed to "chairpersons, directors", stated that "as I read the . . . results, 68 percent of the faculty believe that football should not return at all or at a level no higher than Division III."

The final results of the AAUP poll noted that 29 and one half percent voted for football at Division IAA, with two percent voting for Division II and 33 percent in favor of Division III.

The Committee to Restore Football endorsed the special committee's Division IAA proposal in May.

The "Administration's Response to IAA Football proposal," authored by Gallen and dated June 22, 1983, disclosed that losses for the 1980-81 football season totalled $652,780. Figures for the 1971-80 were also presented. These figures had not been previously made available outside the administration.

Documents obtained by the Villanovan, including Gallen's report, revealed that there was never a sold-out game in the University's 11,828 seat stadium. Also, adult season ticket sales declined from a high in 1974 of 887 to the final season's total of 691. Student season tickets in 1980 amounted to 61. The average attendance at the games since 1974 was 7,107, with an average of 1,754 complimentary tickets distributed.

Losses in the 1979-80 football season amounted to $611,320. In its final two seasons of Division I competition, the football program's losses totalled $1,264,100. Income for that two-year period amounted to $536,503.

In a letter to McCarthy dated June 23, 1983, Gallen stated, "The dropping of IA football has made us a better, more respected academic institution; returning football at IAA level can only hurt the University."

The special committee recommended the restoration of football at the Division IAA level to the Board at its June 27 meeting, but the Board postponed a decision until a later meeting.

A special Board meeting scheduled for August 9 was cancelled because members of the Board felt there was a need for further study on the Division IAA proposal.

The Villanovan published a story on "The Administration's Response to IAA" in its Sept. 30 edition.

The Board met Oct. 11 and reportedly did not discuss the restoration of football. According to Dr. Charles Cherry, assistant vice president for academic affairs, the agenda concerned "regular matters such as the bond issue."

Last week, Gallen told the Villanovan, "We favor bringing the football back at the Division III level, but only after the bonds are paid off.

"The administration position remains the same," Gallen said. "But I can't speak for the whole administration. We don't want Division IAA football at this time.

"The bond issue has always been a factor in our thinking . . . I would certainly think this is on the minds of the Board, but I don't have any idea how they will vote."

This past Tuesday, the Villanova Board of Trustees voted to restore football at the Division IAA level.

Aceto Begins to Plan New Football Program

By JAMES H. DeLORENZO

"The key is the coaching staff and the scheduling down the road, and we're going to play people that are going to recruit like we are," said Dr. Ted Aceto, Villanova's athletic director, following Tuesday's announcement of the restoration of football at Division IAA.

"We need to find out from the Board of Trustees what year. I didn't hear that here," Aceto noted. "There is a possibility of playing five or six games next year.

"If we can have Lehigh, Lafayette, Bucknell, maybe an Ivy League school or two, that's where we want to be," explained Aceto. "It's going to take a year or two to get our stability back in the program.

"Our biggest thing is that we've got to establish our credibility back out in the community with these young players who are coming to Villanova, that we are in the game again, and not looking to drop the sport another year down the road," Aceto claimed. "With everyone behind us, we'll make it work," he added.

Athletic Director Dr. Ted Aceto

"Knowing the program is back, if Dick Bedesem wants to apply for it, he can," Aceto said of the head coach prospects. "It's going to be open to all comers."

Aceto indicated that he had been contacted by other coaches in regard to the head coaching position, but, "I don't want to say any names until they officially apply, because I don't know what their situation may be back at the jobs they currently have.

"I was here today like everyone else, waiting for a decision," Aceto said of the Board's announcement.

"The proposal we made to the Board of Trustees was actually similar to what Penn and Princeton would be doing," explained Aceto. "Financial aid would be based strictly on need. The teams we want to play would hopefully give the lesser number of scholarships or be based on need, and I believe Lehigh, Lafayette, Bucknell, and others are doing that.

"We're just happy that it's back," Aceto said. "We're going to celebrate that for a couple days, then get back to work.

"I think we have to find a coach who knows how to get out there and recruit the student athlete in ways similar to Penn and Princeton," said Aceto. "If they are accepted by the University as a student, then they can play football."

"I want a coach who can go out there and represent the school, someone who will choose an athlete we can be proud of, and also put together more wins than losses," Aceto continued.

"Realistically, I think you win with juniors and seniors," explained Aceto. "I think you have to give the program that many years to bring in people, and we might even start this program with walk-ons."

"We really can't do a thing until we find out from the Board when they want it back," claimed Aceto. "We certainly will not have a caliber team which could play right now; you can't play Lehigh and Lafayette with nobody. If necessary, I think we could play a six game schedule this fall. As long as they're competitive, I find no problem in that.

"The commitment of the various groups is going to be an every year thing; there will be financial assistance every year to support the program. The Board did what they had to do, and now they (the alumni and students) have to support it. I think they know that."

"With the commitment of the students and the alumni, there might only be 1,500 seats left in the stadium on game day," claimed Aceto. "If the product comes, then maybe we can have a full house."

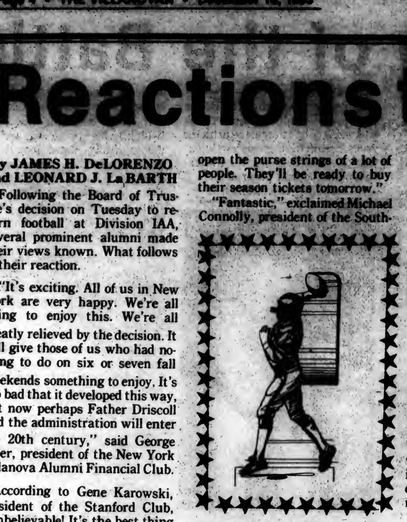
Reactions to Return at IAA

By JAMES H. DeLORENZO and LEONARD J. LaBARTH

Following the Board of Trustee's decision on Tuesday to return football at Division IAA, several prominent alumni made their views known. What follows is their reaction.

"It's exciting. All of us in New York are very happy. We're all going to enjoy this. We're all greatly relieved by the decision. It will give those of us who had nothing to do on six or seven fall weekends something to enjoy. It's too bad that it developed this way, but now perhaps Father Driscoll and the administration will enter the 20th century," said George Piper, president of the New York Villanova Alumni Financial Club.

According to Gene Karowski, president of the Stanford Club, "Unbelievable! It's the best thing I've heard in three years. It has to open the purse strings of a lot of people. They'll be ready to buy their season tickets tomorrow."



"Fantastic," exclaimed Michael Connolly, president of the Southern California club. "I'm happy with the Board of Trustees, and of course I am happy with the outcome. A lot of wounds will be healed."

John Egan, president of the Northeastern Pennsylvania Alumni Club, termed the decision "Tremendous! A lot of people have worked very hard, with lots of meetings and a great deal of discussion. Now I expect there will be a tremendous influx of money to the University. They have alumni who have held back on their 1982 annual giving, as well as their 1983 giving. It is in escrow waiting for a decision. Now they'll be pledging for 1984 and also giving their 1982 and 1983 pledges."

A spokesman for LeRoy Zimmerman, attorney general for the commonwealth of Pennsylvania and president of the Central Pennsylvania Club, said Zimmerman is "delighted to have it back and looks forward to seeing football again."

The President of the Richmond, Va., club, Henry Berling, was "delighted to hear it. I am completely happy. Driscoll put the nix to it in the wrong way, but we proved through perserverance and hard work that a lot of people care and it was financially possible. A vote of thanks should go to the Committee to Restore Football."

"They realized they made a bad decision to begin with, now there will definitely be a healing process," Gerry Billings, the president of the North Carolina club, commented.

"Sonuvagun," said Joseph Webber, the president of the Oklahoma club. "It's just tremendous. They had to approve it because it was reasonable from all approaches."

Rosa Gatti, vice president of Communications for ESPN cable network and former Villanova sports information director, noted that "I think it was a difficult decision to abandon football and then bring it back. It's fortunate the Board swallowed their pride and they deserve a lot of credit."

Football enthusiasts Frank Dunne, Ed Rideout, and Frank Rodgers celebrate Tuesday's decision.

"It's great news for all sections of the University," stated Cleveland, Oh., club President Patrick Murphy. "The divisive issues can now be put behind us and we can go on. It will bring back the spirit I remember Villanova having."

"It's fantastic! The Board first made a mistake. Football is more than a dollars and cents issue, it's part of the total life of the students and alumni. It's something to come back to on weekends, a way to encourage family and friends to go to Villanova. It is a good decision," concluded past national president of the General Alumni Association John Gartland. "I'll be back."

Football And Covenant II

By LEONARD J. LaBARTH

With the reintroduction of football at the Division IAA level at Villanova, there is expected to be an increase in the number of financial gifts given to the University that may in part finance the University's bond issue designated to fund the planned capital projects at Villanova.

The general consensus following Tuesday's decision was that this obvious spirit of cooperation shown by the Trustees in listening to the requests of the alumni and students would be viewed favorably by potential donors.

In 1981, an outline of a major campus project was designed that included renovations of the current Field House, the construction of a new multi-purpose athletic facility, the erection of two new dormitories, renovations to academic buildings, laboratories and existing dormitories and the acquisition of computing, science and engineering equipment.

The projects' faculties costs were approximated at $15.5 million for new construction, $3.5 million for major renovations and $5 million for new equipment. To finance these projects, the University was granted permission by the Delaware County Authority to sell University bonds and notes totalling $25 million, as the Villanova bond issue.

With the successful sales of bonds obtained for payment on the bond issue, the University announced late in 1982 that a Covenant II Campaign would be established to raise the monies necessary to keep Villanova in the black. The Rev. John Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, announced the approval of John Murphy, a 1951 graduate, as Covenant II national chairman.

Driscoll noted last year that the Covenant program would probably last three to five years. "It will end when the goal is reached. Three to five year pledges are sought. To reach that goal . . . it is extremely important that major contributions be received from a relatively few people." (the Villanovan, Dec. 10, 1982).

As of Oct. 5, Villanova had received commitments, totalling $3,160,502. The campaign will require an additional $16,989,497 to achieve the goal of $25 million.

Ed Rideout, director of the Alumni Annual Fund, said that all along it was not only the issue of football as a motivating factor. "It went far beyond that," said Rideout. "It involved alumni with every single person involved with Villanova. There's a time in your years and then you are an alumnus. The first day you set foot on campus you are tied to this school."

Rideout noted that with the Trustees' willingness to make

"It's not that they wanted to hold back but they were never consulted in the first place," emphasized Rideout. "Now that the alumni were heard, they're ready to give whatever they can."

According to Alumni Director Robert Capone, prior to the decision the Covenant II Campaign was going as well as to be expected but that Tuesday's decision would make a great deal of difference on any potential gains.

"Realistically, it's not the alumni who are going to give the kind of money the University wants. They'll give what they can, but they can't do it all," Capone said.

"It's the corporations and the businesses that will make the contributions and finance the campaign. These people take a look at the University; they check to see what type of relations there are and the general atmosphere of the campus." Capone concluded, "They have seen the students, the alumni and the faculty all at odds with the administration. And the fans they also, they say, 'They're fighting each other.'"

Football: No Conclusions Reached

By JOSEPH MARUSAK

No conclusions have been reached concerning the implementation of a football program at Villanova, despite the formation of a Board of Trustees' Committee on Athletics presently exploring the issue.

That committee, charged by the Board last month to work out details for an eventual reinstatement of the sport at Division I-AA, met for the first time on Tuesday.

"There has been nothing decided yet," said committee member and trustee Thomas J. Burke, when contacted by phone at his offices in Sterling Heights, Mich. "To summarize what has happened to date, the committee had its preliminary meeting, Ted Aceto, (Villanova's athletic director,) is accepting applications for coaches and, in short, we're now going through the motions to get the program moving."

"We meet again in a few weeks, and then we may do more on football," said the Rev. Edward J. McCarthy, O.S.A., chairman of the Board of Trustees and another member of the committee.

Besides McCarthy and Burke, other committee members include trustees Thomas Labrecque, Arthur J. Kania and President John M. Driscoll, O.S.A.

Driscoll noted this week that, although no definite decisions have been reached concerning football, the committee has already begun to examine the many issues involved. He cited the topics of financial aid and academic standards for student-athletes, among others, as presently under the scrutiny of the five trustees.

Dr. Theodore Aceto, athletic director

Asked when a football program might start at the university, Driscoll appeared to rule out 1984, considering the limited time frame in which to conduct scheduling, recruitment and the various other complexities inherent to reinstatement.

McCarthy, also questioned as to when football might return, replied, "I would think maybe in a couple of years, but your guess is as good as mine."

Any conclusions that committee members eventually reach must then go before the entire Board for approval. "The committees of the Board simply gather information and make recommendations to the full Board," McCarthy said.

The man who would then act upon the Board's decisions is Aceto, now in his tenth year as athletic director here. "My direction will come from Fr. Driscoll," he said. "He's working in conjunction with that committee to line up a prospective timetable. I'm sure they need to digest some material in reference to an implementation period.

"When I get the okay from Fr. Driscoll," Aceto said, "then I'll be able to put various things in motion, such as scheduling and whatever they need for a screening committee and the hiring of a coach."

Aceto noted that, since the Board's Dec. 13 announcement on football's reinstatement, he has received at least 150 phone calls from prospective student-athletes, coaches and assistants, and others interested in the program.

"We've answered all the students who have written letters, all the assistant and head coaches who applied. We just told them that when this committee on athletics forms a screening committee to help in the selection of a coach, then we would make sure that their resumes passed through that screening committee for review."

Aceto, commenting on conference possibilities for the future football program, said, "There's always a chance, but that's highly speculative. We don't know what year we'll initiate. The scheduling aspect will probably be the toughest haul. Most people do this eight and ten years down the road, although there are a number of schools, I believe, that would help if they could." It's going to have to be done on a gradual basis. You need three or four years to build into a I-AA program."

Day Care Center Proposed

By GARY R. DYER

A proposal to institute a day care center for university employees, faculty and students will be submitted to the administration this week by Dr. Angelo Armenti, dean of University College.

The proposal was prepared by Dr. Pamela Blewitt and Dr. Patricia Broderick of the psychology department and Patricia Wiedinmyer, the University College director of adult services.

"We sent a questionnaire to all or almost all of the non-undergraduate members of the Villanova community, including law and graduate and University College students," said Blewitt. "All together we surveyed fifty-nine hundred people. Six hundred eighty-one responded that, yes, they could use some kind of child care on campus."

"If there are no obstacles, it could be in place by September of '84," said Armenti. "I don't anticipate that it will move that quickly. There are a lot of other proposals that are competing for resources, space and money. I'm not sure that a day care center will be at the top of the list. A more likely date might be January 1985 or September of 1985."

Patricia Wiedinmyer, director of adult services.

Armenti is planning to try to have the University Senate at its March meeting debate a resolution stating that the university should have a day care facility. "Because the Senate only recommends policy and not procedures, the proposal would not go to the Senate to discuss," Armenti explained. "What the Senate would be asked to consider and could, if

Joint Dental Program Added

By AMELIA McGOVERN

Beginning in fall 1984, Villanova University, in a joint venture with the Georgetown School of Dentistry, will offer a special program offering a limited number of incoming freshmen a chance to earn their bachelor's and D.D.S. degrees in a seven-year program.

Students will be screened by both schools. Ten students will be guaranteed admission at the Georgetown School of Dentistry after completion of three years of study at Villanova.

These students will be granted a degree, a B.S. in either biology or general science, after successfully completing the first year at Georgetown.

"These students will have a tough three years at Villanova," according to Dr. Thomas D. Malewitz, associate professor of biology and health-related sciences advisor. "They will be required to fulfill all the pre-dential and humanities courses as four-year science majors."

This program is for students highly motivated toward a degree in the dental profession. Students selected will have to be in the top 10 percent of their high school graduating class and score at least 1000 on the Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT). "We're looking for mature, motivated students," noted Malewitz.

The benefits of the program include saving a year's worth of Villanova tuition and getting a head start on a career.

"Like anything, the program has its good points and its bad points," said Malewitz. "These students will have to take at least 18 credits a semester, usually 20 credits. Many of these courses will be sciences with labs. They will be limited in the extracurricular activities in which they will have time to participate."

The Georgetown School of Dentistry was founded in 1901. It is one of the world's most prestigious dental institutions. Its clinic is one of the most modern in the country. The school is also a teaching facility.

Above-average students have been able to continue graduate school after three years at Villanova in the past. "The concept of the program is not new. The affiliation with Georgetown and the formality of the program is new," Malewitz emphasized.

Currently Georgetown is only offering this program through Adelphia University and now Villanova.

"As far as I know, Georgetown is the only school in the country formally doing this now," concluded Malewitz.

British Poet

The British Poet Jon Silkin will read from his work on Jan. 25 at 4 p.m. in the Connelly Center Cinema. Mr. Silkin enjoys an international reputation as a poet, critic and editor. The reading is sponsored by the English Department, which will host a reception immediately afterward in the English offices, Vasey 201. All students and faculty are invited.

Literary/Arts Magazine

Villanova's new literary magazine will hold its first meeting of the spring semester Jan. 24 at 7:30 p.m. in St. Rita's lounge. Submissions from undergraduate and graduate students in such categories as poetry, prose, short stories, sketchings and photography are needed. New members are welcome.

Blood Drive

The Red Cross will be sponsoring a blood drive on Feb. 1 in the Connelly Center. Sign-ups will begin Jan. 23. For information, please contact Monica Ronan at extension 4174.

Leisure Course Registration

It's coming! Don't miss out on this spring variety of mini-courses offered through the Villanova Union. Register on Feb. 8, 9, 10 in the North Lounge of Dougherty Hall — 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. It'll be lots of fun!!!

Scuba Club

The Scuba Club will hold an information meeting on Jan. 26 at 12:45 p.m. in Bartley 106. The Bahamas trip and equipment discounts will be discussed as well as local trips and certification.

Villanovan Recruitment

There will be a spring recruitment meeting for anyone interested in joining the Villanovan staff in all departments. The meeting will be on Feb. 6 in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall. Refreshments will be served.

Jazz Fusion Dançe-Concert

The Villanova Union will be sponsoring the band Cabo Frio in a jazz fusion dance concert on Jan. 26 at 8:30 p.m. in the Day I'op.

Jazz Fusion is a style of music combining the sounds of contemporary music with fusion, straight ahead, funk, rock and latin idioms. Cabo Frio creates an atmosphere packed with energy and excitement. Come share the experience. Ticket Prices: $3.00 each, two tickets for $5.00. Tickets on sale in the Connelly Center.

Basketball Club

Bus tickets for Providence are available in the Fieldhouse Ticket Office until Jan. 23 at 3 p.m. Limited seating is available. Check bulletin board for details on road trips to Connecticut, St. John's and Seton Hall at the Meadowlands.

SNAP Meeting

A pizza party will be given by ROTC Jan. 24, 7:30 p.m. in Bartley 209. Elections will also take place at this time!

Villanova Women's Business Association

A Villanova Women's Business Association meeting will be held Jan. 24 in Bartley 113 at 12:45 p.m. The agenda for the meeting will include information about the Atlantic City Trip, upcoming speakers and collection of dues.

March For Life

On Jan. 23 the March for Life will be held in Washington, D.C. Villanovans for Life is sponsoring a bus for anyone who wishes to attend. If you do wish to go, information and a sign-up sheet can be found in the Villanovans for Life office in Dougherty Hall.

Political Union

All are invited to a debate addressed by Ms. Lynn Marks from the Philadelphia Chapter of Women Organized Against Rape Resolution. Ms. Marks will argue that it should be a crime in the state of Pennsylvania for a man to rape his wife. The debate will be held on Jan. 24 at the Wayne-St. David's Room in the Connelly Center.

Project Sunshine Volunteers

Project Sunshine Volunteers are asked to stop in the Social Action Office this week to set up your new schedule for visiting the agency of your choice.

Survey Reminder

Attention all Off-Campus residents: we would like to remind all of you who received the survey concerning the Student Bus Service that is now being explored to please return it to the Student Government Office or the Office of the Association for Commuting Students on the second floor of Dougherty Hall by Jan. 24. If you did not receive a copy of the survey, please pick one up in one of the two offices.

Glee Club

The Villanova Women's Glee Club will be holding auditions for anyone interested in joining the club. The auditions will be held on Jan. 23 and 25 at 6 p.m. in John Barry 204.

Project Sunshine Meeting

There will be an information meeting about Project Sunshine and how it brings joy and care to the elderly, needy people, hospital patients and kids. If you haven't heard about Project Sunshine Volunteers, or if you've heard but don't know how to become involved for an hour or two a week or a month, come to one of the two information meetings on Jan. 26 at 12:45 p.m. in Dougherty West Lounge or, if more convenient for you, at 6 p.m. in Bartley 210. The meetings will take 45 minutes to 1 hour and will give an overview of the program and the kinds of opportunities we provide for those of you who are interested in some volunteer services for others.

Confession Revision

During the second semester the sacrament of Reconciliation (confession) will be celebrated in the main Chapel every Monday through Thursday. The time for confession will be 3 p.m. until 5 p.m. There will be no evening confession.

Liturgy

Campus Ministry is looking for volunteers to do planning, music and art work for this Lent. If interested please stop by Campus Ministry in St. Rita's Hall.

Also, all active singers and musicians please note that a ministry meeting will be held on Jan. 22 at 1:30 p.m. in St. Rita's Chapel.

Steering Committee

Applications are now available for positions on the Steering Committee for the 1984 Orientation Program. Pick up applications in the Dean of Students Office, 213 Dougherty Hall. Filing Deadline: Jan. 27 at 5 p.m. Pick one up today!!

Library Hours

The following is a list of library hours when classes are in session:

Monday-Thursday . . . . . 8 a.m.-12a.m.
Friday . . . . . 8 a.m.-9 p.m.
Saturday . . . . . 9 a.m.-9 p.m.

AISC Fellowship Applications

March 1 is the deadline for receipt of applications for graduate study fellowships to be awarded in 1984 by the American Institute of Steel Construction.

Applicants must be in their senior year or a graduate civil or architectural engineering student, accepted by a college or university offering a graduate structural engineering degree program certified by the Accreditation Board of Engineering Technology (ABET). They must be United States citizens.

Applications are now available at more than 250 colleges and universities, and may be obtained from heads of Civil or Architectural Engineering Departments. Applications can also be requested from AISC Regional offices or from the AISC Education Foundation, 400 North Michigan Avenue, Chicago IL 60611. Telephone: 312-670-2400.

Calendars on Sale

The "Men at Villanova" Calendars will be on sale all next week. The calendars will be on sale in the Connelly Center. Students are urged to buy the calendars quickly, as there's only a limited supply available, and they will be sold on a first-come, first-serve basis.

Graduate School Trips

Just a final reminder that there are a few places still available on the various trips sponsored by the Graduate School and the Graduate Student Council during the mid-semester break.

Again, here they are:

(1) BERMUDA — Monday, March 5 to Friday, March 9 — $449.00 and $40.00 Tax and Services.

Nursing Program Reevaluated

By TIM MANLON

The College of Nursing at Villanova University was granted full continuing accreditation for its undergraduate (B.S.N.) program, and full initial accreditation for its graduate program (M.S.N.), by the National League for Nursing (N.L.N.) Board of Review on Dec. 7, 1983.

The review was the culmination of a self-study report, an N.L.N. site-visitation, and final approval by the National League for Nursing Council of Baccalaureate and Higher Degrees Board of Review.

The undergraduate program in nursing is in its thirty-second year, and it has always been accredited. The master's program, which was initiated in 1980 and which graduated its first class in May 1983, was being reviewed for the first time.

According to Dr. M. Louise Fitzpatrick, dean of the College of Nursing, the result of the accreditation review is evidence of the high quality of Villanova's nursing programs, the competence of the faculty, the caliber of the students and the strong administrative support afforded the program by the University administration and the trustees.

Dr. M. Louise Fitzpatrick, dean of the College of Nursing

Preparing for accreditation was a two-year process which involved the entire Nursing faculty as well as many other faculty members.

Fitzpatrick commented, "The College of Nursing is fortunate to have an outstanding faculty. Their dedication, hard work and efforts to advance themselves through education and other scholarly activities is extraordinary.

"Our students, both undergraduate, graduate and those who attend our continuing education programs are of the highest quality. We have a dedicated staff without whose contributions the faculty and I could never have been successful in meeting our goals. The cooperation and interest of alumni and those in the professional community, especially those who assist our program in the numerous clinical agencies, is outstanding."

Having an accredited undergraduate program is definitely something preferred when applying for graduate work. An accredited master's program "helps doctoral study, opens up opportunities for them in more advanced positions, as well as providing clout, since it is an indicant to the public as well as professionals that Villanova's program meets standards it has set for itself," according to Dr. Fitzpatrick.

Fitzpatrick commented that the reasons the Nursing College can accomplish accreditation were examples of unique assets characteristic of Villanova University. The mutual support given by all colleges of Villanova University shows that no program stands alone. The entire faculty as well as the students helped them reach their goal.

The National League for Nursing, headquartered in New York City, is the national accrediting association for all nursing programs. Programs are reviewed for continuing accreditation every eight years. The next review will take place in 1991.

Day Care Facility Considered

they chose, recommend, would be the general idea, not a particular scenario.

"I would have to write to the executive committee and ask if this can be put on the agenda," Armenti said.

"I think the administration would probably prefer to see it come from the Senate because it would get talked out," Armenti explained. "By having something come from the Senate you have a lot of different people looking at it, and if it has any serious flaws somebody's going to catch them.

"If it did not go to a committee before going to the Senate I'm fairly certain that somebody would recommend that it go back to a committee to be studied, and I thought I might be able to circumvent that by sending it to a committee first, before the March meeting," Armenti said.

"If the Senate were to approve it by a substantial margin the administration would take it very seriously and probably would implement it if the funds were there," Armenti said.

"I think it's a responsibility of a university that presumably is dedicated to taking care of the needs of its members to provide this service," Blewitt said.

Of thirty local universities and colleges the researchers contacted only seven did not have a child care service of any sort. Most of the schools which did have such a program gave preferential service to the students.

According to the present proposal, the day care center could be supported by having the parents pay a fee which would still be smaller than those common at other area centers.

"We hope to keep the cost minimal," said Wiedinmyer. "Sixty, seventy dollars a week, while other places charge ninety, one hundred dollars a week."

The current proposal suggests St. Clare's Hall, a building on the south side of Lancaster Ave., as the site for the facility. "On this campus space is a big problem; there's not much available for anything," admitted Wiedinmyer. "St. Clare's is accessible and it would lend itself well to a day care center."

"About fifty thousand dollars would be the capital expenditure to get St. Clare's functioning," Armenti said. "And then the operating budget you'd have after that would be the salary of a director, and then the staffing would be conducted pretty much by student help on work-study.

"I would imagine that the operating budget would be forty or fifty thousand dollars a year," Armenti stated. "Eventually the day-care center, as proposed, could be self-supporting — it would actually pay its operating expenses."

"I'm not at all sure that this will be the final proposal," Armenti added.

In the beginning the facility would have room for about forty-five children. "We would begin by hiring an experienced director," commented Blewitt. "We're going to suggest to the director that he or she begin with a couple of daytime programs to get started, but to move quickly to develop the evening program."

"I would imagine that we wouldn't have any kind of a decision even possible until summer. I think we would have to have a decision by early summer to get the needed renovation done in time for fall," Armenti stated.

"Not only does Villanova need something like this now, but that need can only be expected to increase," Blewitt said.

The day care facilty would be a particular help to University College, which serves large numbers of adult, and particularly female students. "Our surveys indicate that three-quarters of our clientele for the future will be women," Armenti explained, "and the women will tend to be women with families. Those with very young children will need day care if they're to come to classes."

Author to Speak

Lorna Tracy, writer and editor, will speak in the North Lounge of Dougherty Hall on Jan. 24, 1984, at 7:30 p.m.

First of a series of three guest lecturers in the Women's Studies Forum, Ms. Tracy will share her experiences in the field of literature.

AMATEUR PASSIONS, her first book, was published in London in 1981. Living in New Castle, England, she is currently co-editing STAND, the literary quarterly.

Ms. Tracy's stories have appeared in many of England's literary publications, and here in America in the MINNESOTA REVIEW. She has given readings from her work throughout Europe, Australia and in the United States. Originally from Oregon and Idaho, Ms. Tracy received her B.A. from Hastings College, Nebraska and her M.A. from the University of Denver.

V.U. Student Wins Fiction Contest

By AMELIA McGOVERN

Maryanna Senek, a freshman at Villanova University, has been awarded a $50 honorable mention prize in Seventeen magazine's annual Fiction Contest.

Her story, "Of Space Cadets and Sperry," was chosen from among 1000 stories submitted by Seventeen readers from across the country. The stories were judged on the basis of literary merit, originality and suitability for publication in Seventeen by the editors.

The announcement that Senek is one of the winners in the contest is featured in the January issue of Seventeen.

"Of Space Cadets and Sperry" is the story of a tomboy who seeks the most popular guy in the class and gets him through crazy and humorous escapades.

Senek is a student in the Honors Degree Program, a member of the Women's Glee Club, and the recipient of a Presidential Scholarship.

Phi Beta Kappa And Football

Editor's Note: This letter has recently been obtained by the Villanovan. The editorial board feels that the opinions expressed may shed additional light on the factors involved in the implementation of last month's football decision.

Phi Beta Kappa, to which Villanova has applied, is the nation's oldest arts and sciences honor society. Villanova's application will not be decided upon until the summer of 1985. Please refer to page one of the Nov. 4, 1983, Villanovan for complete details.

Date: Dec. 16, 1983
From: Michael Burke — To: PBK Faculty; Chairpersons; Administrators
Subject: Phi Beta Kappa: Impact of Football Decision

The decision to restore varsity football has raised questions about the impact of that decision on Villanova's application to Phi Beta Kappa. It therefore seems appropriate to share with everyone who will be involved in the March visitation my personal evaluation of where we stand, based on my understanding of PBK priorities and on discussions with a number of faculty and administrators. I have no desire to continue the debate on football, but do recognize that the decision may raise some legitimate, if troublesome, questions that we must confront.

As you know, Phi Beta Kappa is concerned with institutional priorities, the nature of decision making, and long-term commitment to academic excellence as demonstrated by recent actions and current trends. Thus, the issue implicit in the restoration of varsity football is not whether or not football exists at Villanova, but whether the decision casts doubt on the priorities and commitment to academic excellence demonstrated in our application.

The following specific questions come to mind:

1) Priorities. The justification for dropping football was the claim that funds spent there might be better devoted to academic requirements. Recent years have witnessed dramatic increases in support of computer facilities, support for scholarship, etc. Does the restoration of football represent a change in priorities?*

We may note the absence of any reductions in the academic areas, and the low cost to the University claimed in the I-AA proposal; we should emphasize the continued commitment to excellence.

2) Governance. The Administration and the majority of the faculty opposed the restoration of football at the I-AA level. Does the decision represent a declining influence of academics in the faculty and administration in determining institutional policy?*

We may note that final authority is vested in the Trustees, who are accountable to many constituencies. Moreover, there is reason to hope that the alumni interest and organization inspired by the football issue might be channeled into significant support of academic endeavors.

3) Financial Aid. The Committee on Qualifications has already criticized the substantial allocation to athletic scholarships in proportion to the total University commitment of funds to financial aid. Will the restoration of football exacerbate this imbalance?*

We may note, however, that the University has increased the number of Presidential Scholarships (merit) from ten to twenty-seven per class, and significantly increased student financial aid in next year's proposed budget.

Thus, in my judgment the restoration of football raises potentially troublesome questions in the eyes of our evaluators. However, these concerns can be addressed in such a manner that our case will remain a strong one as long as we give them some thought and respond in a somewhat uniform manner. With this in mind, let me conclude with Phi Beta Kappa's statement on athletics:

"The dominating concern of Phi Beta Kappa is the effect of athletic practices upon the educational goals and attainments of an institution: whether or not athletics distort the education process, detract from it, draw upon funds that should be devoted to it, or contribute to an undereveluation of scholarly performance by students."

We figured we would have heard something conclusive by now concerning the plans for a football program at Villanova University. Instead, all that seems to be surfacing at the moment is a good deal of speculation.

As it currently stands, everything appears to hinge on the moves of the Board of Trustees' Committee on Athletics, formed on Dec. 13, the same day that the Rev. John Driscoll, O.S.A., president of the University, announced the return of the sport at the Division I-AA level. Since that time, the committee has met only once, and that was this past Tuesday. Apparently, nothing definite was established at that meeting as far as dates and scheduling and recruitment are concerned.

Those committee members interviewed this week did acknowledge that some discussion on the various issues involved has occurred, and that the committee has already made some headway on some of the topics of concern. But none would say just how quickly those findings would move.

Since the process of implementation now looks as if it will be a lengthy one, with any committee conclusions having to go through the full Board before reaching Athletic Director Theodore A. Aceto, those expecting the sport's return by next fall may just have to look elsewhere for their Saturday afternoon entertainment.

Certainly, the obstacles facing a fall '84 return of football are quite imposing: both the scheduling of opponents and recruiting of student-athletes, among other concerns, would appear, potentially, to weaken under such time constraints.

Yet, we feel that the Board's committee could have found the solutions, if it had acted promptly. It's been over a month since the decision to reinstate football, and that's too long to go without any conclusions.

So now, we just have to sit tight and await the next round The next gathering is expected to come within the next couple of weeks. We hope that the trustees will have something definite to offer.

Center Support

One proposal that both the University Senate and the administration would do well to consider in the upcoming months concerns the institution of a day care center at Villanova. If it were to eventually approve such a program, the University would hold in its hands a valuable resource for students, faculty and employees, one meeting the needs not only of the present, but of the future as well.

Dr. Pamela Blewitt, Dr. Patricia Broderick, and Patricia Wiedinmyer have delivered proof that such a center belongs at the University. The three researchers surveyed nearly the entire population of non-undergraduates here, and the results show that close to 700 said they have, or could have, some need for such a center. That number cannot be dismissed.

And if the need exists now, there are no indications that it will soon disappear. According to one study, in six years ninety percent of American children will require day care facilities, a projection which likewise should not be ignored.

To get a further sense of the day care topic, the researchers contacted 30 local universities and colleges and found that only seven did not run such centers.

Questions naturally arise though, as to the cost of instituting and then maintaining such a proposed day care center. If University decision-makers can live with the initial $50,000 investment, the rest could pay for itself, as Dr. Angelo Armenti, dean of University College, indicated last week.

Most of the money would go toward preparing St. Claire's Hall as the proposed site of the center. It would be run by a salaried director and staffed by work-study students. Costs, in effect, would stay within reason while standards would remain as high as, if not exceed, those of the 23 other area schools with similar centers.

This is one proposal that merits attention.

Pizza Palace Says Thanks

To the Editor:
To my customers:

Since 1976 I have seen many of you come and go and I have been happy to serve you from my stores at Stanford and Sullivan Halls. My sincerest thanks are warranted for your loyal patronage. We at Pizza Palace have prided ourselves on our consistent service to meet your needs despite adverse weather and all other obstacles.

Unfortunately, due to circumstances beyond our control, our contract has not been renewed by the Villanova University administration. We are closing our Sullivan Hall store for the same reason our Stanford Hall store was closed two years ago: namely, our proximity to the Connelly Center.

We have always tried to support Villanova through our repeated donations to the Greek system and the Belle Aire Yearbook. We feel our generosity has been well founded in light of the support we have received from you. The Villanova administration has even written thank you notes, which are prominently displayed in the main store, for our quality catering of the fall orientation for the past five years.

I hope to see you at my main store, located at 602 Lancaster Ave. in Bryn Mawr, across from the Acme. You are welcome to bring your own beer or wine to my dining room. If Bryn Mawr is too far for you feel free to call for my fast delivery service. It is my fondest wish to continue to serve the fine Villanova student body in any way possible.

Andy Bouikidis

Croce

To the Editor:

I was very pleased to see your feature on our alumnus, Jim Croce '65. Andy Miller obviously did his homework to provide us with an intimate view of the life of this artist. Drawing from the history of The Villanova Singers, let me add a few facts about Croce's time here on campus.

Jim Croce's friendship and professional association with his producer Tommy West (Tom Picardo '63) began at Villanova when they were brought together as members of the Singers. In 1962, Croce helped Picardo in founding The Spires, the Singers' folk music group. In fact, their first recording project together was an album of The Spires in 1964.

Tom Picardo also introduced Jim Croce to Peter Yarrow and Noel Paul Stookey (of "Peter, Paul & Mary"), whom they interviewed for WWVU radio. The Villanova campus also served as Croce's introduction to songwriter Don McClean, who was a student here briefly in 1964.

Another contemporary of Jim Croce and Tommy West was Singer Robert J. Lombardo '63, who recently was awarded the alumni medallion of the College of Arts and Sciences. While Tommy West produces pop groups like "Manhattan Transfer" for ABC Dunhill Records, Lombardo is working the other side of the street as a lawyer specializing in personal management of the world's opera stars.

The accomplishments and virtue of these fine men explain why the alumni of The Villanova Singers are so proud of their brotherhood in song.

Lesser of Two Evils

By MICHAEL HEALEY

I recently saw an episode of "20/20," A.B.C.'s critically acclaimed news magazine program. One of the show's segments dealt with the bodily affliction Amyatrophig Lateral Sclerosis (ALS), more commonly known as Lou Gehrig's disease. It was a fascinating piece, and for some strange reason, it got me to do some serious thinking, something that I don't do nearly enough.

ALS, I found out, is an absolutely horrible disease. It entails a degeneration of nervous fibers from their point of origin in the cerebral cortex to the periphery. Or in laymen's terms, ALS involves a total deterioration and breakdown of the body's muscles, originating from the cerebrum and spinal chord of the nervous system and travelling through the body, by way of the nerves.

The syndrome progresses steadily until the entire body becomes paralyzed, from the eyelids to the tips of the toes. With no known cure, ALS brings an assured death, in anywhere from one to ten years. The whole hitch of this dreaded disease, however, (and the one thing that provided me the impetus to write), is that while the person's body physically breaks down system by system and limb by limb, his brain remains intact.

I tried to imagine how psychologically tormenting it would be to experience ALS. I would watch helplessly as my hands and arms and feet and legs would become paralyzed — useless and lifeless appendages. But since my brain and cognitive processes were clear and undamaged, I would be fully aware of what was happening to me, experiencing the excruciating and unabating pain.

Ironically, later in the same evening I saw a PBS special on Alzheimer's disease, a program equally as enlightening as the aforementioned "20/20." I learned that Alzheimer's disease is a particular form of senility falling under the category of senile dementia. It is like a premature senility, striking people in their 50s and 60s. This, too, caused me to think earnestly and I decided to do some research.

According to the Merck Manual, the bible of medical diseases and conditions, "the clinical picture of Alzheimer's disease is a slow disintegration of personality and intellect because of impaired insight and judgment and the loss of affect. The progression of the disease is more painful to the beholder than to the patient. Interests become restricted, outlook becomes rigid, conceptual thinking becomes more difficult."

Thus, in Alzheimer's disease, the body remains intact while the mind becomes irreparably damaged. Whereas in ALS, the body "goes," in Alzheimer's, the mind deteriorates, and with it, the ability to reason, to think, to laugh, to cry.

Carefully considering both maladies spurred me to ask the question "which would be worse?", the answer of which is the crux of my writing. If forced into choosing one of these ways to die (what a choice!), I would probably opt for ALS. For although my body would become worthless as paralysis set in, at least I would be aware of my condition, my plight. Perhaps with modern technology (i.e. computer mind boards), I would be able to communicate my thoughts to my family and friends.

Of course one could argue the other way, holding that once the mind is gone, there is no pain and with no pain, no anguish and discomfort.

Jacob Javits, the former senator from New York, is afflicted with ALS and was one of those interviewed on "20/20." It only took me a few moments to realize he was a special man, putting up an admirable fight against a rotten disease. The interviewer on the show noted that most of the people with ALS, like Javits, seemed to cope with the illness extremely well, and remained at least somewhat buoyant.

Javits, once one of the best tennis players on Capitol Hill but then straining to stretch his arms with his physical therapist, commented on her observation and in so doing, revealed the words that got my mind moving. "The mind is the empire of the body," he said, "and when that is gone, no life is worth living."

These were the words that moved me to think and then to write. Perhaps my thoughts were so abstract and ineffable that my words make little sense. I hope not. The one thing I know, though, is that for once in my life I got off my duff and really thought about something serious.

Editor Thrives on an Active Life

(This is the first in a two-part series on Ron Javers, a 1967 graduate of Villanova and the editor of both Philadelphia Magazine and Metrocorp.)

By ANDY MILLER

In September of 1983, Ron Javers, editor of Philadelphia Magazine and a 1967 graduate of Villanova University, was named editor of Metrocorp, which is the magazine's holding company. He is now also the editor of Boston magazine and a new magazine, soon to be started in New York, called Manhattan.

Those immense responsibilities fit well onto the shoulders of Javers, a remarkable success story, who, by the age of 24, was in charge of the editorial page of the Philadelphia Daily News.

While a reporter for the San Francisco Chronicle, Javers was among the small group of newsmen who accompanied Congressman Leo J. Ryan of California on a fact-finding trip to Jonestown, Guyana, in November 1978. They spent several days in the jungle at the camp of the People's Temple, which was headed by the Rev. Jim Jones.

As the entourage was getting ready to board the plane that would take them back to Georgetown, the capital of Guyana, several gunmen from the People's Temple drove up quickly to the airstrip and opened fire on Ryan, his aides and the reporters.

Ron Javers

Before the nightmare was over, Javers and two of his colleagues had been seriously wounded. Another had gotten away clean, but all of the others, including Ryan, had been brutally murdered. Javers, who saw those men die, still has the scar on his shoulder.

Javers studied sociology and was editor of the Villanovan before later going on to graduate work at Harvard. He attended Villanova University in the '60s and was very active in the anti-war movement. "I was in the first anti-war demonstration at Villanova," he said.

While in school, Javers did not really think about what he wanted to be, but he knew he was a writer and poet. "It was just a question of how my writing would manifest itself, but I knew that's what I wanted to do," he says now.

"The administration was very conservative back then," Javers recalls of Villanova in the '60s. "Now the Catholic Church has done a complete flip-flop and is in the forefront of many social issues. That's good. It's their job to speak out against injustices in the world."

Born in Philadelphia, Javers tried to get a job with a city newspaper, but found he lacked the concrete experience demanded by metropolitan newspapers of a young reporter. He did, however, manage to get a job as a teacher in a very poor section of Philadelphia. "I was very much into education and ran an open classroom," he noted.

He taught for two and a half years, all the time still writing and getting articles published. He got very involved in his teaching job and became disillusioned with society.

Javers then answered an ad in the Bucks County Courier-Times for a reporter. The editor there liked his work so much he hired him as a sub-editor. He climbed the ladder quickly, but felt, after eleven months, that he had been there too long.

He applied to the Daily News simply by sending some of his clippings to the editor. "That had to be the shortest application ever," he laughs, "I just let my work speak for itself." He was hired as copy editor, a somewhat anonymous job. To counteract this, he would write articles and put them in the editor's mailbox at night. A couple of days later they would appear in the paper.

One day he just decided to quit. "My shift was 11 p.m. to 7 a.m. My days off were Tuesday and Sunday, and I used to spend them sleeping. I was exhausted," he recalls.

He was made editor of the editorial page at the age of twenty-four. He ran a "crazy, funny" editorial page, but people began to read it. After four years he had had enough. "Some subjects were very painful to me, and I found I was no longer as glib as I had been," he said.

Javers applied for and was accepted as a Neiman Fellow at Harvard University in 1975. "Basically, you were allowed to do what you wanted to, and we were given faculty status, so I set up a seminar. Now I like to say I lectured at Harvard," he says with a smile.

After Harvard, he couldn't see himself going back to the Daily News, which was much smaller than it is now. He had always been very interested in the satellite countries of Eastern Europe, so, in 1976, he traveled to Hungary and wrote a long piece on that country.

After this, he was asked by a prominent magazine to cover the presidential convention "through eyes of Milton Shapp, who was the darkest of dark horses" that year. He chose instead to go to Hungary again.

Upon his return Javers did investigative work on gang wars and other subjects. He won many awards, but, once again, he decided to move in. It was then that he applied to the San Francisco Chronicle. It was a move that would change his life.

Jacksonville Is No Fun

By JOSEPH MARUSAK

What better way to recover from final exams and the Christmas rush than to head south for a couple of days in sunny Jacksonville, Fla.?

That's the question which raced through my mind as I made final preparations a few weeks ago for a trip to the Gator Bowl basketball tournament, in which our very own Wildcats were participating. I figured I would go down there, cover the games for this paper and catch a tan at the same time.

It didn't happen that way. In fact, the only thing I caught in Jacksonville was a slight case of nerves. Here's why:

Dec. 27 I take the 11:55 a.m. flight out of Boston's Logan Airport, and everything goes smoothly until we hit Charlotte, N.C., where I must transfer flights. Two days after Christmas, Charlotte's airport is like a mall two days before Christmas. Pure bedlam. After stepping off the plane and entering the terminal, I shove my way through throngs of panicky-eyed people to reach the long seat reservation line.

JACKSONVILLE, FL: A city to forget.

As I approach the counter, the attendant indicates that the flight to Jacksonville has been booked. I tell him to "unbook" it. So he begins calling for volunteers, several [illegible]

Once aboard, I tell myself to relax, as the opening game of the tournament won't start for several hours. Suddenly, light shines on marble head; I realize that, when back at Villanova before the break, I had forgotten to make press arrangements. In my hurry to obtain airline tickets, hotel reservations and sunglasses, I had skipped the one procedure that would get me into the games and allow for interviews. Without a press pass, I'm nothing to anybody in Jacksonville. Now I become one of the panicky-eyed.

I arrive at the Jacksonville airport at 5 p.m., not even sure of the starting time of the VU-Jacksonville match. So I buy a copy of the Jacksonville Journal and see that the tip-off is at 7 p.m. — just two hours.

As calmly as possible, I head outside and catch a van, in which there are six strangers, including a plaster-faced woman who asks each passenger whether or not he's in the armed forces. I ask her if she has some kind of fetish, but she doesn't smile in return.

At 6 p.m, I get to the Jacksonville Hilton, throw my suitcase into the room and return to the lobby in search of a cabby. Just then, a minor miracle occurs, as I run into Charlie Guida, a former staff photographer who's now the assistant to the alumni director. [illegible]

By 6:30 I'm in the Jacksonville Coliseum, which is located across the St. John's River from the Hilton. It's a move I would later regret. Not only does the team receive a thrashing from the Jacksonville University Dolphins (who?), but up in the stands I have to tolerate the antics of fellow Class of '85 members Gus and Joe, whose last names do not deserve mention.

Throughout the contest I listen to speeches on their self-proclaimed greatness, and how they deserve an article in the paper. It is at this point that I begin to question the sanity of our own Fr. Stack, who accompanied these two hucksters. I can't wait to leave.

Dec. 28. Villanova doesn't play its consolation match with Auburn until 7 p.m., so I have the morning and afternoon free. Alone, I venture into downtown Jacksonville, a city that looks like it just got bombed, but whose survivors haven't a clue as to what happened. The few who take to the sidewalks walk in perpetual spells of dizziness, and among these forlorn, I stroll for over an hour and a half.

The last time I went to Florida was during the summer before my freshman year of high school. As I recall, it rained every afternoon from somewhere around two until about four. Then the sun and blue skies would reemerge.

Well, as the cliche goes, history often repeats itself, especially on those who ignore its power. After lunching at Burger King I decide, naturally, to visit the Jacksonville Journal-Florida Times-Union headquarters. But there isn't much to see there, and I begin to return to the hotel. Sick and tired of taxis and buses, I decide to walk across a nearby bridge which spans the St. John's and will leave me about a half-mile from the Hilton.

It's 2 p.m. The wind picks up and I see black clouds looming in the distance behind me. Halfway across the bridge, I realize that those same clouds are now directly above. Enter the rain, which drives so fiercely that soon I cannot even make out the tall

Committee Gives a Hand to the Elderly

SUNSHINE

Project Sunshine and the Social Action Office warm a resident at the Brookwood Retirement Center in Media.

By KAREN E. DUNNE

In the middle of finals and departures for the holidays last month, members of the Social Action Office and Project Sunshine got together to share time and give gifts to the elderly at the Brookwood Retirement Center in Media, a home with 62 residents.

Through the help of Villanova's administration, faculty and staff, each of the women there received a handmade shawl and two small gifts. All of the residents, in fact, received two gifts and then had a social with three boxes of fresh and dried fruit and hard candies. Besides these, a year's subscription to Reader's Digest was given along with 30 condensed Reader's Digest books.

Jim Condolff, Project Sunshine's chairperson, played Santa and was accompanied by Mike "Tac" Tacelosky, Ed Collymore and Sister Therese Celine. These people brought along with them a cat and a small dog to escort Santa.

While the young dog romped about, carols were sung and the gifts were distributed. Condolff then did some magic tricks to entertain before leaving in his van.

The tears shed by one of the men and a smile by an old lady who rarely did so showed that the Christmas spirit, in fact, reached Brookwood.

Through this, much generosity was recognized. It is Project Sunshine's goal, in fact, to continue to reach such senior citizens throughout the year. This idea of sharing is also upheld with others in society during the year.

savings instruments available to the consumer. With this increase comes confusion, for consumers are unable to comparison shop for banking services. Currently, however, the Consumer Federation of America has called upon the House Banking Committee to push for a Truth-in-Savings legislation which would give the consumer access to information required to survive in this new competitive banking environment. This legislation calls for full and readable disclosures of all essential contract terms, conditions on savings accounts, and a standardized method of calculating interest rates being offered.

Drivers in America will see more red than before when a new extra tall light appears on passenger cars. The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) has approved a rule requiring a third stop lamp to be mounted in the line of sight near the rear window of all cars produced after Sept. 1, 1985. NHTSA has estimated that approximately 900,000 accidents can be eliminatd yearly by requiring the high-mounted stop light. For more information write Kevin Cavey, NHTSA, Washington, D.C. 20590.

Sooner or later, everyone has complained about a product or service. When this happens to you, remember that the outcome of your complaint is influenced by how you go about complaining. Here are some basic steps that can help you win your dispute: (1) Define and document your problem. Decide in advance what you'd like the vendor to do to remedy your complaints, then gather any evidence which can help you prove your case. (2) Visit the business or person who sold the item as soon as possible. Make clear your intention to resolve the dispute. (3) Climb the company ladder with your complaint if you still have problems. (4) Consider complaining to your local, State, or Federal Government Consumer Offices.

You could also try consumer action groups, merchant grade associations, state licensing boards, or the Villanova Consumer Affairs Research Board. Most importantly, don't give up!

Here are four quick ways to beat the higher costs brought on by the Bell System breakup: buy your own equipment, eliminate your tone dialing service because you pay to have a musical phone, learn how to make simple wiring repairs, reduce the number of your local calls and you may obtain a cheaper service charge.

Currently Bell of Pennsylvania is going through some very important changes. As of Jan. 1, 1984, the company is no longer part of the Bell System and has split from AT&T. The process is called "divestiture," and will directly affect you. As of January 1st, you can choose among many companies for long distance service and telephone equipment.

If you would like more information on managing your telephone costs, write: HELP-PACK, Bell of Pennsylvania, P.O. Box 861, Conshohocken, PA 19428 for your free HELP-PACK which includes information on many areas which will help you cut costs.

[illegible] in our country, the United States of [illegible] free to grow up and make a difference, [illegible] that certain people have the right to decide whether a child may be born or not. Abortion has been legal in the United States for eleven years. That does not make sense to me.

Above this world is such a sad place, with terrible problems like violence in our cities, ubiquitous dread of nuclear war, and the poverty in this country, the wealthiest in the world. Why subject a child to this world of doubt and fear? Why complicate things by bringing more children into the world? Why not end a child's problems — and ours — before they begin? Abortion is not going to solve the problems of the world. The new life and hope that comes with the birth of a baby might. Maybe he is just what this world needs! It might only take just one person. I'm sure we can all take a look at our lives and find that one person, or that handful of people who have made a difference in the world to us.

But wouldn't it be awful to bring an unwanted child into the world? With the average waiting period to adopt a child being several years, I hardly think there is any such thing as an "unwanted" child. No, not even a handicapped child, because today in the Unitd States there is a waiting list to adopt these children too. It seems that their physical or mental limitations enhance their eagerness to love — and I don't think anyone can question the need this world has for people who are willing to love.

I know — all this sounds very simplistic. But we live in the land of opportunity, and yet some child, being nurtured and kept safe and warm in his mother's womb, may not even have the opportunity to be born.

Do you think our unborn children deserve a chance — to give this world a chance? This Monday, Jan. 23, thousands of people from all over the country, even as far as Alaska, will go to Washington, D.C. for the eleventh annual March for Life.

We will visit our government to let them know that we strongly disagree with a law that infringes on a child's freedom to be born. The bus will be leaving at 7:30 Monday morning from the Field House. For more information, stop by the Villanovans for Life office in 108 Dougherty, or call 645-7244.

Gail Gregory is the vice president of Villanovans for Life.

With the temperature at 61 degrees that day, I hadn't even bothered to bring along a jacket. I start sprinting, and once off the bridge, seek shelter under the grimy, green awning of a dilapidated restaurant serving 60-cent hamburgers as its special of the day. I pass.

Eventually I wade back to the Hilton. All I want to do now is escape from this city, but one disaster remains. That night, Villanova receives a clinic from Auburn, trailing at one point in the first half by a mere 25 points.

The Tigers are led by Charles "Round Mound of Rebound" Barkley, a guy, who, as the media guide says, is one of the Southeastern Conference's "most avid fans of chicken and pizza." The bulky Barkley contributes 18 points and 10 rebounds as the Tigers take third place, defeating the Cats by a score of 95 to 83.

Dec. 29. My flight leaves Jacksonville at 7:30 a.m., and it's still raining as the plane takes off. As we enter Logan Airport several hours later, I decide that only now has my vacation begun.

Hooters Return With Strong Album

The Hooters are back.

The standout of the new album is the track, a dance-pop song with only the faintest hint of Caribbean influence. By the time a woman starts huskily voicing erotic sentiments during the chorus, the whole production is so exaggerated that it seems to be an excursion into the campy rock at which the A's were so adept. The French/Italian lyrics add to that effect. Of the Hooters' best songs, this tune is closest to the mainstream.

"All You Zombies" is familiar to most local radio listeners from the earlier live recording, and perhaps Hyman and Brazilian are a little too familiar with it; this rendition is almost apologetic. Sometimes the singing does but as if by accident (as on the line "where have all your children gone?"). A layer of reverb is added to the vocals on the chorus, probably because Hyman and Brazilian's duet alone would sound too thin, but it only draws attention to itself and makes the song pompous.

"Fighting on the Same Side," also familiar from a single with heavy radio play, is a bright reggae tune the Specials would envy. The recording sounds almost as stripped-down as the single version, and the song benefits from this treatment, although the vocals are a bit too rough and ragged. Since the earlier version was recorded, some softer harmonies have been added to the chorus, to good effect. This song is so energetic that the saccharine lyrics seem like an exercise in pop-romantic style, and the whole piece is too simple-mindedly happy for that gesture to be grating.

"Birdman" is a good attempt at mainstream rock, built around one basic riff in the hard-rock style. The interplay of guitars and keyboards and the production in general are well-polished. "Don't Wanna Fight" is a loney-night song ("Don't want to leave you alone tonight . . . "). The melody is pretty enough, and there are elements which give it more power: a stylish acoustic guitar bit by Brazilian, and some echoing drum fillins. "Concubine," about a rock star recruiting a young woman to be just that, is short on punch in both music and lyrics.

"Blood From a Stone" isn't a complex tune, but the guitar work is superb and keeps the whole fast song together. "Hanging on a Heartbeat" is true 6ks, a fair tune with the most pop-romantic lyrics imaginable ("We've got the power to make it.").

Two problems beset this album (though they certainly don't ruin it): the paucity of good, original-sounding material and the tentative, conservative production. There are only eight songs here, lasting about 25 minutes, and even of these few tunes, some are weak.

The music is too often heavily derivative and the lyrics are often unimaginative and a little too cute. This lack of range can be covered upin concert, but not on record, and it could be bad for the future of this band if not remedied.

Not all of these songs seem to have been re-thought in terms of recording: some pieces here could be merely tapes of live performances, technically good but meant for a different set of standards. The drums often sound thin; the vocals are all delivered in the same rasping tone; the arrangements are repetitious.

The album is generally a success, though. In songs like "Amore" and "Birdman" the Hooters demonstrate their talent outside of the ska style while including their familiar standards. Hyman and Brazilian's natural style is not the precise reggae mold: lyrics like "Sex is a science but love is an art" suggest a combination of Cole Porter and Rick Springfield.

The Hooters may not have found their best style yet, or made an album which realizes their potential, but they are among the best songwriters and musicians to come out of the Philadelphia area. They make some very enjoyable music, and they have put it on vinyl and put it in the stores.

It's a 'Two of a Kind' Movie

By KELLY O'NEILL

"Two of a Kind," starring America's sweethearts, John Travolta and Olivia Newton-John, is a not-so "one of a kind" film. The plot is typical as well as predictable and the only enjoyment is derived from the characters themselves.

There is a chemistry between John Travolta and Olivia Newton-John which is unmistakeable, and it is refreshing to see these two actors together again on the screen. John Travolta acts as a misguided inventor who borrows a sum of money from loan sharks so as to finance his many crazy inventions. Olivia Newton-John is a teller in a bank, working her way through acting school, struggling to pay the bills. The two actors meet at the bank when John Travolta tries to steal the money that he owes to the loan sharks. Olivia Newton-John pulls a fast one and the two are destined to meet again.

Meanwhile, there is a discussion taking place in heaven between God, played by a mere voice, and four of his messengers. They have been observing all of John Travolta's actions in search of some good. Much to their dismay, he does not meet up to the standards of the Lord. He plans to flood the world, and bring everyone up, but he gives these four messengers exactly one week to transform the self-centered inventor into a self-sacrificing individual, the catch being — he has to sacrifice himself at one point for Olivia Newton-John, the bank teller who swindled him out of the stolen money.

It is at this point in the movie where the plot becomes tangled and the humor absurd. The devil plays a role in the film by intervening in many of the messengers' works. They get a bit carried away with some of their powers and the audience is not amused.

As many predict, the co-stars fall in love, and why not? Isn't that what everyone wants? There are only a few romantic scenes and since these are the backbone of the movie, one might say this is a movie without a backbone.

Olivia Newton-John had an opportunity in this movie to play a more serious role than she has in the past. After the fame she received from her performance alongside John Travolta in "Grease," she starred in "Xanadu," not so popular fairytale which was disappointing to many. Each of these roles were along the same lines and Olivia is eager to be considered a serious actress. Unfortunately, "Two of a Kind" was not the box office hit that one might expect, and although Olivia's performance was good, it was nothing to rave about.

All in all, "Two of a Kind" is the sort of movie you don't mind seeing for ninety-nine cents, and it is definitely worthwhile to wait for it to hit the smaller theaters. The performances by Olivia Newton-John and John Travolta were adequate, but to see them in action again was entertaining.

'Iron Man' Begins To Rust

By PETE DiPASCA

Ozzy Osbourne, one of the most controversial figures in rock music today, checked into the Spectrum January 15 and 16 for two evenings of heavy metal music.

Whether it's rumors of biting off the heads of live bats, or having his concerts protested by community organizations, or shaving his head and dumping the hair on guitarists Tony Iommi and Randy Rhoads, and bassists Rudy Sarzo and Geezer Butler. For his current tour, Osbourne has assembled a group consisting of drummer Carmine Appice, bassist Bob Daisley, keyboardist Don Airey, and guitarist Jake E. Lee, whose style is similar to that of Eddie Van Halen.

An impressive stage set-up resembling something out of a Vincent Price horror movie is being used on this tour, and the music is equally impressive. Most of the songs from the Monday night show were from Osbourne's first solo album ("Blizzard of Oz"), and his recently-released "Bark at the Moon" album. Lee's extended guitar solo was one of the highlights of the evening, as was Osbourne's metal guitar solos. Apice's drum solo got off to a slow start but became interesting towards the end, when he used four drum sticks simultaneously, as if his drum set was a xylophone.

While the music was fine throughout, Osbourne's voice was below par. Anyone can sound good in a recording studio, but the real test is singing live. Osbourne failed this test. He also moved about sluggishly on stage, which may be evidence that it is time for him to hang up his black cape. This year marks Osbourne's fourteenth year in his musical career (starting with Black Sabbath), and his performance onstage seems to indicate the "iron man" in

Entertaining Random Notes

By NICK ANASTASIO

This is the first of what will hopefully become a regular column in "Stepping Out." Its purpose will be to provide the Entertainment Editors with an outlet for divulging pieces of information, and also give us a chance to speak our minds. So here goes:

The Yes concert originally scheduled for February 27 at the Spectrum has been postponed until sometime in April. Guitarist Trevor Rabin ruptured his spleen in a diving accident. Lately, water has not been kind to rock and roll.

As for the other upcoming concerts, all are still on as of this writing. They are: Billy Joel, Billy Idol, Stray Cats, The Pretenders, and Van Halen.

Filly's Saloon has shut down until March. The reason: renovation. When it reopens, Filly's will be able to accommodate 400 people, instead of only 300.

Fans of the movie "2001: A Space Odyssey" rejoice! A sequel will be out by Christmas. The new movie is "2010: Odyssey Two" (not the most original title), and stars Roy Scheider ("Jaws," "All That Jazz"). Filming begins in two weeks under the direction of Peter Hyams.

Sports as entertainment: The Philadelphia Flyers, whose attendance is at a ten year low, have come up with a way to draw more college students to their games. For the rest of the season, students who show their school ID cards at the Flyers' box office at the Spectrum will pay only $4 for their ticket. Where they will wind up sitting, though, is unclear.

It seems as if 1983 will go down as the Year of Michael Jackson. Just about every critic has listed "Thriller" as the best album of the year, and both Jackson and "Thriller" dominated the American Music Awards. So now the question is: what will Jackson do for an encore? Will his touring with the rest of the Jacksons prevent him from releasing a new album this year? Or will he find the time and energy to follow up "Thriller"?

Dirty Harry Strikes Again

By JOSEPH McALEE

"Sudden Impact" stars Clint Eastwood as the legendary Dirty Harry Callahan tracking down a strange ritualistic murderer played by Sondra Locke.

The movie, fourth in the Dirty Harry series, begins with artist Jennifer Spencer (Locke) brutally murdering a man who raped her and her sister many years before. Inspector Callahan, who continues to deal with criminals in his uniquely effective way, is assigned to the case. In the course of his investigations, Harry inadvertently causes the death of a Mafia don by questioning him too intensely. After several unsuccessful assassination attempts by The Mafia, Callahan is exiled to San Paulo, a small northern California resort town, to look for clues relating to the bizarre murder. After several additional murders and a climactic nighttime chase, ending on the San Paulo (actually Santa Cruz) boardwalk, Harry apprehends the killer and sees that justice is served.

"Sudden Impact" is the first film in the Dirty Harry series directed by Eastwood, who has ably directed movies in the past, such as, "The Outlaw Josey Wales," "Play Misty For Me," and "Bronco Billy." But "Sudden Impact" lacks a fluidity in the transition from scene to scene, which can be attributed to the director's unfamiliarity in dealing with the fast-paced story.

Dirty Harry

The picturesque city of Santa Cruz is a welcome relief from the gritty urban backdrop of previous Harry pictures, which were filmed in San Francisco. The final scenes of "Sudden Impact," shot on the city's beautiful boardwalk, are the best in the movie.

Eastwood is magnificent as Callahan, the tough-talking, straight-shooting San Francisco homicide detective. With "Sudden Impact," Eastwood solidifies Harry's position as the number one cop in American culture.

Sondra Locke's performance as Spencer is mechanical and uninspiring. She portrays the killer in a cool and calculating fashion and is totally devoid of any emotion. Pat Hingle, as the beset police chief of San Paulo and Audrie J. Neenan as the tough, mouthy local girl, both turn in fine supporting performances.

"Sudden Impact" is a good movie because it delivers what it promises. Neither Eastwood or "Sudden Impact" will garner Oscars because the film is not made to win awards or teach some important lesson. All the Dirty Harry movies are made to do is entertain us, and provide some excitement. "Sudden Impact" is, like its predecessors, extremely violent and may not be appreciated by everyone. However, if you enjoyed "Dirty Harry," "Magnum Force," and "The Enforcer," you will enjoy "Sudden Impact."

Gang's New Release Gets 'Not Kool' Review

By JAMES H. DeLORENZO

Kool and the Gang's latest album, "In the Heart," is a mixed bag. Unfortunately, the mix favors the bad side of the scale.

The first two tracks, "In the Heart" and "Joanna," get the album off to a good start, but after these two cuts, there is no other really good song on the album.

The title cut is a typical Kool and the Gang song. It's not quite a love song, not quite a dance song, but it is a good song. Lead singer James "J.T." Taylor instructs us that "when you say you love somebody, you've got to let them know." Unfortunately, that's about as involved as the lyrics get.

"Joanna," the single from the album, is by far the best part of the album. A romantic ballad, it succeeds in evoking images of a man very much in love. Even the trombone somehow fits into this unusual arrangement. It's a shame that a good piece of work like this is trapped on this album.

For the rest of the album, Kool and the Gang try unsuccessfully to emulate other black artists. "Tonight" sounds like a song Earth, Wind, and Fire rejected. It is a harsh sounding song as well, about the singer's loss of innocence. Somehow, it doesn't work when the same guy who once sang "Celebration" tries to sound anguished.

"Rollin" is an attempt to sound like Rick James, if you can believe that. What it sounds like is a bad song that Gang wrote a bad parody of. Still, "You're rollin' me" don't add anything.

"Place In Us" not only rips off part of an old Stevie Wonder song, but it tries to rip off his voice as well.

The other songs on the album make one common mistake. The lyrics have all been written and performed by other people, with different titles. Even "September Love," which could be a good ballad, relies too much on the story of a fall romance. I think Neil Diamond did this already.

When the Gang does try to get funky, with "You Can Do It," they don't get off the ground. Even the guitar riffs have been stolen.

Other Kool and the Gang LP's specifically "As One," have presented them as fun-loving funksters. They did their own thing, and it worked. And they didn't produce their albums, either. They did produce this one, though.

This is the group's 35th album, and it sounds like they worked too hard for it to be their last. But they can't expect to sell many albums on reputation alone. Despite the two really good songs, Kool and the Gang's latest is too derivative to be recommended.

Villanova University's Cultural Film Series for Spring 1984 will feature a selection of major American and European films. The main series, "Facts, Fibs, and Fabrications," opens with Robert Duvall's "Angelo My Love" on Jan. 29 and 30. The mini-series "The Factual Film — The whole truth and nothing but . . .?" opens on Feb. 1 with a special free admission showing of the classic German documentary "Triumph of the Will."

Upcoming films in this Spring's series include: "Ghandi," "Fanny and Alexander," "The Year of Living Dangerously," "Frances," and "Betrayal."

Discussions with film commentators are held after many of the films.

The films are shown in the Connelly Center Cinema on the Villanova Campus. Admission is $3.00 for the general public and $1.50 for students and senior citizens. Call 645-7262 for more information.

Cats Bow in Gator Bowl

By JOSEPH MARUSAK

Game One: Dec. 27, 1983

As the Jacksonville Journal indicated prior to the start of the Gator Bowl basketball tournament on Dec. 27, Jacksonville University was a team "blowing into" its opening match against Villanova.

With star Otis Smith battling a cold, freshman Ronnie Murphy still experiencing groin trouble and center Terry Pike already out for the year, JU seemed ill-at-ease entering its contest with the Wildcats.

But in the end, the Cats were the ones who found themselves limping, as the Dolphins pulled off a stunning 67-63 upset before a crowd of 5,003 at the Jacksonville, Fla., Coliseum. The loss forced Villanova into the consolation game on the following night against Wake Forest-victim, Auburn.

A seemingly-recovered Smith became the biggest obstacle for the Wildcats in the opening round game. The 6-4 sophomore forward, last season's Sun Belt Conference freshman of the year, shrugged off sickness to produce a career- and game-high 24 points and 11 rebounds.

"In the first half, when we got that big lead, we took some shots we should not have taken. And that contributed to the fact that it was only four at halftime," Wenzel explained.

The score remained close throughout most of the second half. Then, with only 2:38 left, Villanova suddenly fell behind by eight, 61-53.

No need to worry. Pinckney immediately made two free throws, and ten seconds later, he rejected a shot by the Dolphin's Eric Lewis, allowing Pressley to drop in two down at the other end.

"I think Eric thought he was wide open," Wenzel noted. "It seemed like Pinckney came out of the ceiling on that one. It was a tremendous block."

Dwayne McClain, who scored only six against JU, stole the inbounds pass after Pressley's bucket and slammed it home. The Wildcats stole the next inbounds, and with only 1:54 showing, Pinckney tied it at 61 with a turnaround jumper.

Jacksonville's Andrew Hinton scored at the 1:03 mark, but Pressley knotted things at 63 only 12 seconds later with a couple from the line.

But it turned out to be the Dolphin's night, as they hit two buckets in the final 16 seconds to preserve the upset.

"I have to give a great deal of credit to Jacksonville University," Massimino said afterward. "They really hustled up on the boards. They made us do things defensively that we don't like to do. We were just completely outplayed."

In the other opening round game that night, 10th-ranked Wake Forest clipped the Auburn Tigers by 76-67 to advance to the finals against JU. The undefeated Deacons, who led by as many as 14 points in the second half, were paced by sophomore forward Kenny Green (15 pts.), 6-9 center Anthony Teachey (14) and Delaney Rudd (13). Auburn's Chuck Person topped all scorers with 22 points.

Villanova's match against Auburn University on the following night turned out to be anything but consoling.

Led by sophomore forward Chuck Person's 36 points, the Tigers shot ahead early and never looked back in its 95-83 consolation-game victory over the Wildcats.

Villanova, which started the same five players as the previous night — guards Dwight Wilbur and Gary McLain, forwards Pressley and McClain, and Pinckney at center — fell behind by as many as 25 points in the first half.

Auburn's big kick began only five minutes into the game. Leading by 12-8, the Tigers proceeded to rack up 15 consecutive points, and by the end of the half, they had built that into a quite comfortable 50-30 lead.

"I attribute the win to our quick start," said Auburn head coach Sonny Smith after the game. "I thought our defense played beautifully in the first 10 minutes; it's the best defense we've played all year."

For the Tigers, Charles "Round Mound of Rebound" Barkley led the way defensively. An all-Southeastern Conference selection last year, the 6-6, 265-pound junior grabbed a game-high 10 boards and blocked four shots against the Wildcats.

But the offensive spark was provided by the 6-8 Person, who has been averaging 19 points a game this season.

"This was Chuck Person's best game by far at Auburn, and one of the highest point totals an Auburn player has had since Mike Mitchell (now in the NBA). He's been doing this every night for us," Smith commented.

Person, who was named to the all-tournament team, received some help in the scoring department from both Barkley (18) and forward Vern Strickland (19). Those three helped maintain the Plainsmen's lead throughout the second half, despite a comeback attempt by the full-court-pressing Wildcats.

Dwayne McClain's three-point play with a little over five minutes left narrowed the lead to nine, 73-64. But his and Villanova's efforts fell short as Person hit several key foul shots down the stretch to give Auburn its eighth victory in 11 decisions.

"I have to give our kids a great deal of credit," said Massimino. "In the second half they came out and battled back to cut it to within nine. But very seldom does one get deep in the hole like we did and have the opportunity to win."

Pinckney contributed 17 points and eight rebounds, and Pressley added 15 points for the Cats, who, at 3-5, were off to their slowest start since 1974.

SOARING FOR THE SCORE: Eddie Pinckney goes up for two against Auburn in action during the Gator Bowl Tournament.

"Otis Smith is an outstanding player," said Villanova head coach Rollie Massimino after his team's loss. "He took the ball to the glass extremely well."

"I think the entire nation (a national cable television audience) got a chance to see what kind of a player Otis Smith is," said third-year Jacksonville head coach Bob Wenzel.

Smith had the Cats playing catch-up right from the start. He pumped in 13 points in the first 11 minutes of the game, helping the Dolphins to a 30-17 advantage.

But the Wildcats never allowed Smith & Co. to dominate completely during those first twenty minutes. After the Dolphins jumped out to that 13-point lead, Villanova put down the clamps defensively in allowing the host team a mere five points the rest of the half.

And Nova, thanks in part to the inside combo of Harold Pressley (career-high 17 points, nine rebounds) and Ed Pinckney (16 points, eight rebounds), put on a run of their own to narrow the Dolphin lead to 35-33 by the end.

TOURNEY NOTES: The surprise of the tourney had to be Jacksonville, which not only knocked off VU, but also came close against Wake Forest in the championship game . . . In the Deacons' 57-54 tournament-final win, guard Danny Young broke a 50-50 deadlock with two from the line to give his team the lead for good . . . JU's Smith and Wake Forest's Young and Teachey were named tournament MVPs.

Jacksonville was appearing in its 12th straight Gator Bowl Tournament, which started back in 1951 . . . Villanova had not played either Jacksonville or Auburn before the Gator Bowl Classic . . . Concerning the loss to the Tigers, Massimino said, "It was a game of sports, and if we could have gotten an extra one, quite frankly we might have had a shot."

A Truly Super Game

By N. JOHN CAVUTO

Only two days away is the most overpublicized sporting event of the year — no, not the Pro Bowlers Tour Firestone Championship, but Super Bowl XVIII. Across Villanova University, television sets will be turned on to Channel 10 in anticipation of John Madden's chalkboard, he of Lite Beer from Miller commercial fame. Oh yeah, he once coached in the NFL, didn't he? Hopefully, the viewers will be able to endure or just plain evade the seemingly endless two hour pregame show where every retired athlete gives his prediction on the game. For those who are able to last until game time, a treat appears to be in store. The Washington-Los Angeles match-up appears to be the best on paper since Pittsburgh and Dallas went head-to head in Super Bowl X.

Super Bowl XVIII by far features the best team from each conference, and two of the most exciting as well. Washington, of course, is led on offense by quarterback Joe Theismann, this year's Most Valuable Player in the National Football League, and running back John Riggins, who gained 1347 yards this season. Theismann has an excellent core of receivers to throw to, which include the likes of Art Monk, Charlie Brown, and Alvin Garrett, all members of the high-fivin' "Fun Bunch." Joe Washington has proved to be one of the best all-purpose backs in the league.

However, what may be the primary reason for Washington's success lies in the front line of the Redskins, or as they are affectionately known — "The Hogs." Washington's front line spent the season clearing gaping holes in defensive lines for Riggins and Washington to run through. This enabled Joe Theismann to utilize all aspects of his multi-dimensional offense. Washington scored 541 points during the regular season, a new NFL record.

In what will be a classic offensive — defensive clash, Washington's offense will be severely tested by the intimidating, dominating defense of the Raiders, which is led by Lyle Alzado and Villanova's own Howie Long up front, linebackers Ted Hendricks and Rod Martin, and defensive backs Lester Hayes and Mike Haynes.

The Raider's offense is not too shabby either. In an attack that features 1000-yard rusher Marcus Allen, who caught 68 passes coming out of the backfield, and big play quarterback Jim Plunkett passing to primary targets Cliff Branch and tight end Todd Christensen, Los Angeles has shown the ability to rack up the points. Christenson led the NFL in receptions with 68. Washington's secondary must be concerned with keeping Plunkett's arm at bay.

If the regular season's 37-35 thriller won by Washington is any indication, we can look forward to a wide open offensive showcase. One must take note that Marcus Allen was injured and did not play that day.

The key to this game will be whether LA's defense can control Washington's running game. If they stop Riggins and Washington, it will shut down Washington's offense. However, if Riggins and Washington run wild, Theismann should have a field day, picking apart the Raider defense and using all his available options.

In Super Bowls, the team that makes the least mistakes wins. The Redskins have a tremendous edge in this category. During the regular season, Washington turned the ball over only 18 times, an incredibly low number, while forcing 61 turnovers themselves. On the other hand, Los Angeles lost the ball 49 times on offense and forced only 31 turnovers. This will also make a difference in the game. I look for a hard-fought physical battle, with a few fancy plays thrown in for good measure. The multi-dimensionality of Washington's attack should lead it to victory. Vegas odds have the Redskins favored by a field goal. My prediction: Redskins 30, Raiders 21.

Fifth-Place Finish for Women Hoopsters

By BOB HELLER

During the last week of December, Villanova's women's basketball team participated in the La Salle Holiday Tournament. The Cats first game was against sixth-ranked Mississippi, on Dec. 28.

Nova got off to a good start in the first half, taking a 12-8 lead within the first five minutes. Mississippi took the lead back at 16-14 three minutes later and led for the remainder of the half, taking a 45-35 lead into the locker room at halftime. Mississippi ran the lead up to 16 points, 53-37, during the first five minutes of the second half. However, the Cats did not give up and eventually cut the lead to six points, 64-58, with five minutes remaining. At this point, Villanova had to start fouling Mississippi. Mississippi made their foul shots, pulling away for a 79-62 victory and handing the Wildcats their first loss of the year.

Villanova's Nancy Bernhardt and Shelly Pennefather led all scorers with 22 and 21 points respectively. Eugenia Conner led the Lady Rebels of Mississippi with 18 points.

The Wildcats' next game was against the Orangewomen of Syracuse. Led by a sparkling performance by Nancy Bernhardt, the Wildcats took a 38-31 lead into the locker room at halftime. In the second half, Syracuse was able to get no closer than four points. The Wildcats opened up a 15-point lead at one stretch, 67-52, going on to win the game 77-65.

Bernhardt led the Wildcats with 22 points and six rebounds. Other top scorers for the Cats included Pennefather with 18 and Katrina Messenger with 10.

The next day the Gophers of Minnesota were the Wildcats' opponents. Nova opened up a 14-8 lead early in the first half as Pennefather scored eight of the first 14 points. Minnesota battled back, however, and took a 25-24 lead with 7:13 remaining in the first half. The one point margin remained until halftime as the Lady Gophers took a 35-34 lead into the locker room between halves.

The Wildcats came out charging in the second half as Sandra Williams scored eight points in the first four minutes to give the Cats a 46-39 lead which they never gave up. The Cats ran the lead up to as many as 13 points, 66-53, before settling down to a 76-69 victory over the Lady Gophers. The victory gave them a fifth-place finish in the tournament.

Villanova had five players in double figures, with Pennefather and Bernhardt leading the team with 20 and 18 points respectively. Williams added 13 points and nine rebounds and Burton and Messenger contributed 11 and 10 respectively.

Graff Resigns as Soccer Coach

Villanova University's Director of Intercollegiate Athletics, Dr. Ted Aceto, recently announced that Howard Graff, the founder of men's soccer at Villanova and the only coach in the program's 19 years of existence, had resigned citing personal and business related reasons.

Graff, the founder of both men's and women's soccer at Villanova, first introduced men's soccer to the Main Line campus in the fall of 1965 when he molded just 12 players into Villanova's first club level squad. Graff continued to direct the program at the club level until 1979 when the Wildcats jumped to the varsity ranks and became Villanova's 13th men's varsity sport. Compiling an overall won-lost record of 91-161-15 during his 19 seasons on Villanova's soccer sidelines, since the program turned varsity in 1979, Graff's teams logged a 39-42-4 record. Graff also initiated a women's soccer program at Villanova in 1976 and coached the first two seasons, compiling a 5-5 mark.

The Cats men's soccer program has steadily grown through the years. Starting with only 12 player in 1975, last year Villanova had over 40 soccer hopefuls try out for the team. Under Graff the Cats have also experienced international soccer competition. Traveling to Ireland this past summer, the Cats played in Germany in 1977 and on several occasions have hosted a touring team from the University of Mexico.

"There's no question that Howard has been a very loyal part of our athletic family over the years," stated Villanova AD Ted Aceto. "Howard is responsible for the establishment of our program, and for that we are grateful."

Coach Graff was honored for his 19 years of service to Villanova University by the Villanova Varsity Club during halftime of the January 18 Villanova Field House men's basketball game between the Villanova Wildcats and Seton Hall Pirates.

Men Swimmers Fall

By MARY AGNES MATYSZEWSKI

This past weekend the Villanova men's swim team hosted La Salle College in a meet which ended sadly for the Cats, as they lost by a score of 47-66. However, Villanova had some fine efforts.

These came from: Keith Donahue, who finished first in the 200-yard freestyle with a time of 1:46.8 and finished third in the 500-yard free with a time of 4:55.8; Pete Maloney brought in two first places for the Wildcats. The first was in the 50 freestyle with a time of 22.2 and the other was in the 100-yard freestyle with a time of 48.2. He and his teammates Jose Alvarez, John Gargula, and Mike Gallagher also placed second in the 400-yard medley relay with a time of 3:37.8.

Gallagher, Matt McKean, Jack Hallahan and Donahue placed first in the 400-yard freestyle relay, winning with a time of 3:15.4.

Cats Go 3-7 In Holiday Action

By MICHAEL F. IRONS

The Villanova men's basketball team had a tough Christmas break losing seven games and winning three. The Wildcats overall record is now at 5-7, but its Big East record is 2-2.

VILLANOVA 89

The Wildcats fell behind early and were never able to fight out of the hole. A late rally turned into a free throw show but fell just short. Temple was led by the inside play of Granger Hall who led all scorers with 30 points and 11 rebounds. Nova was paced by Ed Pinckney who had 28 points and grabbed 15 rebounds. The loss lowered Villanova's Big Five record to 1-1.

VILLANOVA 80

Again Villanova fell behind early and could not catch up to the Explorers. Although the Wildcats cut the lead to just one point, they could never get over the hump as. LaSalle would then score six or seven straight points. A season high 23 turnovers severely hampered Villanova's comeback attempt. Ed Pinckney again led the Wildcats, pumping in 20 points and getting 12 boards. The Explorers were guided by Steve Black's 22 points.

SAMFORD 55

Nova ended its two game losing streak with a 14 point blowout of Samford in the U.A.B. Classic. The win improved the Wildcats record to 3-2. Villanova shot a sizzling 67.4 percent from the floor. Dwayne McClain led the Cats with 16 points while Ed Pinckney had a team high of seven rebounds.

VILLANOVA 76 (3 OTs)

In an exciting game that went into three overtimes, the Wildcats dropped a close one which evened their record at 3-3. Villanova was again led by the duo of Pinckney and McClain. Pinckney scored 25 points, a game high, and McClain grabbed a team high of 11 rebounds.

VILLANOVA 70

In the Wildcats first Big East game of the year, Villanova lost to an emotional Orangemen team. The loss put their record at 3-6 and their Big East season off on a down note. Syracuse was led by the backcourt tandem of Dwayne "the Pearl" Washington and Gene Waldron. Washington had a game high of 28 points and Waldron had 20. The Cats got a good effort from Ed Pinckney who scored 24 and pulled down 14 boards.

VILLANOVA 63

Villanova lost its second straight Big East game due to the outside shooting of Mike Adams and Jay Murphy. Adams scored a career high of 34 points while Murphy had 22. Adams shot an amazing 13-18 from the floor. Harold Pressley had a very good game scoring 20 and finishing with 10 rebounds. The loss was Nova's fifth in a row.

PITT 61

Villanova broke its five game losing streak and got its first Big East win with a 13-point victory over the Pitt Panthers. Clyde Vaughan, the Big East's leading scorer, sat out the game after twisting his ankle in the first minutes of the game. The Wildcats took advantage of Vaughan's absence and led most of the game. Ed Pinckney paced the team with 17 points and he and Harold Pressley had six rebounds.

GEORGETOWN 63 (2 OTs)

In a major upset and an extremely exciting double overtime game, Villanova beat the Georgetown Hoyas, then ranked fourth in the country. Dwight Wilbur hit a jumper with two seconds left in the second overtime to bring home the win. The victory evened Nova's Big East record at 2-2, with their overall record at 5-7. The Hoyas were led by Mike Jackson and Pat Ewing who had 16 and 14 points respectively. The Wildcats were guided to the upset by Harold Pressley who had 17 points and 17 rebounds.

EDITOR'S NOTE: The Gator Bowl Tournament is reviewed on page 13.

John Padova

Junior powerlifter John Padova won the Regional II's Collegiate Powerlifting Meet held at the Annapolis Military Academy on Jan. 14 and 15, thereby making him the first Budweiser Athlete of the Week for 1984. Padova pulled off this incredible victory by squatting 358.5 lbs., benching 231.5 lbs., and dead lifting 358.5 lbs.

Padova originally began lifting as a junior at Chestnut Hill Academy in order to strengthen himself for ice hockey. Upon his arrival at Villanova, he intended to pursue the hockey and give up the lifting. As he puts it, "I was in lunch line with my O.C. group and the two powerlifting captains approached me and asked me to lift for the Wildcat squad. Originally I said no, but they kept pestering me and finally I told them I would see if I could balance the lifting with my academics and the hockey. When I found out that it wasn't that much of a burden, I went out for the team."

Padova still manages to balance all three, and this multi-talented athlete is also a star on the rink. But as he notes, "I would really like to thank my hockey coach, Skip Probst, for being so reasonable about allowing me to perform in my meets during our hockey season."

In addition, Padova is a real team player. When asked to comment about the Annapolis meet he replied, "Overall, I thought our team did a fantastic job; all the members performed great. We were not expected to win this meet and we surprised everyone with our victory."

He also feels strongly about the team's future: "We could be the best lifting squad in the country. The coaches have done a very good job."

The efforts of this young athlete have not gone unnoticed. In September 1983 he broke the state record by benching 235 lbs., and in October he was awarded Outstanding Lifter in the Pennsylvania State Meet.

And what does he enjoy most about the sport? Says Padova, "It provides a lot of added benefits. It increases my confidence, and it's very good for [illegible]. And if the [illegible] are right, I'm going to be [illegible] in earlier to be a success in the world of [illegible]

Women Hoopsters Win

By BOB HELLER

Last weekend Villanova's women's basketball team defeated fellow Big East Conference rival Connecticut, 79-67, upping its record to 11-2.

Both teams exchanged baskets during the first 10 minutes of play. Then the Wildcats forged ahead and opened an eight-point lead, 22-14, with 9:30 remaining in the first half. Nova continued to increase its lead as Connecticut began entering serious foul trouble. As the first half ended, the Wildcats led by 16, 46-30.

Villanova continued to dominate in the second half, increasing its lead to as many as 22 points, 72-50. Connecticut tried to battle back but was only able to cut the lead to 12 as the Wildcats won their second Big East Conference game, bringing their conference record to 2-1.

Villanova was led by Nancy Bernhardt and Katrina Messenger who scored 26 and 17 points respectively. Messenger also pulled down 14 rebounds to lead the Cats in this category.

In another Big East game late week, the Wildcats took on the Pirates of Seton Hall, defeating them by 71-62.

Seton Hall scored the first eight points and led 8-0 when Villanova coach Harry Perretta called for a full court press defense. Within the next 1:09, the Wildcats scored 10 points to lead 10-8. Both teams exchanged baskets for the remainder of the first half.

Villanova opened up a five-point lead early in the second half and gradually increased it to 11 near the end of the game. Seton Hall scored a lay-up in the final seconds to cut it to nine.

The Wildcats had three players in double figures. Nancy Bernhardt led all scorers with 32, including a perfect 12 for 12 from the free throw line. Andrea Burton and Shelly Pennefather were also in double figures with 15 and 14 points respectively.

Four days earlier the Wildcats opened their Big East conference play against Pittsburgh. At halftime Villanova held on to a 32-26 lead. In the second half, Pitt rallied to tie the score at 60-60, to send the game into overtime. In the overtime period, Pitt outscored the Wildcats 11-8 to take a 71-68 victory. Katrina Messenger led the Wildcats with 18 points.

The Wildcats first game of the new year was against Manhattan College. Nova's Shelly Pennefather scored seven of the first nine points as the Wildcats took a 33-29 lead after the first half.

In the first half, with 10:56 left, Nancy Bernhardt hit a 25-foot jumper from the right side of the floor. Those two points gave her 1,636 for her career, which moved her into first place on Villanova's all-time scoring list. Bernhardt finished the game with 20 points.

The Wildcats opened the game up in the second half, increasing their lead to as many as 14 points. When the final horn sounded, it was another Villanova victory, 79-67.

Pennefather contributed 20 points and 7 rebounds to the effort. Senior center Lisa Messenger, [illegible]

New On-Campus Alcohol Policy

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

It is now permissible for any organization to sponsor parties on campus in which students with proper Villanova identification could participate, and only those students with proof of age 21 would be allowed to obtain alcohol.

The Student Government ad hoc Committee to Restore Social Life on Campus and the Dean's Advisory Council introduced the new on-campus alcohol policy- to take effect this semester -- which will eliminate any liability the University or sponsoring organization could face in the case of a mishap.

The liability, under the new alcohol policy, will fall on the student who hands alcohol to a minor. Only those students with 21 I.D. will have their hands stamped at the door, making them eligible to be served alcohol.

The new policy stemmed from a meeting held over the Christmas break with Pennsylvania Assistant District Attorney Arthur Schulman, a Villanova graduate, who volunteered his services to aid Villanova in committing itself to a legal alcohol policy.

Presidents of organizations on campus met with Schulman in December to "simplify the alcohol issue," according to Patrick Leahy, student body president. Leahy praised Schulman's approach, as his legal knowledge includes involvement in writing the alcohol laws of Pennsylvania, while his youth and interest in the University help him understand the students' position.

In January, Leahy, the Rev. [illegible], O.S.A., dean of students, and the Dean's Advisory Council met to clarify and develop an acceptable alcohol policy with the new insight into Pennsylvania alcohol laws Schulman provided and their effect on the University, its organization and students.

Leahy and members of the Advisory Council agreed to the policy of allowing parties on campus to include everyone and serve alcohol only to those students showing proper I.D. at the door.

It is stressed by the Deans' Advisory Council and the Student Government ad hoc Committee to Restore Social Life on Campus, that those students who pass beer to a minor are liable under the Pennsylvania laws. Furthermore, it is recommended that drinking at a party should take a "backseat" to the focus of the evening, which may be a band or dance.

The BYOB policy, which at one point was thought to be a solution, was dropped in favor of the new policy, since a BYOB policy still leaves the civil liability with the University, as well as with the students sponsoring the event.

The success of this policy was put to the test Jan. 21 and has seemingly shown its success. Austin Hall sponsored a party under the new guidelines in Dougherty's East Lounge from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m., which attracted a "full house," according to Leahy. "Everyone seemed to be having a good time." Mark Rupprecht, coordinator of the Student Government ad hoc Committee to Restore Social Life on Campus, also felt that "those who attended already know how successful this policy can be."

The future success of the policy is still up to the students, according to Leahy. "There can be a party on campus for everyone, every weekend." Leahy is encouraging the school organizations to take advantage of this new opportunity and use it following the proper guidelines to offer a social life on campus for everyone. "Alcohol will be available for those legally of age, while those under the drinking age will still be able to attend the same event on campus."

Rupprecht will be sending out a letter to inform students of the new alcohol policy and to explain in detail its guidelines. Also, his committee is in the process of arranging a date for Schulman to come on campus and speak to a general assembly about the Pennsylvania alcohol laws and how they affect students who are or are not legally able to drink alcohol. These steps being taken are, according to Rupprecht, to fulfill the goals the Committee to Restore Social Life on Campus set out to accomplish.

Schulman also offered his service to Cabrini College, which had an alcohol policy predicament similar to that which Villanova faced. Cabrini College has successfully initiated a policy similar to Villanova's.

Students March for Life

By DIANA K. SUGG

On Monday 43 Villanova students traveled to Washington, D.C., to participate in the annual March for Life, protesting the 1973 Supreme Court decision that effectively legalized abortion.

Over half the group who attended are members of the Villanovans for Life, the pro-life [illegible] which sponsored the trip.

The group arrived in Washington around noon to join thousands of others in a day of general protest. After listening to speakers at the Ellipse, the field in front of the Capitol, they started off on the three-mile march that passed the White House, and for the first time, the Supreme Court. At the Capitol, where they finished the march, the group split to lobby with their respective congressmen by signing petitions, attending meetings, and, if possible, talking directly to their representatives.

Mary Duff, president of the Villanovans for Life, described the march as much more than a political move. Besides trying to reverse the Jan. 22, 1973, decision in the case of Roe v. Wade, it showed the unity of the movement and gave the individuals involved a moral boost, she noted.

"You have a feeling that you're serving a purpose," commented Duff. She described it as "exhilarating" to see how all the small pro-life groups add up and that "the movement is going someplace."

Although the March for Life culminates the year for the Villanovans for Life, Duff stressed that the group does not focus only on the abortion issue.

"We believe strongly in the value of life for everyone," she stated, and toward this idea they try to reach out to those whose right to life is being threatened.

This year they are sponsoring the Blood Drive on Feb. 1-3. In the past they have done the publicity for Hunger Awareness Week, and they currently visit nursing homes on a regular basis. They also try to keep informed on major issues through films and slide presentations.

This month marks the organization's tenth year on campus, with a current enrollment of fifty members. Duff described members as possessing a "strong sense of the moral value of the right to life," as well as a "willingness to take action on their beliefs." Freshman member Rich Buus commented that "those of us who are marching think life is sacred."

Sponsored by Dr. Joseph Betz of the philosophy department, the Villanovans for Life are members of many state and national pro-life groups, including the National Right to Life and the Intercollegiate Federation for Life.

The group subsidized the trip for members, and charged $3 for non-members.

Marital Rape Debate Held

By PAULA SOLLAMI

A debate on whether or not a man should have the legal right to rape his wife was held on Tuesday night in the Radnor-St. David's room of the Connelly Center.

Speaker Lynn Marks, executive director of Women Organized Against Rape and co-author of a book entitled Every Woman's Legal Guide, spoke on behalf of the liberal side and stated that the raping of one's wife should indeed be considered a crime.

Marks explained that rape is a brutal act and is "motivated by anger and hostility." She continued that "the same drive that motivates a man to rape a stranger is the same thing that motivates a man to rape his wife."

In fact, Marks stresses that marital rape is perhaps more violent than rape by a stranger because a woman loses all trust in her husband. Not only is she forced to cope with being raped, she is also [illegible] to [illegible] the rapist.

Marks cited examples of several rape cases she has been involved with through her legal work and present position as executive director. She recalled that one women was sexually assaulted by her husband in their shower stall and would not threaten to leave him for fear of her life. Another woman was held at gunpoint by her husband and ordered to perform sexual intercourse in front of a family friend.

Marks explained, however, that there are conservatives who still hold fast to the notion that it is not a crime for a man to rape his wife. She said that these people follow the traditional beliefs that a woman is the property of her husband, and that by signing a marriage contract a woman has agreed to participate in sexual activity with her spouse.

Finally, Marks said that some believe that, since marriage unites two people into one person, a man who rapes his wife cannot be found guilty -- she is an extension of himself.

These arguments were discussed by the liberal leader for the panel, John Davis, and by moderate leader, Michelle Testen. Davis labelled the conservative viewpoint as "caveman pseudo-argumentation." While Testen asked the logical question that if the actual act of rape is a nationally-recognized crime, shouldn't everyone who commits the crime be punished equally? She asked why there is a discrepency between the rapist from the streets and the rapist who brutally attacks his own wife. Both, she stated, are acting in a hostile fashion.

Although there have not been many court cases involving marital rape in the fifteen states that have made it illegal, this issue is quickly growing more controversial. Marks concluded that the right of a woman to take her husband to court for rape will most likely be made law in many more states, including Pennsylvania, within the next ten years.

Blue Key

Blue Key recruitment is taking place now. Applications are available in the Student Activities office. They are due by Jan. 30 at 5 p.m. Also sign up for an interview.

WKVU News Openings

Interested in broadcasting News to the Villanova Campus? WKVU Radio currently has openings on its news team and is looking for students to broadcast news on the air. For more information, please attend a meeting on Jan. 31 at 6:30 p.m. in the WKVU studios located on the second floor of Dougherty Hall.

Basketball Marathon

Alpha Phi Delta Fraternity at Villanova University would like to announce its First Annual Basketball Marathon, Feb. 10 at 8 p.m. in the Field House. The fraternity will field a team of five on the court for 24 hours and will play a different team each hour for the duration of the marathon. There will be a $25.00 entrance fee per team with all proceeds being donated to the Children's Hospital of Philadelphia. The marathon will begin with Alpha Phi Delta battling against the WCAU "Hot Shots."

All teams interested in playing and sponsors interested in donating to our cause should notify John Adams at (215) 265-6937 no later than Feb. 5.

Retreat

Anyone who would like to be a part of the student team for planning the Easter Retreat April 18 to 20, please come to the first meeting Jan. 30 at 8 p.m. in Campus Ministry.

Liturgy

The Sunday Morning liturgical music groups are searching for volunteer singers and instrumental performers for the Sunday liturgies. If interested, see Fr. Shawn Tracy in Campus Ministry.

Crisis of Truth

University Christian Outreach will present Ralph Martin's challenging five part video program "A Crisis of Truth." This series takes a probing and insightful look into the condition of the Catholic Church today and points out many areas where ordinary Catholics can make a difference in the renewal of the Church. The series begins Feb. 1 in Dougherty West Lounge at 8 p.m.

Auditions

Auditions have been announced for Villanova Theatre's spring production of Shakespeare's A Midsummer Night's Dream. They will be held Feb. 5 at 1-5 p.m. and 6-10 p.m. in Vasey Theatre. Callbacks will be held Feb. 6 from 7:30-11 p.m. Call 645-4760 or stop by Vasey 106 for information on appointments and audition requirements.

Knights of Columbus

The Knights of Columbus of Villanova will have an information meeting Feb. 6 at 8:30 p.m. in Dougherty North Lounge. All young men are cordially invited.

German Documentary

The Triumph of the Will, the controversial German film, will be the first of three documentaries to be shown this February in Villanova University's Cultural Film, Mini-Series, "The Factual Film: The Whole Truth and Nothing But . . ?" Triumph will be shown at 7 p.m. Feb. 1 in the Connelly Center Cinema. Dr. Joan Lynch, series chairperson and professor of theatre and film at Villanova, will lead a discussion following the film entitled "Iconography and Ideology." Admission to the film is free.

Triumph of the Will has been called the "supreme propaganda film of all time," and its director, Leni Riefenstahl, is acknowledged as having been one of the most brilliant practitioners in the field. Commissioned by Adolph Hitler as a commemoration of the 1934 Nuremberg rallies, it is both a horrifying and compelling testimony to the power of film.

"The Factual Film" series explores the way in which the non-fiction film shapes and illuminates history. The American documentary, "In the Year of the Pig," will be the next film to be shown. Call 645-7262 for further information.

Alpha Phi Omega

Looking for a fraternity that offers more than just a social program? Then look at Alpha Phi Omega. Our program consists of a unique combination of service and social events that makes us a distinctive fraternity. For more information, stop by at any one of our RUSH meetings at 8 p.m. in the Haverford Room of the Connelly Center Jan. 30, Feb. 2 or Feb. 7.

Softball Meeting

Attention anyone interested in trying out for the women's varsity softball team. Tryouts will be held on Feb. 1, 2, 3 from 5:15 to 6:15 p.m. in the Butler Annex adjacent to the Villanova Fieldhouse. Candidates are reminded to bring their own softball gloves to the tryout.

Refrigerator Rentals

The RSA will be renting refrigerators on Jan. 30 from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. in the RSA office, Dougherty 215. Those interested in renting a refrigerator may do so at this time. For more information contact the RSA office. (telephone number: 645-7210)

Pre-Law Society

Student Magazine Starts Anew

By GARY R. DYER

A group of Villanova students is working to start a campus literary magazine to replace the defunct Lynx.

Nominal editor-in-chief Kevin Taylor will soon submit a budget request to Student Activities. "I have a fund that's specifically set up for new groups," said Lucyna Gorski, director of Student Activities. "They are seen now as a new group forming, not as the Lynx."

The 1982-83 editor-in-chief of the Lynx, Robert Benincasa, neglected to submit a budget last March for the 1983-84 academic year, according to Dr. Vincent Sherry, the adviser for the magazine.

"He may not have felt the urgency to submit a budget because he and his editors were graduating," Sherry said.

Kevin Taylor, nominal editor-in-chief of literary magazine

Maria Cocco, now a senior, was elected editor-in-chief for this year in the fall of 1982. "She couldn't submit a budget for when she would be editor because she was taking a semester in London," Sherry explained.

"This is the first time I've been with the literary magazine that this has happened," commented Gorski.

"What they would get from Student Activities is whatever money is available," explained Gorski.

This fall Cocco and interested students had several meetings, but "there was a total lack of communication because we didn't feel we were working on any project," said Bernadette McFadden, who was to handle business and advertising.

"Money's not an unworkable problem," according to Taylor. "We're submitting a budget for next semester."

At a meeting of staff and interested individuals Tuesday night, Taylor said that they could put out a magazine this year comparable in cost to the old Lynx, pending work from Student Activities.

The Lynx had an annual budget of about $2,000, with which the staff, almost all of whom now have graduated, produced one issue per semester.

Taylor had not even met the group's adviser, Sherry, until Tuesday night. "Most of what we've been doing has been stuff which hasn't required his approval. It's just that since we didn't have a magazine, there wouldn't be much to talk about," said Taylor.

Benincasa had been the editor-in-chief of the Lynx for three years. "He was the editor when I first became their adviser in 1981," said Sherry. "I think there was a perception created that the staff of the Lynx was not as open to diversity of talent as it might have been. I don't think that perception was true, but it was prevalent."

The Lynx constitution has been revised in three areas to accommodate the new magazine. The name has been changed tentatively to the Villanova Literary Arts Magazine; some editorial positions have been consolidated; and the magazine has been opened up to graduate students (the Lynx was previously limited to undergraduates).

The magazine now has an office in St. Mary's Hall, and some material has been submitted for publication.

Cocco has "stepped back," according to Taylor. "At the meetings last semester she and I were leading things along."

Gorski emphasized that more systematic approach was expected of an organization. "Their budget won't be accepted until they have sat down and talked with Dr. Sherry, nor will they get very far in the process," she said.

Taylor plans to attempt to receive money from private businesses, as they did, unsuccessfully, last semester.

"I know nothing about getting outside money," commented Sherry, "and I disapprove of it, because I think that with it much time is spent for very little reward."

Taylor plans for the magazine to issue some short leaflets, "distributing them on separate occasions until we get a magazine going, so people will know we're still active."

Literary Couple Speaks

Silkin Reads Poetry

By AMELIA McGOVERN

Famous British poet Jon Silkin read from his poetry in the Connelly Center Cinema Jan. 25.

In introducing Silkin, Dr. Vincent Sherry, assistant professor of English, pointed out, "Silkin is one of the very few contemporary poets to be included in the Norton Anthology. 99 percent have been long dead."

Silkin, from Newcastle, England, has published 12 books of verse. He is editor of the influential literary magazine STAND, along with his wife, author Lorna Tracy.

He started his presentation by reading a poem from his first volume, PEACEABLE KINGDOM, called "Caring for Animals."

One of the highlights of the reading was his poem "Death of a Son who Died in a Mental Hospital, Age One." The poem is about his first child, who, as the title states, died in a mental hospital as a baby.

He read a second poem about his son, Adam, called "The Child." This was written six years after the child's death and is written from a different perspective from the first poem about Adam.

He read many poems with other subjects such as "Defenses," about the atom bomb in the sixties, two poems from a group of poems he calls the "cemetery poems," and "The Coldness," about the 1190 massacre of Jews in England.

His poems are often about personal experience. Much of his work is political, but the undertones of this are personal, too.

Silkin closed with "The Maker", about the component of the human being which is in all of us.

Over 100 people showed for the one hour reading.

There was a reception in the English Department office following the reading.

Tracy Reads Current Works

Lorna Tracy, author and editor

By AMELIA McGOVERN

Lorna Tracy, American-born author and editor, read from her works in the North Lounge of Dougherty Hall Jan. 24. The presentation was hosted by Villanova's Women Studies Forum.

The works from which Tracy read included two short stories, "The Birdskin Cabinet" and "Bridger's Moth." "Bridger's Moth" is from her first collected volume of short stories titled "Amateur Passion love stories?" published in England in 1981 and which became available in the United States last summer.

She also read the opening chapter of her first novel, which is still unfinished. The novel is to be released in England sometime next year.

Tracy opened her presentation by explaining, "I'm a writer, not a speaker. Do you mind if I read from my works?" The audience apparently enjoyed this.

Tracy currently resides in England. "I've become more fond of the United States since I've lived there. I wish there was a way I could spend half my time there and half in England." She lives with her husband, poet Jon Silkin.

Tracy was born in Oregon, raised in Idaho, and educated at the University of Denver, CO. She met Silkin at the Univer sity of Iowa and returned with him to England. At the time she planned to be there for one year.

Her stories are "love stories about women wanting men and men wanting women and their hopeless and hilarious engagements," claims the biography page of "Amateur Passions."

Zeta Psi Introduced

By N. JOHN CAVUTO

On Jan. 19 Zeta Psi became the 13th fraternity at the university, with an initial membership of 34 pledges.

The fraternity, originally founded in 1847 at New York University, was the first fraternity to become international, forming a chapter at the University of Toronto in 1879. Famous members of Zeta Psi include Chevy Chase, Roscoe Tanner, Red Grange and Henry Ford II.

The new chapter is planned as both a social and service fraternity. The pledges of Zeta Psi thought at first that they were going to be members of Chi Phi, when in September Chi Phi, working through Jim Hughes, the current president of Zeta Psi, attempted to start a new fraternity on campus. Hughes began by convincing his friends of the benefits of a new fraternity on campus.

With the help of Dr. Richard Neville, vice president for student life, it was proposed at an Inter-Fraternity Council meeting that the temporary freeze on new fraternities be lifted to make room for the proposed chapters.

After the Inter-Fraternity Council voted to lift the freeze, the administration approached the interested students and told them that because Chi Phi had not contacted the University about starting a new fraternity as other prospective fraternities had, they should examine all options before reaching a decision on which fraternity they would begin on campus. They chose Zeta Psi because as fraternity member, Dave Patzer stated, "Zeta Psi would be the most beneficial to our particular group as a whole. Their ideas and goals paralleled our interests."

This semester will feature the first pledge class from Zeta Psi at Villanova University. Member Tom Bennett, commenting on what Zeta Psi has to offer Villanova University, said: "Zeta Psi will strive to better some aspects of Villanova life and also work on various projects to brighten the lives of those less fortunate than ourselves."

Bus Service Considered

By VINCENT RAIMONDI

The 1980 off-campus residents of Villanova University received Student Bus Service surveys over the past Christmas break, and their answers will greatly influence the decision on beginning the development of a student bus service for commuters, according to Janine Alfono, nursing senator of the Student Government.

The surveys were sent out the first week of January and were to be returned to either the Office of the Association of Commuting Students or the Student Government Office by Tuesday.

As of Monday, 362 surveys were completed and returned. Although the number of returned surveys is below expectations, the results of those surveys returned seem promising and show that off-campus residents indeed feel a bus service is needed and would be used, Alfono said.

Of the 362 off-campus residents who returned surveys, 255 felt a bus service was needed. Those surveyed also said they would use the bus service most during the day, when most University classes are held, and least during the weekend. Most were willing to pay a nominal fee if the service were not totally subsidized by the University. Of the proposed bus stops listed on the survey, Sugartown Mews in Strafford and Lancaster Ave. in Wayne and Bryn Mawr were the most popular choices.

The idea of a student bus service was organized by four people — each from different organizations within the University. Alfono, Doug McKeever of the A.S.C., Brian Connors, executive vice president of Student Life, and Dan Capodilupo, arts senator of Student Government, were the main contributors to the writing of the survey. It is they who will determine whether or not a bus service is necessary and feasible.

Alfono emphasized the importance of having a bus that "not only travels along Lancaster Ave., but goes different places as well." She also mentioned that one goal of the bus service was to be inexpensive, less expensive than the $.75-$2.00 rate charged by the SEPTA buses running along Lancaster Ave. If the service goes into effect, it would save much parking space on campus.

The survey is just the first step in starting the bus service, if it develops at all. The next step in the process involves obtaining estimates from bus companies as to how much a bus service would cost. Depending on the results of the survey and the estimates, a bus system may service the Villanova community.

Fitness Center Proposed

By JOHN A. O'DONNELL

Villanova's Educational Programs Committee, designed to create educational programs for University students, organized a Health Subcommittee last semester.

The subcommittee (HSC), consisting of one student, two staff members and one faculty member, seeks to provide health programs previously neglected by other student organizations.

According to Lucyna Gorski, director of Student Activities, the HSC had its first formal meeting Dec. 10 at which they decided that the HSC would like to provide a Fitness Testing Center for students, staff and faculty of the Villanova Community.

The center would include a Fitron bike to test for the subject's blood pressure, body fat, heart rate and oxygen consumption. ATRA Nautilus Center has agreed to provide the bikes for the testing, which will be given, at no cost, to anyone here.

The HSC also plans to provide a Nutrition Exposition during the Resident Student Association-sponsored Wellness Week. The Nutrition Exposition is scheduled to include speakers on nutrition, booths with samples of nutritional foods and advice on ways to stay healthy and change eating habits, a major problem among college students.

The HSC would like to conclude the semester with panels of speakers on health and how to achieve mental and physical health. This activity is still tentative and specific speakers have not been determined.

The HSC plans to participate in the Student Nurse's Association's Health Fair in the spring.

The Health Subcommittee faces a budget problem, however. Gorski feels it will not be a major problem as the University will provide the committee with the needed money, approximately $1500-$2000, so they can be successful in their series of programs.

Better Than BYOB

Finally, five months after the liquor conflict first became a hot issue, an apparent solution to the alcohol policy question has been reached at Villanova University. The newly-established guidelines, prepared by the ad hoc Committee to Restore Social Life on Campus and the Dean's Advisory Council, should satisfy the concerns of both legal age and underage students on campus.

Already instituted, the new policy allows any student organization to sponsor an on-campus party. The chief stipulation is that only those showing proper identification will be allowed to obtain alcohol at such an event. However, those Villanova students under 21 will still be permitted to enter the gathering.

These guidelines are a vast improvement over the BYOB approach once thought as the answer to the social life problem at the University. Although a Dec. 2 BYOB holiday semi-formal ran without any major incidents, it did nothing to ease Administration concerns over liability; under BYOB provisions, civil liability remained in the hands of the school, as well as the students running the event.

With the new approach, liability shifts to those students who might serve the alcohol to minors. In such a scenario, only the individual is held responsible.

And that is exactly what those involved with the alcohol issue have been pushing for all along: a move toward student responsibility. Thus, the success or failure of the social life no longer hinges on the Administration,, but rather on the student body.

The first test came on Jan. 21 at an Austin Hall-sponsored party adhering to the new regulations. The event ran successfully, thus opening up the possibility for future such gatherings on campus. As Student Body President Patrick Leahy indicated this week, "There can be a party on campus for everyone, every weekend."

More good news: Students can expect to receive information on the policy and its implications in the near future. Mark Rupprecht, coordinator of the ad hoc committee, plans to send an explanatory letter to undergraduates. In addition, Pennsylvania Assistant District Attorney Arthur Schulman, instrumental in hammering out the policy's details, is expected to address students in a few weeks.

These are all positive steps, factors contributing to what we see as quite an adequate solution to the problem. It is now the student body's responsibility to determine its fate.

The Big Chill

One way of interpreting Lawrence Kasdan's "The Big Chill" is to see the film as involving a certain lost idealism. Michael, Sam, Harold and the rest all realize that the hopes and dreams formed in their college days have since crumbled under the strains of the everyday "real" world.

It is easy, then, to criticize these characters, especially since they do acknowledge their resignation but basically refuse to change their habits. Yet, we should not do so without first reflecting on how we, the audience, fit into the scene. To what extent, we may ask, do we as college students resemble those very characters as they are at age 30?

The "little resignations" appear everywhere, especially when the events which could hold so much importance tend to fade away as issues no longer holding any news value.

On Monday, for instance, only forty or so Villanovans found it worth their while to participate in the annual March for Life in Washington, D.C., despite the Villanovans for Life's efforts to publicize the event around the University. On Tuesday, very few bothered to attend the Political Union's debate on whether or not a man should have the legal right to rape his wife. Apparently, not many found that issue of importance either. Likewise, a British author spoke on Tuesday, but less than twenty people bothered to listen.

Kasdan's characters at least formulated and expressed their concerns while in college. It seems as if most of us will never even get that far.

The Villanovan will print "Letters to the Editor" received prior to the deadline, Tuesday at 5 p.m. All letters must be signed, although the editors will withhold a name upon request. Because of limited space, not all letters can be printed.

Letters to the Editor

In Defense of Jacksonville

To the Editor:

Dear Joe Marusak,

This is in reference to your article on Jacksonville, Fla., in the Jan. 20 issue of the Villanovan. You can't criticize a whole city just because it was your mistake in forgetting your ticket or your press pass. Also, you can't base an opinion of Jacksonville on a two-day visit during the winter.

Believe it or not, Northern Florida does get cold during winter. Don't expect to sit on a 50-or 60-degree beach in December and get a burn which would be gone in three days. Go to Jacksonville during spring or summer and you'll see the light.

It seems that if you forget your ticket or press pass in going to Philadelphia, you would walk around and call it a city to forget. So, how can you blame a city for your misfortunes?

Brian Zuchowski
Class of 1984

To the Editor:

After reading your article, "Jacksonville is no Fun," I felt compelled to write a response. I was not only enraged but also embarrassed that the editor-in-chief of our newspaper could come to such subjective conclusions about a major city based simply on the weather and the outcome of a basketball game.

After years of being greatly entertained by our team, I would gladly take the opportunity to see them, win or lose. It is reprehensible that you, a representative of this school, wrote an article on the team and had absolutely nothing good to say. Let's hope you do not represent the typical Villanova fan.

As far as the ridicule on Jacksonville, I feel the tragedy is yours. It is a shame that in one of the country's largest cities you could not find anything to do just because the sun did not shine. Let's pray that this is not a reflection on our social life here. As a matter of fact, the only enjoyment I got out of this article was that you got rained on and my trip to Jacksonville over the break had nothing but sunshine.

Football Candidate

Editor's Note: The following letter was addressed to the department of athletics at Villanova University. It is dated Jan. 5, 1984.

Dear Sir:

My name is George J. Andrush Jr. and I am a 6-foot one-inch, 205-pound senior at Scranton Preparatory School, Scranton, Pa.

I have heard that you are reinstating football and would like to be considered as a candidate.

Although I have not decided on a major, I like the field of Engineering. My SAT scores ar 550 Verbal and 660 Math. While at Prep, I have taken accelerated Math, English, Physics, Chemistry and Spanish along with Latin, Greek and Religion. My rank in a class of 185 is 5. I have received two gold medals and 5 bronze medals for excellence in class. During my junior year, I became a member of the National Honor Society and Who's Who Among American High School Students. I am also a member of the Society of Distinguished American High School Students.

During my four years at Prep, I participated in their football program under Coach Phil Angeli. I lettered in my junior and senior years playing offensive guard and defensive tackle and was All Scholastic (honorable mention). Although we made it into the Class B Playoffs, we lost to Hanover Area.

Coach Angeli does have films available if you would like to view them.

Looking forward to hearing from you soon.

George J. Andrush, Jr.

'Resignation'

To the Editor:

I read your story last week on the resignation of Coach Graff. Through no fault of your own, you have printed a story that is not totally true. The contributions that Coach Graff made to Villanova's soccer program are unmeasurable and your accounts of these accomplishments are accurate. But the fact remains that Howard Graff did not resign. His contract was not renewed. In effect, he was fired.

Had Coach Graff been reached for comment, he could have told you this himself. Why is it that so many departments in the University are afraid to tell the public the truth? I see this as just another attempt to sweep the truth under the rug and away from the public. The Athletic Department has just joined those ranks.

Clint Grimes

The writer was an assistant to Howard Graff last season.

On-Campus Pub

My four years here at Villanova have seen many changes and improvements in the University. In order to satisfy present housing and recreational needs, as well as increase the academic standing of the University, such ventures as the construction of two new dormitory buildings and a new field house, the renovation of classroom buildings, the acquisition of computing, science and engineering equipment, and the restoration of football have either taken place or are presently in progress.

Yet their efforts should not stop here. The University should recognize the importance and desirability of the social aspects of an education and vitalize its ailing social atmosphere.

With the improvement of academics, recreational and structural facilities, Villanova should include an on-campus pub for faculty and students of legal age.

Many people may feel that an on-campus bar would provide a distraction to the students and possibly put an unnaturally large emphasis on alcohol. This seems reasonable as many college-age people are irresponsible with alcohol.

However, Pennsylvania's twenty-one-year-old legal drinking age would restrict this facility primarily to juniors and seniors. Additionally, the fact that some are irresponsible with alcohol is not a logical reason to restrict alcohol's legal use, nor is it a reason not to recognize its existence.

By making the school more desirable in terms of increasing the quality of the social life, a pub could indirectly attract more and better-abled applicants to the University. Having a larger number of qualified students to choose from, Villanova could improve its already competitive, intellectual climate and further stimulate the learning environment, resulting in a higher quality education. Tour groups of interested high school seniors would no longer be greeted by the half-serious shouts of "Don't go here!" from discontented students, but rather by smiles and honest encouragement from satisfied students.

Villanova could unshackle its image as a "second choice" school by drawing qualified students who prefer Villanova over all other colleges. There would even be some truth added to the once common T-shirt slogan, "Notre Dame is the Villanova of the Midwest."

An increase in the maturity and the morale of the student body would be noticeable with the installation of a pub. Students, like any one else, react favorably when granted new privileges. The students would appreciate the University's demonstration of faith in them and thus show their gratitude in the form of increased school pride, which would decrease thoughtless and irrational acts such as vandalism. The basic belief that "if you treat people like grown-ups, they will act like grown-ups," holds true here.

The provision of a social gathering place would relieve the library of its social strains. Presently, Falvey Library is overrun with giddy girls and obnoxious guys who have no better purpose at the library than to see who is there and talk at noise levels well above a whisper. The problem is of such proportion that many a serious student can be found in the much quieter student union, the Connelly Center. Evidently the attraction of video games in the Connelly Center gameroom is not great enough for socially motivated students to congregate there.

With the existence of a pub, the serious atmosphere required for an effective study place such as the library could be restored. Aimless students (who should not be here) could flock to the pub early without distracting the serious ones. The serious students would be less likely to procrastinate knowing how nice a beer would be after a hard night of studying.

Students and faculty would be provided with the opportunity to interact on an informal basis if an on-campus bar were provided.

The public image of Villanova would be enhanced by the University's acceptance of the responsibility to provide a social climate for the students. No longer would the social demands of Villanova students be placed upon neighboring Main Line communities which are sometimes overrun by mobs of students. The few irresponsible students who become "too rowdy" in social situations are better off when dealt with by University judicial officials rather than by the local police departments.

By installing an on-campus pub, Villanova only stands to gain. The University would become more desirable to attend, the school could increase revenues without raising already high tuition rates, the intellectual and social aspects of student life would improve, and school spirit would replace apathy at Villanova.

On the other hand, the prudish refusal by the Augustinian-run University to recognize alcohol and social interaction on an adult level can only result in the increasing mediocrity of the University, thereby creating a haven of students who "couldn't get into Notre Dame."

percentage of the Villanova community is a pressing one. In our survey of faculty, staff, graduate, law and University College students, a large number of respondents wrote or telephoned us with spontaneous messages of support. Many indicated that they or people that they know had been unable to continue working or attending school at Villanova because of problems obtaining affordable, high quality child care.

We encourage Villanova University to support the members of its community who have young families by making an on-campus Child Care Center available. Twelve percent of the Villanovans in our survey indicated that they need and would use a Child Care Center, and this percentage can be expected to increase in the future. The importance of providing such search indicating that adequate child care improves the quality of life — including job satisfaction — for those people who need and use such services. If child care services were provided at Villanova, not only would those in need benefit, but recruitment efforts and several on-campus programs might be helped as well. While establishing a Child Care Center would require an initial investment of money and space, the ongoing Center programs should be self-supporting. We believe that the benefits to the Villanova community would far outweigh the costs.

Prof is a 'Person to Watch' in '84

By LAURA FORTUNATO

Philadelphia Magazine has cited Villanova's Dr. John Immerwahr as one of it's "84 People to Watch in 1984."

A professor of philosophy at the University for 10 years, Immerwahr was honored in the magazine's January issue for his publication titled "Putting the Work Ethic to Work: A Public Agenda Report on Restoring America's Competitive Vitality."

The booklet, which he co-authors with Daniel Yankelovich, a nationally known pollster, presents the findings of the Public Agenda Foundation's project on the U.S.'s work ethics and economic vitality. The project is part of "Jobs in the 1980s and 1990s," a 3 year study of work and economy in the United States, Britain, Sweden, Israel and West Germany.

The project zeros in on a neglected area of concern — the workplace, and, more specifically, the jobholder. The concept of discretionary effort is basic to the project's objective. Discretionary effort is, by definition, "the difference between the maximum amount of effort and care an individual could bring to his or her job, and the minimum amount of effort required to avoid being fired or penalized; in short, the proportion of one's effort over which a jobholder has the greatest control," he stated in his report.

The underlying objective of the project was to gain a better understanding of the worker's values, commitments, efforts surrounding his job, and, in turn, to maximize these ideas in order to create improved worker satisfaction, cohesion and production. For the United States, this would mean a more competitive edge for their industries and more competitive vitality.

"In recent years, we've seen a great deal of unemployment in the United States. The unemployment is accompanied by a lower productivity level, as compared to other countries, who own more plants and more sophisticated equipment. We particularly chose to study the human aspect of the workplace, a component which is under-utilized," commented Immerwahr adding, "We also explored ideas for turning the recovery of the present into progress for the future."

Some of the suggestions offered from the Public Agenda research include: providing public and tangible recognition to people who exceed standards of quality and effort, encouraging jobholders to participate with management in defining standards of performance and sharing productivity gains with employees. These are only a few of the suggestions for stimulating worker commitment and quality performance.

The recent publication represents years of schooling and experience that are accompanied by various other titles and awards. Immerwahr graduated summa cum laude from Princeton University and was awarded the McCosh Prize in Philosophy. Later, he received his masters and doctorate of philosophy at the University of Michigan. In 1976, 1977 and again in 1981, Immerwahr was awarded an Honorable Mention for Villanova's Lindback Award for Distinguished Teaching.

Immerwahr's teaching experiences have taken him to various colleges throughout the United States. Among the list is Stanford University, Oklahoma University, the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania, Adelphi University, Rutgers University, Haverford College and many others, including a lecturing tour of Australia.

The author has also published in the area of public policy and philosophy. Public policy deals with the humanistic perspective of business, science and technology. His list of works include: "Speaker and Listener," "Work and Human Values," "The World at Work," and "The Public Views South Africa."

Immerwahr's other publications in philosophy include "Berkeley's Casual Thesis," "The Failure of Hume's Treatise," "Descartes' Two Cosmological Proofs," "The Development of Reid's Realism," and various other reviews.

As a professor of philosophy, an author and a senior project consultant for the New York based Public Agenda Foundation, Immerwahr has still found time to actively participate in the Singing City Choir, as well as to serve on its board of directors. The professor has a new hobby which is also receiving a great deal of attention: "I am very interested in using and improving computer systems," he remarked.

Having spent a year away from Villanova University in order to complete the research for the publication, Immerwahr cites the University as contributing to his endeavors outside of the school. "I am grateful to the University for providing the flexibility needed to engage in the realm of study outside of the Villanova campus," he stated.

Reminiscing With Javers

(Second of a two-part series.)

By ANDY MILLER

After becoming dissatisfied with his situation, Ron Javers applied to several West Coast newspapers, and the San Francisco Chronicle offered him a job as Special Projects Writer, which he accepted, in 1977.

Ron Javers

At this time Proposition 13, the unprecedented taxpayers' revolt, was just beginning to get up steam in California, and Javers was assigned to it. It quickly became a huge story, and he traveled all over the country to cover all aspects of it.

"The re-election of Jerry Brown as governor was supposed to be the big story that year, but that quickly became a foregone conclusion," says Javers. "Thirteen became the big story — lead story on page one with two sidebar columns. I primarily wrote think pieces on it."

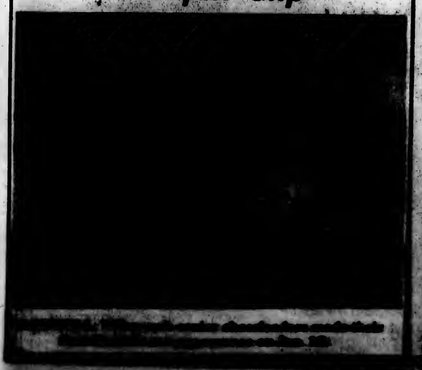
Soon after this, the managing editor of the Chronicle asked him to go to Jonestown, Guyana to investigate charges against People's Temple founder Jim Jones. He would accompany Congressman Leo J. Ryan.

"We spent the next five days in Guyana, with two at Jonestown. I found that many were insane. Later on, I got part of my shoulder shot off at the plane."

After Javers recovered, he wrote a book about his experience and traveled all over the world to promote it. It was published in nine languages and titled, The Suicide Cult: The Untold Story of the People's Temple and the Massacre in Guyana.

He wanted to come back to the East Coast so he called Philadelphia Magazine, to see if a job offer made to him before he left was still open. It was, so in 1980 he returned. He was named editor in May 1982. The circulation is currently about 140,000, including many transplanted Philadelphians.

Campus Clip



Candid, engaging and intelligent, Javers had some sound advice to offer to those of us still in school. "Stay in college," he advises. "I really feel sorry for kids because it's awful tough to get a good job now. School's much more vocation-oriented now than when I went in the '60s.

"Fond? Yes, I guess you could say I'm fond of Villanova. I remember the student body, and especially the Villanovan was always at odds with the administration, which was extremely conservative back then. But I think they came to really see the problems in the world."

And how did our own "el padre presidente," the Rev. Driscoll, make Philadelphia Magazine's top 400 Party-ers' list?

Javers laughed and said, "Actually, we listed who we thought were the most social, most publicly assessible figures in the area, and the Rev. Driscoll was considered very social, very active. It wasn't really the top partiers.

"The only problem I really have with Villanova is that the issues are rather small. When I was there, the big thing was food riots because the quality of the food was supposedly so bad. All this, while the Vietnam War and other problems were raging around the world.

"Now, the demonstrations about the alcohol policy are somewhat similar to that. Don't get me wrong — it's important to you, it's your social life, and you should speak up if you think it's wrong. But there are a lot of problems in the world today. College kids tend to be selfish; I'm sure I was when I was in school."

As students, Central America and the Middle East are problems we will eventually have to face. How does Javers, an experienced observer of foreign affairs, see these problems?

"The Middle East is incredibly complex. As long as we're seen as the bad guys, the imperialist pigs, by the Arab States and the Palestinians, we can never be peacemakers. We can't be peacemakers unless we're part of the problem. It hurts to see Lebanon gunfire. It's what would scare me most about

Penna. Schools Invade Studio 54

By KORY SPRAUER

The crowd pushed and shoved to get a glimpse of the entrance to 254 W. 54th St. in New York City, a site better known as the famous Studio 54 nightclub. In hopes of gaining free admission with an ad clipped from their respective college newspapers, students of Penn, Bucknell, Gettysburg, Dickinson, Franklin and Marshall and Villanova patiently waited to use these free passes which expired at 10:30 p.m. After 10:30, however, the charge is $8 per person. Little did we know that only about 100 ads would be honored, for the doors opened at approximately 10 p.m.

It's Dec. 27, 1983, around 9 p.m., and already the estimated 1500 Pennsylvania college students have formed a wall of people stretching for blocks in all directions to enjoy their college night at the club. Somehow, this huge crowd gelled together, mainly because everyone was packed so tightly that even the involuntary act of breathing became a calculated effort which was taken advantage of whenever one could gasp for air.

After realizing we'd be in this so-called line for quite a while, muttering comments of disapproval to one's neighbor became a favorite pastime of all involved. Many times, Villanovans were close at hand to console one another, which made the time tick by and the physical pain seem more tolerable.

As this point, however, were at, but at an excruciatingly slow pace. Surely this was intentional and didn't leave much hope to those who were eagerly waiting four blocks from the door. Blockades were trampled, and the police standing by must have temporarily forgotten their needed crowd control training.

Finally inside at 10:35, too late to reap the benefits of a free pass, a hard-earned 8 bucks was forked over. But if you are the claustrophobic type, your best bet would have been to turn around and head for the door. However, if you'd decided to stay, you would have found the atmosphere inside to be pumped with excitement and holiday cheer. Familiar faces were everywhere, which was comforting when one became overwhelmed by the size of the club itself.

Studio 54 however, is a renovated theater. Much has been left untouched, such as its balconies and many of the original seats, which remain on the club's uppermost level. Bars, serving small, expensive drinks, are on every floor. All carpeting is clad with millions of tiny sparkles. The large dance floor, which is down on the lowest level, is perhaps smaller than one might expect of a club which holds Studio 54's fame as a hotspot.

Nevertheless, the lights and contemporary disco, punk rock, pop, and anything goes music make your trip to the dance floor (which isn't as pleasant as it sounds) an experience that is packed with excitement and

A Fantasy Glimpse of the V.U. Bond

By CAROLYN MILLER

A funny thing happened to me during winter break. At the annual family Christmas party, my automatic reply to approving nods and arched eyebrows was, "Yes, I attend Villanova." However, when one distant relative stepped forward and asked, "Can we talk?" I knew the usual cocktail party conversation was to become quite unusual.

Moving closer, my curious relative looked me in the eyes and asked, "What's your fantasy?"

"Excuse me?" I whispered as I choked on my Chablis. "I'm not sure I understand."

"You know," he continued, "the Villanova Fantasy . . . what is it?"

"Oh! The Villanova Fantasy!" I exclaimed, quite relieved, "What is the Villanova Fantasy?"

To my question this pondering fellow further probed, "Why do you like Villanova? What makes all of you Villanovans? What is the common bond you all share? Why is there such team spirit at a Cats' basketball game?

"Oh!" I exclaimed again, "By the Villanova Fantasy, you mean why we all 'belong!' " Spotting a gleam of recognition in his eyes I continued, "That's easy; after spending four years and at least $35,000 here, I can tell you what the Villanova Fantasy is."

"Now we're talking," replied my relative.

The Villanova Fantasy begins the first day you set foot on campus. It is filled with "ice breakers" and orientation acquaintances you will know until the day you graduate. It entails standing in those endless lines at the bookstore at the start of each semester.

The Villanova Fantasy is your nine-digit social security number that is printed on every piece of information you receive from the registrar's office. It consists of your mid-term grades, which always arrive at home the same weekend you do.

The Villanova Fantasy involves many people, such as the business majors who rule Bartley or the science majors who rule Mendel. From all walks of life, the Villanova Fantasy consists of the "preppies," the "punkers" and any combination thereof.

The Villanova Fantasy is the friends you select to room with or celebrate the weekend with at Kelly's on a Friday afternoon. It is trying to study on the fourth floor of Falvey during finals. It is the traffic jams in the parking lots. It is getting a seat at the 6 p.m. Sunday mass in the Main Chapel.

The essence of this fantasy is the Villanova decal placed in the

By Arthur B. Crabtree, Jr. Vault.

The following statements are reflections and crucial considerations on war and peace.

1. Peace, understood not merely as the absence of war, but as the presence of shalom (well-being, soundness in all respects), is the greatest good (summum bonum).
2. War is a great evil. Nuclear war is the greatest evil since it would destroy life on earth.
3. Peace as shalom requires justice. The two are joined in the Old Testament (e.g. Ps. 85:10; Is. 32:17) and in current Christian teaching (Peace and Justice).
4. Now that the whole biosphere is menaced with death, peace and justice must be understood ecologically as the well-being of the whole biosphere (life and its environment).
5. Current U.S. policy in Latin America is unjust, since it oppresses the weak and poor.
6. It is this oppression, supported by the United States, which is the primary root of unrest in Latin America, not Communism as alleged by the Reagan administration.
7. In the interest of justice, and the peace which depends on justice, U.S. policy in Latin America (and the Philippines) must be reversed. No more intervention.
8. Either the human race will end the arms race, or the arms race will end the human race — and very soon.
9. The only way to end the arms race is by a halt (freeze) in the production, testing, and deployment of arms, followed by rapid reduction. The Reagan build-up-to-build-down is a fraud. The Soviets have repeatedly proposed a real freeze and build down. Why does Reagan disagree? Because he wants to continue building new counterforce, first strike weapons which threaten nuclear holocaust.
10. It is precisely this new counterforce, first strike weapons which threaten nuclear holocaust.
11. Nuclear holocaust could result from (a) escalation of conventional war to nuclear, (b) deployment of counterforce weapons which can easily destroy "enemy" weapons, and therefore provoke "launch on warning" with the inevitable eventual false warning, (c) a deliberate first strike, which the U.S.S.R. has renounced, but the United States has not.
12. The deployment of counterforce weapons, such as Pershing II's and cruise missiles in Europe immensely increase the danger of nuclear war, since the Pershing II's can reach Russia in about seven minutes; the Soviets will launch on warning (both against the United States and Europe) and there will be insufficient time to correct a false warning.
13. Accordingly, the United States should cease deployment of these Euromissiles.
14. Nuclear war can neither be limited nor won.
15. U.S. policy regarding the U.S.S.R. should shift from confrontation to reconciliation, from hate to love. Either we will learn to live together or we will die together, and so will the rest of life on earth.

Here's something to keep in mind while preparing your spring break trip. Prior to accepting any package tour, be sure to request the total amount you must pay. Many packages are deceptive and follow a practice called "lowballing." Currently the Civil Aeronautics Board (CAB) has been petitioned to enforce some "truth in tour promotion" requirement. Many packages show amazingly low prices which exclude so-called "add-ons" such as taxes, tips, and service charges. This practice of "lowballing" makes it difficult to comparison shop and is deceptive. Under the proposed requirement, the CAB will prohibit add-ons or additionally stating charges separately from the package price. All air service, tour packages and scheduled flights will be covered by this ruling.

The Consumer Federation of America is searching for an answer to limit bands from placing a "hold" on a deposited check until it has cleared. If funds have been available to you from 5 to 15 days, then you have also experienced the delayed availability problem, which makes you one of 5 million Americans, according to a 1983 Federal Reserve survey.

Banks argue that they are aiming at the prevention of losses on returned checks. However, only one percent of all deposited checks are returned due to insufficient funds. Furthermore, these returned checks are usually of smaller amounts and represent an infinitesimal fraction of all bank funds transferred. Banks can further limit this fraction by implementing selective check holding policies which do not penalize every depositer.

Banks usually do not do this for an obvious reason. Banks receive provisional credit usually in one day for local checks and in two days on out-of-state checks. We can clearly see the discrepancy between the time the bank and the depositor each receive credit.

During this discrepant period, the bank invests your funds and since you do not have credit for them for a few extra days, you are loaning the bank your money at no-interest. When can you receive a no-interest loan from a bank?

A solution has been presented which would require banks to disclose held periods and limit such disclosures to a proposed standard. Secondly, the check clearning process currently utilized is outmoded. Checks are returned to the original bank by mail through each individual institution it has passed on its route there, rather than mailing directly to the original bank by courier or by means of some electronic system. Additionally, these intermediate institutions process checks manually, rather than employing high speed check reading machines.

Due to these inadequacies in the check clearing process, legislation has been proposed to correct such an inequitable situation. Although Sen. Thomas Dodd of Connecticut has introduced such legislation to the Senate Banking Subcommittee (S 573), a federal check holding law may never be passed. However, hope for the consumer may still lie with the state legislatures. As a consumer tired of both the unfair treatment of one's credit line and the offering of no-interest loans to your bank, you should take action and write your state senator and representative in support of the ideas underlying S 573.

If you have any further questions, please bring them to the Consumer Affairs Research Board in Bartley 331.

"In Central America, the distinction between the 'haves' and the 'have-nots' is very sharp. The landholders, in many cases, have had that land in their families for many generations.

"Here, we're also perceived as the bad guys, although America should lead the way. We should set an example to show the Soviets the superiority of our system. It is an historical problem."

So is the key to success, but Ron Javers has solved that problem.

causes your heart to beat along with the tunes. Pulsing, rotating lights, comparable to those atop police cars, set the mood along with sirens and colorful displays on a huge screen, completely covering a wall of the theater. The Michael Jackson-Paul McCartney video for their hit "Say, Say, Say" was shown on this movie screen, and was quite impressive.

The lines at the various bars scattered throughout the nightclub weren't as bad as one might expect, yet those to the restrooms left much to be desired. A 45 to 60 minute wait for the ladies room lends one's self to buying a drink and proceeding directly to wait in line. (On second thought, maybe it would have been wise to buy two drinks, just in case). To my knowledge, there were four restrooms (two for men, and two for ladies), which hardly accommodate a building with the capacity of Studio 54.

After a few more dances, you realize it is getting late, and perhaps it is time to go home. As you approach the coat check, you notice a couple has just arrived and are paying at the door. "But isn't it 2:30 a.m.?" one might ask. These are the people known as night owls, who dance until dawn and close the nightclub at 7 or 8 a.m.

As we left, we were handed a card which explained that if we presented it tomorrow before 10:30 p.m., we would receive free admission for two. Wonderful! But haven't we heard this offer somewhere before? Would the doors really open in time for all holders to use their free passes? Probably not.

Silent Menace on Campus

By PAUL DONVITO

The story I am about to relate to you is the sad but true tale of the Villanova senior who asked only for peace, justice and the fulfillment of his core requirements. The following journal entries have reprinted with the unspoken permission of the author, as a final testimonial to the mental traumas inflicted upon him by a coalition of mad psychologists and the registrar's office. Is this reality or just a cruel joke?

11 a.m. — I was awakened by a loud knock at my door. It was the mailman. Into my hand he placed a letter, postmarked Philadelphia, Pa. My deepest fears surfaced as I glanced at the return address — Czar of Registration, Villanova University. As I read, my hands began to shake and my eyes watered. Could it be true? Could all my classes be scheduled for 8:30 MWF?

Jan. 16, 1984

9 a.m. — Recovering from the initial shock, I proceeded with blind optimism for the Connelly Center, my destination: DROP /ADD. "I'm sure they'll understand, I'll have this straightened out in no time" I thought childishly, knowing full well the futility of my mission. Entering the Connelly Center, I located the end of the line, which wasn't hard since it was in the lobby. After three hours of waiting, I was finally granted audience with the Secretary of Registration (of course not the Czar himself). "You don't have the chairman's signature? How then can I help you!" she screamed. "Out with you, and do not return until you have the proper authorization."

Still strong-willed, I headed to Bartley to see none other than the right and just King Eby. Seeing the raving mob gathered in the hallway, my mental anguish was apparent, but I fought on.

5 p.m. same day — I was granted entry to the King's chambers. The encounter was surprisingly uneventful. With an insidious grin, he signs my blue slip, as he muttered to himself, "Of course, I'll sign this, those classes are closed anyway." With a false sense of security I make my way home.

11 a.m. — I was finally able to muster up the courage to face the "system." "I cannot be beaten," I mumble to myself as I stumble into the hallway.

Back in the Connelly Center, I made my way through the rapidly de-evolving crowd. Tempers flared and fist fights were commonplace. Making my way to the front, I blindly struggle to the computer printout — Every course but Math Appreciation II was closed.

2 p.m. same day — I had been sent out again, this time to the department chairman of the class into which I want to transfer. Finally, given the chance to plead my case, I resorted to the philosophy of John Locke and then to Marx - but it was no use. "You can not dissolve the class system," he said. In a final raging plea I cried out; "But I need this course to graduate."

It was obvious that I found his hamartia. The department wants nothing better than to see me gone from the University. He granted my request, but it was too late — I was finished.

Within hours of this final account, the anonymous victim had reached a state of complete physical and mental collapse, making analytical thought impossible. His fate no doubt is reflected in the lives of so many others. It could have been you.

The Villanova Fantasy is the way everyone is so "trendy." It is spending spring break in Florida, or watching General Hospital in the Pie Shop, or sitting on the wall outside of the Connelly Center. It is the way we wear duck shoes in the rain, Izod shirts with upright collars, Tenax on our hair each morning and those funky yellow shades each afternoon.

Traditionally, the Villanova Fantasy involved weekend football games and tailgate parties, and this tradition will begin again in the future. Finally, the Villanova Fantasy includes Homecoming Weekend, where past, present and future Villanovans unite to celebrate their school and create fantasies of their own.

'Dressed Naked, Stoned, Stabbed'

The Who "Who Are You" album cover, the last Who record with Keith Moon.

[illegible] be making any more records with the Who. I will not perform five again anywhere in the world with the Who." The statement read further, "In the first three months of this year, I wrote songs for the next contracted Who album. I realized after a short time they were not suitable for the Who . . . therefore, in May, I met with the band again to tell them I had decided to quit, leaving the Who ball in their court . . . I wish Roger, John and Kenney the best of luck with their future work and thank them for their patience."

The statement was not totally unexpected; however, the timing and strong language caught a lot of people by surprise. There are those who refuse to believe Townshend's words, citing past difficulties that were resolved and noting that the Who's Warner Brothers contract calls for one more album. But the 39-year-old legendary guitarist/lyricist seems serious in his intent and if it is indeed the demise of the Who, a look back is not only necessary, but also welcome. Nostalgia reminds us of our roots.

Of course, to give a complete history of the band would require one to write a book — many have been, two are recommended: The British Invasion by Nicholas Schaffner and the recently published Dave Marsh book, Before I Get Old: The Story of The Who. Instead, a summary of the most prolific, angry band is offered.

It was the Who who first transmitted the elements of artist's anger and adolescent anguish into full-scale pop theatre. Starting as the Detours, followed by the Who, then the High Numbers and back again to the Who, this quartet started as a threesome and, with the addition of Moon in 1963, quickly built a following in and around the English club scene, opening for many of that day's top acts. The Who found its style early in copying Motown riffs and R&B compositions and combining it with Townshend's Dylan-influenced songs.

It was in January 1965 that the Who entered Pye studios, home of the Kinks, to cut "I Can't Explain." The B-side was a long-forgotten composition "Bald-headed Woman," that featured Jimmy Page on lead guitar. It was the first Top Ten hit for the Who in England, but only reached number 93 in America.

According to rock history chronicler Marsh, the "fresh blast of 'I Can't Explain' was a clean kill. It transfixed me as I stood fearful it would end. Guitars cracked like whips; drums pounded like heads against walls. The vocal was a snarl of pain and confusion, perfectly suited to my own teenage tribulations. It took my breath away and left me reeling and dizzy . . . in two minutes and five seconds the Who distilled the promise of all the rock & roll I'd ever heard."

The Who followed with "Anyway, Anyhow, Anywhere," then the teen anthem, "My Generation," perhaps the most powerful declaration of youth excepting the Stones' "Satisfaction." "Why don't you all fff-fff-fade-away/don't try and dig what we all sss-ssayy." Townshend's guitar smashing and Moon's drum destruction soon became a staple of all the shows.

It was in the two-year period 1966-67 that saw the Who rise to prominence with consecutive hit singles "Substitute," "I'm a Boy," "Happy Jack," "The Kids are Alright," "Pictures of Lily," and "I Can See for Miles." Townshend was now rock's interpretive philosopher. The album "The Who Sell Out" was released early in 1968 and won critical acclaim. Following the success of the album that featured the Who's only American Top Ten hit ("Miles"), the audiences in the States became aware of the Who. Decca Records threw together "Magic Bus: The Who On Tour," a silly album by Who standards, to capitalize on the group's growing popularity.

But Townshend was past the quick sell. Instead, he had murmured the ideas of "pop opera" work which developed into "Tommy," released in 1969. Critics either heralded it as genius or dismissed it as drug-induced babblings. Albert Goldman of The New York Times hailed "Tommy" as "a work of innovative power and philosophical profundity, a powerful steel blade blowing all the bull out of the current atmosphere." "Tommy" led the Who through shows at New York's Fillmore East, the San Francisco Cow Palace, and a performance at Woodstock.

Trying to escape "Tommy," the Who released "Live at Leeds" in 1970 and then perhaps the best Who album ever, "Who's Next." Every song was a statement, a free-flowing creation that built power with every minute: "Baba O'Riley," "Bargain," "Love Ain't For Keeping," "My Wife," "Song Is Over," "Getting In Tune," "Going Mobile," "Behind Blue Eyes," and "Won't Get Fooled Again." This was followed by "Meaty, Beaty, Big and Bouncy," a compilation of practically all Who singles.

"Quadrophenia," another Townshend rock opera, was released in 1973, a musical expression of England's mod-rocker battles in the previous decade. In 1974, it was the release of "Odds and Sods," a collection of outtakes. In 1975, "The Who By Numbers," featuring "Slip Kid," was put on the market, as was the soundtrack for the "Tommy" movie. "Who Are You," the best Who work since "Who's Next," was released in 1978. The title cut "Sister Disco," "Guitar and Pen," and "Had Enough" were the feature's best.

Work was begun next on the soundtrack for a film history of the Who. In September, 1978, Moon died of an overdose of sleep-

'1984' Hails Heavy Heaven

Since their national debut in 1978, Van Halen has attained unprecedented musical heights in heavy metal heaven. Known the world over for their "screeching guitar" brand of music, Van Halen has been and continues to be the front-runner of American heavy metal music.

Brothers Eddie and Alex Van Halen both hail from the Netherlands, where they received extensive classical music training as youngsters. When moving to Pasadena, California, in 1968, they took a quick interest in rock and roll, with Eddie taking up the drums and Alex choosing the guitar. They eventually switched musical duties and began a band.

Michael Anthony joined soon afterwards and shortly after that, lead singer David Lee Roth was added to complete the lineup. The group considered calling themselves Rat Salade before settling on the name Van Halen.

The band was signed to a Warner Brothers record contract in 1977 under the guidance of then-booster Gene Simmons. Their first LP was self-titled, as were their following albums, re-[illegible] every year since, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

ing pills and the band went into limbo for a hiatus. As Townshend told Rolling Stone magazine, "Working without Moon in the future would be strange. We all feel very weird. Keith has always appeared so close to blowing himself off in the past that we've been used to living with the feeling. But this time . . . he hasn't thrown himself off the balcony and landed in one piece." The Who's place in history was complete.

The Who's chronicle "The Kids Are Alright" was released in 1979, as was the soundtrack for "Quadrophenia." Fueled by the film, the soundtrack, and subsequent tours, a Who revival of sorts took place between 1978-80 as the group's popularity reached a zenith in the United States.

With Kenney Jones on drums, the Who became recognized as a more precise band on stage. Moon had faltered toward the end, hampering the legendary on-stage energy of the group. But Jones lacked the animation of his predecessor, and it was felt by the group. 1981's "Face Dances" and 1982's "It's Hard" spurred only minor hits,"You Better You Bet" and "Athena."

The Who were all the Beatles briefly passed over, the Rolling Stones never quite grasped, and what no band had ever come close to in the annals of rock and roll.

It can be said that the Who's best work of this decade appears on Townshend's two latest solo albums. The aging rockin' roller brought his devotional rock approach to his own separate, distinct release in 1980 with "Empty Glass."

The 1982 "All the Best Cowboys Have Chinese Eyes" featured "Slit Skirt" and "Stop Hurting the People." All the Who members had released solo material, Daltrey's the most exceptional, but nothing has matched Townshend's work for sensitivity and truth.

If Townshend is sincere in his attempt to disassociate himself from the Who, the song is indeed over for the group. Each member will distinguish himself individually, Townshend most probably as a book editor, producer, and, hopefully, as a solo performer. Daltrey is in great demand as an actor and Entwistle will probably contribute his talent to other groups as producer and contributor. Jones has been rumored as a drummer for a Jimmy Page-fronted group. However, each will probably never achieve individually what they did collectively.

It was the Who who gave us the definite explanation of life in the rock opera's "Tommy" and "Quadrophenia." It was the Who that smashed guitars and wrecked havoc on stage for the sheer pleasure and pain of it. They were angry and bitter as stars but their bitterness is the audience's bitterness. As Daltrey once said, "The Who are the adulence . . . there are no barriers. We're really just a big mirror."

The Who were the people's band, a force never again to be seen, never to be forgotten.

"To find you, I'll suffer anything and be glad
I pay any price just to get you
I'd work all my life and I will
To win you
I'd stand naked, stoned and stabbed
I call that a bargain
The best I ever had."

Pete Townshend in the late 1970s.

'Carmina Burana' Radiates

By BILL SANTOS

Ray Manzarek, ex-keyboard player for The Doors, has released a piece of history titled "Carmina Burana." Although the material, music, and lyrics are dated, the history behind this work adds to its uniqueness.

"In 1803, a scroll of medieval poems was discovered in the German province of Bavaria among the debris of the secularized monastery of Benedikt-Beuren ('BURANA').

"These lyrics, written primarily in Latin, were determined to be the work of renegade monks and wandering poets of the 13th century. Their words captured a lost world of rebels and drop-outs of the medieval clergy; hard lovers, drinkers, on the move, celebrating existence rather than living the meditative, celibate, cloistered life of the monastery.

"In 1935, German composer Carl Orff re-discovered the poems. Impressed with their meaning and rhythm, he composed a cantata utilizing the centuries old verses. He transformed the writings into invocations and profane chants accompanied by numerous instruments and magical representations.

"These songs ('CARMINA') were divided into three primary sections: 'Springtime' - the life force renewed, 'In The Tavern' - drinking and gambling, and 'The Court of Love' - passion, sensuality. The sections are pervaded and framed by 'The Wheel Of Fortune' ('O Fortuna'), perpetually turning, perpetually governing the course of man's existence.

"In 1983, Manzarek, long attracted to the spiritual power of 'Carmina Burana,' chose to interpret the piece in a contemporary framework. This presentation intends to create enchanted pictures; to conjure up the ecstasy expressed by the lyrics, an enhanced intense feeling for like akin to the passions and revelry of the wandering poets of so long ago."

With individual titles as "The Wounds of Fate" ("What was once full and voluptuous, inevitably becomes decadence and decay!"), "If The Whole World Was Mine" ("If the whole world was mine, from the sea up to the Rhine, I would give it all up if the Queen of England would but lie in my arms. . .Hey!") and "The Roasted Swan" ("Misery, o misery! Now I am burnt and roasted on the spit!"), the album carries with it an esoteric view of the world around us.

Manzarek provides a vivid interpretation that is modernized, yet still upholds the general gist of the work itself. Using contemporary instruments such as synthesizers, drums, guitar, bass, saxophone and flute, Manzarek formulates a highly sophisticated piece.

The Latin lyrics might be a deterrent, but one must not overlook the musical value of "Carmina Burana." Five instrumental songs are interspersed throughout the album; these tend to cushion the impact of the 10-voiced Latin chanting.

A truly fascinating, poetic and resonant album, "Carmina Burana" is a feeling that must be experienced. Amor Volat Unique.

Barbra's 'Yentl' is Touching

By ERIN GALLAGHER

"Yentl," starring Barbra Streisand, is a touching look at a very unusual story line. Set in Eastern Europe in 1904, the movie depicts the desire of a young Jewish girl to study the sacred Talmud and the lengths to which she will go to achieve this goal.

When the story opens, we see a merchant selling "story books for women and sacred books for men." It is here that we first view Yentl's disillusionment at the chauvinistic world around her. But this does not despair the stalwart young woman; she vows to study, no matter what the price.

At this point the story takes on a slightly incredible tone. Yentl, dressed as a young boy, enters a yeshiva, which is a sacred Jewish school of learning. The young Jewess manages to deceive everyone about her true identity, especially her friend and study partner, Avigdor, played by Mandy Patinkin.

A special friendship forms between these two students as they share the trials and tribulations of their schoolwork and their lives. One special event they share is the relationship between Avigdor and his fiancee Hadass. Yentl's admiration for Avigdor eventually grows into something deeper and the love triangle that develops both surprises and shocks the audience.

Throughout the movie the viewers are entertained at various times with Streisand's beautiful ballads. Although the songs often come at inappropriate times, the mellifluousness of the tunes and Streisand's rich vocal quality delight the audience.

Mandy Patinkin's character of Avigdor complements Streisand delightfully. Despite Patinkin's refreshing performance, he is actually only a supporting actor and the show is truly Streisand's. The audience is often left wanting more of Patinkin and almost feeling empty when they do not receive what they want.

One underlying theme that came out often in the movie is that nothing is impossible. Although we find that difficult to believe at times, the general mood of the film seems to carry the audience along this theme. One truly hopes that Yentl can accomplish the seemingly impossible and achieve her goals.

Pretenders Learn to Crawl

By BOB SMITH

When picking up "Learning To Crawl," the Pretender's third album and first since the death of guitarish James Honeyman Scott, one inevitably tries to judge it against its predecessors. This is not surprising, since "The Pretenders" and "Pretenders II" were two of the finest albums to appear in the past few years.

Led by Chrissie Hynde's tough songwriting and vocals and Scott's no-nonsense guitar work, the Pretenders became one of the foremost bands of the '80s. Thus the loss of two original members in June 1982 left the Pretender's future in doubt.

Bassist Peter Farndon was fired by the other band members. Farndon's departure was followed a week later by Scott's sudden tragic death. While the band could easily have functioned without Farndon, the loss of Scott was considered by many to be a fatal blow, since Scott's guitar was the dominant instrumental voice of the band.

With the help of guitarist Billy Bremner and bassist Tony Butler, Hynde and Pretenders' drummer Martin Chambers cut the songs "Ohio" and "Back On The Chain Gang" (the latter a tribute to Scott) and released them as a twelve-inch single early in 1983.

Later in the year, a new lineup, consisting of Pretenders Hynde ad Chambers, along with newcomers Robbie McIntosh and Malcolm Foster, on guitar and bass, respectivley, was put together.

The LP "LearningTo Crawl" is the first tangible result of this new lineup. The album comes as a pleasant surprise to fans of the original band. McIntosh is not only a fine guitarist, but also is able to accommodate his style to that of the rest of the band. One would think that he had been with the band right from the beginning. "Learning To Crawl" lacks a little of the raw power of the first Pretenders album and some of the grandeur of the second, but that can be expected, as McIntosh and Foster have been with The Pretenders for no more than six months.

"Learning To Crawl's" success far outweigh its short-comings. McIntosh and Hynde work well playing lead and rhythm, while Foster's bass work blends in perfectly with Chamber's drums. Hynde's writing is as sharp and down-to-earth as ever, while her vocals retain their usual brashness. Chris Thomas' production adds a final touch to this work (he produced the first two Pretenders LPs). The hard-rock cuts ("Middle Of The Road" and "Time The Avenger" are the best of them) feature the same great drive and power that characterized The Pretenders' earlier work, while managing to break new ground. While McIntosh doesn't have quite the flair of his predecessor, "Middle Of The Road" shows that he is both technically adept and quite original. (Continued on page 14)

Random Notes

By NICK ANASTASIO

The Animals have broken up — again. Lead singer Eric Burdon cited "too many leaders" as the reason for the break up. This is similar to what caused the Animals to break up the first time, when Burdon and keyboardist Alan Price kicked each other out of the band.

The short-lived Animals' reunion produced one moderately successful album, "Ark," which featured a moderately successful single, "The Night," and a highly successful tour. The tour's success, no doubt, was due more to nostalgia than to the new album.

When the Animals announced their reunion, critics and fans waited anxiously for what would come, while at the same time asking themselves, "How long will it last?" The answer has come to us now (one year), proving true the old adage "you can't go home again."

The question now is: will other recently-reunited bands (such as Hot Tuna, Uriah Heep, the Hollies, Golden Earring, the Everly Brothers, and Vanilla Fudge) follow suit in the near future? Or will they endure, as the Moody Blues and Yes seem to be doing? And will more bands continue to reunite?

In addition to the Animals, the Who are also breaking up after more than 20 years (the last five with Kenney Jones) of making music together. On page 11 is the whole story of the Who break up.

The J. Geils Band broke up recently after more than 15 years together, one of the few bands to go that long without any personnel changes. Lead singer Peter Wolf did not like the way things were being done (music-wise), so it was mutually decided that he should leave. The remaining members then decided to go their separate ways.

And in another surprising move, Dave Davies has left the Kinks. Brother Ray and the rest of the Kinks will carry on, though. Dave did not have a good 1983. In addition to leaving the Kinks, he also suffered a nervous breakdown.

A reunion of sorts: Jeff Beck, who replaced Eric Clapton in the Yardbirds, is joining some of the other original Yardbirds in a new band. The name has not yet been chosen, but is will not be Yardbirds again.

Update on the sequel to "2001: A Space Odyssey": two members of the original cast, Keir Dullea and Doug Rain, will be reviving their characters in the new film. Dullea plays Astronaut David Bowman, and Rain provides the voice of the H.A.L. 9000 Computer.

Cultural Films

Villanova University's Cultural Film Series for Spring 1984 will feature a selection of major American and European films. The main series, "Facts, Fibs, and Fabrications," opens with Robert Duvall's "Angelo My Love" on Jan. 29 and 30. The mini-series "The Factual Film - The whole truth and nothing but . . .?" opens on Feb. 1 with a special free admission showing of the classic German documentary "Triumph of the Will."

Upcoming films in this Spring's series include: "Ghandi," "Fanny and Alexander," "The Year of Living Dangerously" "Trances," and "Betrayal."

Discussions with film commentators are held after many of the films.

The films are shown in the Connelly Center Cinema on the Villanova Campus. Admission is $3.00 for the general public and $1.50 for students and senior citizens. Call 645-7282 for more information.

Vasey Theater

Villanova's Theatre's next production will be the world premiere of a new musical entertainment adapted from the writings of Lewis Carroll. "Whisper Rings," conceived and directed by Terry Guerin and Claude White, will run February 3, 4, 7-11 and 14-18. All performances begin at 8 p.m.

For audiences familiar with Lewis Carroll only through the Alice books, Whisper Rings offers a wealth of pleasant surprises. Woven together in this unique pastiche are such lesser-known works as the witty "Phantasmagoria," the fanciful "Sylvia and Bruno," and a variety of other verse and prose never before adapted for the stage. Guerin and White's adaptation is a celebration of Carroll's spirit — his love of childhood's innocence, his delight in fantasy and the supernatural, and as counterpoint, his bittersweet acceptance of the inevitability of aging. A cast of thirteen, playing an assortment of roles from sprites to spinsters, sings and speaks Carroll's words.

Composer and musical director Claude White has written a tuneful and inventive score, covering a wide range of styles. "Phantasmagoria," a whimsical primer for the novice spook, becomes a Gilbert-and-Sullivan-style patter song. "The Secret Is Love" from "Sylvie and Bruno" is transformed into a hauntingly beautiful ballad. Folk-rock, jazz, madrigals, even a show-stopping rap duet are among the other musical treats White has concocted.

For tickets and information, call the box office at 645-7474.

Pretenders

The band's range is further indicted on cuts such as "Thumbelina," which is spiced with an interesting degree of modernity's Reichability, and "This Line Between Love and Hate," a former hit ballad which Hynde graces with one of her most delicate vocals.

"Thin Line," the album's solo cover, was a 1971 hit for the obscure group called The Persuaders. The updated version works mainly because Hynde is able to emphasize the sometimes brutal lyrics in a way that far surpasses the original. In its own way, "Thin Line" is as frightening a tale as any spun by Lou Reed or Nick Lowe. Also included on the album are the aforementioned "Chain Gang" and "Ohio."

All told, "Learning To Crawl" is an excellent album which manages to showcase the diverse and multi-faceted talents of The Pretenders in one neat package. It appears safe to assume that they will be around for quite a while. Meanwhile, they will be embarking on a tour which will bring them to the Tower Theatre for two nights in April.

Injuries Plague Lady Cats

By JAMES H. DeLORENZO

As Nancy Bernhardt goes, so go the fortunes of Villanova.

At least that's what has been the case for the women's basketball team this past week, as they suffered two consecutive losses, to St. Joseph's 56-52, and Providence, 78-63.

Bernhardt, a senior guard, came into the contest with the Hawks averaging 17.3 points per game, but only managed to score six points on 3-for-18 shooting.

The Wildcats were further hampered by the loss of freshman phenom Shelly Pennefather, who sat out with a twisted ankle. Pennefather, the starting center in Villanova's first ten games, was averaging 21.6 ppg. and 9.4 rebounds per game.

"I don't like to make excuses," said Villanova head coach Harry Perretta, "but it's hard to lose two starters and continue to win."

The second Cat 's starter injured is junior center Sandy Williams. Williams aggravated a previous knee injury in the first five minutes of the game with St. Joseph's. To that point, she had scored five points and collected two rebounds.

"We were prepared to play that game without Shelly," Perretta explained. "But then Sandy got hurt, and now you just have to play it out. It's hard to change the game plan in the middle of the game."

The loss of Pennefather and Williams severely reduced Villanova's rebounding edge. The Hawks out-bounded 'Nova 40-25.

According to Perretta, "When you don't have big people, your opponents can extend their zone defense, so your best side shooter (Bernhardt) has to move outside her normal shooting range."

"We played fair and Providence played very well," Perretta continued. "We were in the game for the first 30 minutes. But we just couldn't match up with them physically."

"It's hard to lose two starters and continue to win."

—Coach Harry Perretta

High scorer for Villanova in the St. Joe's game was junior center Kathy Razler with 14, while Trish Brown led the Hawks with 16 points.

Villanova travelled to Providence this past Saturday only to suffer another defeat. Still without the services of Pennefather and Williams, the Main Liners again lost the battle of the boards, as the Lady Friars collected 46 caroms to the Wildcat's 24.

Bernhardt experienced another sub-par game, scoring 11 points on 5-for-17 shooting.

Katrina Meesenger was high scorer for Villanova with 14 points while Razler teamed with freshman guard Karen Hargadon to collect 10 points apiece.

CAT-ERWAULING: Villanova's record to date is 11-4. The Wildcats faced nationally-ranked Rutgers last evening, and meet Big East Conference rival Georgetown in the field house tomorrow night at 7:30.

Perretta expected to see Pennefather play yesterday, "but she won't be 100 percent." Williams' injury, according to Perretta, is a "day to day thing. We'll just have to wait."

Wildcats Pummel Pirates

By MICHAEL F. IRONS

Villanova won its third Big East game with a 17-point trouncing of the Pirates of Seton Hall, 84-67. The game marked the last Field House appearance of seniors Frank Dobbs and Michael Enright, both of whom started the game.

Senior Frank Dobbs

The Wildcats started very emotionally and jumped off to a quick 9-4 lead. Villanova used a big height advantage to dominate the inside on both ends of the court. Ed Pinckney scored on three stuffs to open a six-point lead at the halfway mark of the first half.

The Pirates tied the score on three straight Ramson Eaves jumpers with eight minutes remaining. However, Villanova took control of the game with a 12-3 run to end the half sparked by excellent outside shooting from Harold Pressley and Dwight Wilbur. The Pirates scored at the buzzer on a 25-foot jumper.

Both teams traded baskets to open the second half with Pinckney scoring six points. Nova played particularly good defense in the second half and shut down the Pirates when the game was on the line. Andre McCloud, Seton Hall's leading scorer, was contained to only one basket in the game.

The Pirates managed to cut the lead to three points at the 6-minute mark. The Wildcats ran off 11 straight points to put the game away, sparked by two sensational double-clutch dunks from Dwayne McClain.

Nova iced the game with three-and-a-half minutes left by going into the "four corners" with R.C. Massimino ending the game with a layup. Pinckney led Villanova with 19 points and six rebounds and was followed by Pressley who had 18 and five boards. The Pirates were paced by the outside shooting of guard Ramson Eaves who had 22 points.

Rollie Massimino said he was "pleased with the win and to see some signs of improvement. We made some mistakes, but that's going to happen when the adrenaline is flowing."

Super Selling

The Superbowl is often lauded as the biggest sporting event of the year. The credibility of this statement may be debated, but without a doubt, this game has become one of the biggest marketing events of the year. If Tampa in the past few weeks is anything by which to judge, retailers will do almost anything to make money by riding on the Superbowl's coattails.

The shop owners of the various Florida cities have used almost every connection imaginable by which to sell anything under the products with the Superbowl XVIII theme. Many of these seem somewhat plausible, but some are just plain ridiculous. For example, various restaurants and diners offered "Superbowl Specials" which, for a price, would feed you and your entire family or a specially special price. Beer companies reportedly advocated that they were the one to drink while watching the game. A local florist offered a special "Superbowl Bouquet" which you could send to that special someone in your life who both loved football and flowers. And even a local vacuum retailer offered a special Superbowl sale on his line of vacuum cleaners.

The Los Angeles Raiders even got in on the advertising campaign. They bombarded the billboards and park benches in the city of Tampa with declarations that they were a formidable opponent with which the Redskins had to contend.

In addition, all of these retailing and advertising campaigns don't even take into account the hundreds of small-time vendors who manufacture the various "Superbowl" paraphenalia which they sell in the many street-side stands. These include such things as tee-shirts, banners, and buttons, all carrying the message that their wearer was, indeed, a part of the action which surrounded the eighteenth Superbowl.

Not only does this game turn everyone's attention in the United States to the game of football, and not only is this just probably the biggest sporting event of the year, but the game has evolved into a colossal marketing and retailing event as well. It provides a tremendous boost in sales to the area in which the Superbowl is played and in effect, has helped local retailers turn the Superbowl into a chance to obtain a supermarket by which to sell more goods.

Villanova-Arkansas Game Preview

The 15th-ranked Arkansas Razorbacks visit the Palestra this Saturday to take on the Villanova Wildcats. The game, on national television, promises to be a very good one with an excellent match-up at center. Ed Pinckney faces 6-11 Joe Kleine, who averaged 13.3 points per game and 7.3 rebounds a year ago, and who is off to a good start this season, underneath the basket. Arkansas is off to a great start with a 14-2 record, one of the losses coming at the hands of the powerful Houston Cougars.

The Razorbacks have two fine shooting forwards in Leroy Sutton and Charles Balentine, both of whom stand at 6-6. Sutton and Balentine have extremely high shooting percentages, .669 and .691 respectively.

Arkansas coach Ed Sutton has led his team to seven straight appearances in the NCAA tournament as well as posting seven consecutive 20-plus winning seasons. "Overall, this is probably the deepest team we've ever had. We have experience and quickness and should be a very good defensive club."

Villanova will have its work cut out for it when the Cats take to the court this weekend.

Ice Cats Contend With Redmen

By MARY AGNES MATYSZEWSKI

On Jan. 21 and 22 Villanova's ice hockey team faced the tough squad of Division III opponent St. John's in a weekend home double-header. However, despite a valiant attempt by the Icecats, the end results were a tie and a loss.

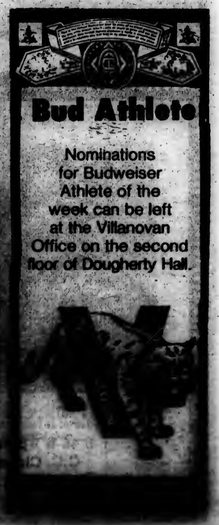
In addition to the missing victories, Nova was also missing assistant captain Michael Bufano. This senior, who was injured in the last game of last semester, is an outstanding skater who has played a key role in Villanova's defense. He has also provided strong leadership off of the ice, as well. His absence leaves the Icecats with a difficult spot to fill.

In the first game, both teams scored five points apiece. The first to score for Villanova was defenseman Bill McHugh with John Canuso assisting. Junior Tim Curran placed the next puck in the net on a Canuso assist. Rookie Joe DeLude scored the Icecat's third goal on a pass from junior John Padova. Rounding out the scoring drive in the third period were goals first from rookie Steve Thorley with assists from freshmen Brian O'Connor and captain Frank Segreto; and finally from assistant captain Curran with Canuso assisting.

Sunday's game ended with a disappointing 6-3 loss. The Cats scored one goal each period. O'Connor was the first to score on a [illegible] with Jim Hagney assisting, and finally Canuso with assists from Curran and sophomore Doug Simo, who managed to finish out the game despite receiving an injury in the second period which later required four stitches.

When asked to comment on the game, head coach Skip Probst stated, "This probably has to be the dumbest game we have played this season. The freshmen are really trying hard, and they are learning, but they are still making mistakes. Our veterans just didn't pick up the slack. This is just one of those years that we have to be patient and let the young guys develop and learn from their mistakes."

This weekend the Icecats take to the road to face Division III foes Fairfield and Quinnipiac in Connecticut.



Women Are Victors In Two Swim Meets

By L. FORTUNATO

The Villanova women's swimming team hosted back-to-back swimming competition last week, and emerged victors over both opponents. On Friday, they outswam Drexel University, 81-59.

The team of Genny Mulderig, Jenny Blair, Beth Metzger, and Anne Murphy led the way with a first-place finish in the 200-yard medley relay, clocking a time of 1:55.4. Senior Lisa McFadden captured the 200-yard, 500-yard, and 1000-yard freestyle events.

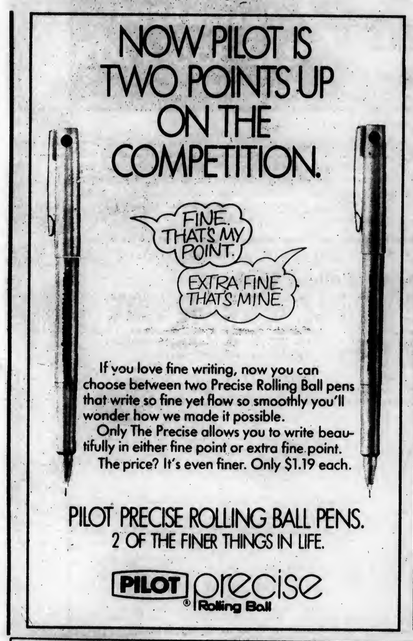
Although McFadden was the only triple winner of the meet, three other women, Blair, Metzger and Murphy all captured two individual events. Blair won the 100-yard and 200-yard butterfly events and Murphy won both the 50-yard and 100-yard freestyle events.

Other first place finishes included junior Mulderig in the 200-yard individual medley, and sophomore Lori Bukaty, who won the one-meter optional diving event. The 400-freestyle relay of Murphy, Sheri Fahey, Metzger and McFadden outswam the opponents with a time of 3:40.8.

The win over Drexel was an important victory for Villanova, as it recognizes them as the top women's collegiate team in the area.

The team was given little time out of the water, when they met with University of Connecticut on Saturday. Once again, they were victorious, winning 54-25.

The meet began with a first-place finish by the medley relay team of Sue Adams, Blair, Metzger and Sheri Fahey. Other outstanding swims were recorded by Lynn Nelson in the 1000-yard freestyle, 10:57.5, Cathy Barret winning the 200-backstroke 2:23.0, and Nancy Campbell in the 200-individual medley 2:24.8. The 400-yard freestyle relay team of Kim McCafferty, Cindy Cerami, Laura Fortunato and Anne Vaughn also finished with a first place.



New Soccer Coach Named

Villanova Director of Intercollegiate Athletics, Dr. Ted Aceto, has announced that former Strath Haven High School and Nether Providence High School boys soccer coach Chris Jones has been hired as head men's soccer coach at Villanova. Jones becomes just the second head coach in the VU soccer program's 19 years and replaces former head mentor Howard Graff, who resigned earlier in January for personal and business reasons.

"I'm very pleased to be able to select someone with the knowledge and experience Chris has," remarked Aceto on the hiring of Jones. "Chris brings with him the most experience and the best qualifications of any of our applicants. I was especially impressed with his knowledge of the area teams and players. I think that will be a big plus for our recruiting."

Jones comes to Villanova with a vast background in soccer as both a player and a coach. Involved in numerous soccer associations, Chris is currently the president of the Southeastern Pennsylvania Soccer Coaches Association and holds a U.S.S.F. Class "A" coaching license, the highest level coaching license possible to obtain. Becoming head coach at Strath Haven High School in 1983 after Nether Providence and Swarthmore high schools merged to form Strath Haven, Jones' team this past season was 8-5-5. The head soccer coach at Nether Providence from 1970-82, in those 13 seasons Jones' squads won six league championships and had teams advance to at least the State tournament district quarter-finals eight times.

Jones was a standout soccer player at West Chester University and a member of West Chester's 1959 team which advanced to the quarter-finals of the first NCAA national soccer championship. Playing one year of professional soccer in the American Soccer League in 1961, Jones' first coaching duties came in 1961 at Sun Valley Senior High School.

Earning his B.S. degree in health & physical education from West Chester in 1960, and earning his Master's of Education in physical education from West Chester in 1968, Chris is currently a physical education instructor at Nether Providence Middle School. Chris and his wife, Janice, and their two sons, Colin, 5, and Trevor, 2½, reside in Media, PA.

Men Swimmers Continue Winning

By JUDY ROGERS

The men's swim team added another win to its already impressive season, when it beat Delaware, 60-49, on Jan. 18 at Delaware.

The meet was "not very tough" as described by Coach Ed Geisz. "We tried to keep our score down, so we switched swimmers to events other than their regular ones to make it more competitive."

The medley relay team of Pete Maloney, Jose Alvarez, John Gargula, and Mike Gallagher placed first with a time of 3:42.87. Keith Donahue put in a fine effort with a second place finish and a time of 48.75 in the 100-yard freestyle, coming in less than two seconds behind Delaware's best swimmer. It was his best time of the year in that event. Other first place finishes came from Bill Slamkowski, Maloney, Matt McKean, Dan Nies, and Bob McDonald.

The Wildcats trained steadily two time s a day from Jan. 14-18. All the swimmers have tendonitis, an ailment common to those who are regulars of this sport. The Cats swam through the Delaware meet with this condition; they hope to shake it by their upcoming meet with Fordham.

Their meet at Fordham will be this Saturday at 1p.m. "We are two Catholic schools and we have a really good rivalry between us," said Geisz. "It'll be a toss up. To win we must have some awesome swims." Team member Maloney noted, "It's going to be very tough; they're out to beat us."

Geisz admitted that he is "really excited being their coach; I'm very proud of them. They're a great bunch of swimmers and over half of them are on the Dean's List." He is proud of them all but especially praised "Pete Maloney, a very consistent and a great competitor; Bob McDonald, a freshman diver; Dan Nies, a junior butterflyer; Bill Slamkowski, a junior freestyler; and Jose Alvarez, a junior breaststroker."

Right now the Wildcats are 8-2. They're hoping to win 12 meets this year, beating last year's record of 10-6. They have seven meets left and two championships. As of Jan. 13, Villanova was ranked 13th, ahead of such teams as Yale, Brown, Dartmouth and Fordham. "Our big goal is to win the Big East Championship," said Geisz. The Big East will be held at the University of Pittsburgh on Feb. 16, 17 and 18.

Maloney said that "the rest of the season we can either win or lose. It all depends on how serious we are. The Big East is looking very good; a lot of school records should be broken."

McClain fouled out. On the subsequent free throw, Pressley fouled out. Without the presence of these two key starters, Nova fell behind 59-50. Dobb's bucket at 3:10 temporarily silenced the crowd before center Jim Dolan drove against Pinckney and drew Pinckney's fifth foul.

Nova's subsequent stabs at getting back into the game were stifled by foul trouble which seemed to plague the Cats all game long. For Villanova fans, these calls were suspect, but the players thought otherwise. Senior "Happy" Dobbs said, "The calls speak for themselves; some were questionable. But it's just part of going to the other team's court."

Ed Pinckney agreed, "You can't blame the game on the officiating. You just have to work that much harder so when you don't get the breaks, things will still be going your way."

The final three minutes were laden with fouls as Nova futilely attempted to come back. But the Irish hit 18 of their last 24 free throws in sealing their 81-68 victory. In all, the Irish outscored the Wildcats 33-14 from the free throw line.

Looking back at the game, Ed Pinckney said, "It was a tough game, but we didn't play very confidently. We just lost our poise."

Women Tracksters' Road Trip a Success

By MICHELE NAPOLI

The Villanova women's track team continued its season by traveling to Dartmouth, George Mason University and Yale University. Their performance and success at these meets promise a fruitful season for the team in 1984.

At Dartmouth, the Cats swept first place in the mile relay with a new Villanova record time of 3:46.40, as well as taking first in the distance medley relay. Senior Patty Bradley started the new year in style by finishing the 500 meters in 1:13.2 and breaking another Villanova record, as well as qualifying for the NCAA Indoor Championships.

Bradley was beaten only by famed Edna Brown of the Atoms Track Club, who broke the American record in 1:11.1. Finishing in second and third in the 800 meters were Veronica McIntosh and Joanne Kehs clocking in at 2:11.30 and 2:11.57 respectively. Freshman Lauren Searby began the new year by placing third in the 3000 meters in 9:44.5.

Recently named Mid-Atlantic Track Athlete Congress "Outstanding Woman Track Athlete" of the year was Nova's captain Patty Bradley. She now holds three individual indoor records, three indoor relay records, and four individual and six relay outdoor records, as well as recording wonderful performances in the NCAA Outdoor Championships, the TAC National Championships and National Sports Festival in 1983.

Veronica McIntosh

Coach Bob Shoudt stated, "Patty is an outstanding athlete as is evident by her achievements at Villanova. She is a most deserving winner, competing in all events from dashes to cross country and the most versatile track athlete in the nation."

Both junior McIntosh and freshman Debbie Grant qualified for the NCAA Indoor Championships in the 500 meters with times of 1:13.0 and 1:13.2. McIntosh's 1:13.0 also was a new Nova record — the third time it has been broken this season. Bradley took first in the 1000 meters in 2:48.2 and thus qualified for the ECAC Championships, while Vickie Brown took first in the 3000 meters in 9:53.1, also an ECAC qualifying time. Nova's 4 x 400 meter relay team also took first in 3:46.90. The team consists of Grant, McIntosh, Kehs and Bradley. Freshman Searby took second in the 1500 meters with a time of 4:30.6 while Vickie Brown followed with third in 4:34.9 and Coleen Gallagher took fourth in a 4:35.0.

The Cats most recent road trip has been to the Yale Invitational. Bradley continued to show her skills as an outstanding athlete as she placed first in the 800 meters in 2:06.76, a new Villanova record, an NCAA qualifying standard and a Yale Invitational Record, as well as a Yale University Coxe Cage Record. Placing second to Bradley with a NCAA qualifying standard was McIntosh, in 2:07.29.

Searby showed the frosh power as she placed third in the 1500 meters in 4:24.48, thus qualifying for the NCAA Indoor Championships as well as breaking a Villanova record. Nova's 1600-meter relay team of Grant, McIntosh, Kehs and Bradley took first with a new Nova record, NCAA qualifying standard, a new Yale Invitational Record, and a new Yale University Coxe Cage record. The distance medley also took first with a new Yale Invitation record and a new Yale University Coxe Cage record in 11:36.18. The team consisted of Kehs, Joanne Van Rensselaer, Melissa Grubb and Gallagher.

Men Successful In Eastman Invitational

By PAUL MACCHIA

The Villanova men's track team competed in the Eastman Invitational meet last weekend at East Tennessee State University.

The Wildcats were successful as they set two meet records and qualified one individual and two relay teams for the NCAA Championship meet. In addition, 13 performances were also eligible for the IC4A Championship meet.

The Cats won two events. Freshman Sean O'Neill won the 880-yard run in a meet record time of 1:50.47 seconds. This performance qualified O'Neill to run in the NCAA meet. O'Neill also lent his talents in the distance medley relay by running the ¾ mile leg in 2:55.3. O'Neill, J.J. Clark, Chip Jenkins (48.4) and Marcus O'Sullivan put their speed and strength together to win in a meet record time of 9:39.97. This relay team is also NCAA bound. Virginia was a very distant second in 9:45.74.

Martin Booker placed fourth in a time of 7.49 seconds. The winner of the race was Roger Kingdom of Pittsburgh who was last year's NCAA 110-high hurdle Champion. Booker also placed second in a heat of the 440-yard dash, running it in 49.63 seconds.

Freshman Tony Valentine and senior Jim Adams placed second and third in their heats of the 440-yard dash clocking 49.03 and 49.41 respectively.

In the 600-yard run sophomore Chip Jenkins ran fourth in his heat with a time of 1:13.62.

Senior John Borgese placed second to teammate Sean O'Neill in the 880-yard run clocking 1:51.44.

Last week Borgese set a personal record indoors at Boston when he won in a time of 1:51.1.

In the 1000-yard run, junior John Marshall finished second (2:09.43) and sophomore Kevin Davis placed fourth in 2:11.01. The winner of the race was Alabama's William Wuyke, a world class half-miler. Sophomore J.J. Clark ran 2:10.27 in the heats placing third behind Wuyke. Selections to the finals were made by the winners of each heat, plus the fastest non-winning time.

Sophomore John Keyworth ran two races over the two-day meet — the University mile and the University two-miles. Keyworth placed sixth in the mile in 4:11.93 and second in the two mile in 8:54.64.

Head Coach Dr. Charles T. Jenkins

In the Open two-mile, freshman Gerry O'Reilly placed 10th with a time of 8:56.8. In the three-mile run, Tony O'Reilly placed eighth in 13:41.5 behind John Gregorek, the former Georgetown steeplechaser.

The relay team of Booker (48.9), Valentine (47.7), Jim Adams (47.9) and John Marshall (46.7) combined their speed and baton passing in the mile relay. The time was 3:11.27 and gave the team a berth in the NCAA meet.

Tonight, the Wildcats will be competing in the Wanamaker-Millrose Games at Madison Square Garden in New York City. This meet is to indoor track what the World Series is to baseball; only the best can go.

Prayers Answered - Friars Beaten

By JOE BAGLEY

Villanova managed to make a complete turn-about in the second half of its Tuesday night game, outscoring Providence College 45-22 during the final half to beat the Friars 66-53.

The Wildcats got out of the gate well and looked as though they might make an early run on the score with a couple of well-placed jumpers and a blocked shot. But as Providence slowed the pace, Villanova began to fall flat on its face.

"We started to get tentative," Eddie Pinckney said. "We couldn't get the ball inside." Tentative is Pinckney taking only one shot in the entire first half. It is Harold Pressley, Dwight Wilbur and Dwayne McClain making only one field goal apiece in the first half. Or Gary McLain scoring two points the entire time.

Villanova went into the locker room at the half down by ten points. They were shooting 31.6 percent from the field with all but two of the Cats 21 points coming from its starters.

The rally actually began just before the half, however, as the team left the court.

"The fans gave up on us at halftime." Dwayne McClain protested. "They booed us. That's the first time since I've been here that that happened."

When it was suggested that some of the booing may have come from residual Penn and LaSalle fans loitering from the front end of the doubleheader, McClain interjected, "But the Villanova fans booed Chuck Everson when he came out and, you know, that's not necessary. It's not necessary at all. Your fans are your fans and they're behind you no matter what," McClain sincerely voiced. "In that sense they really messed up. We talked it over a little bit and decided that we were going to win this game for ourselves, not for anyone else."

It certainly did not start out like a rally should. The two teams came out and Providence promptly increased its lead to 13 in the span of just nine seconds. The Wildcats scored two baskets but PC again widened their lead to 13. In just over one minute, however, Villanova scored six unanswered points to draw to within seven. The Friars' high-scoring Otis Thorpe responded with one point from the free throw line before the "Big Macs," Gary and Dwayne, brought Nova to within four with a McLain jumper and a McClain driving layup. Providence's composure was blown and they could answer only with a time out.

The Friars were hounded in the following minutes by several turnovers, with Thorpe, Keith Lomax and Harold Starks all coughing the ball up. The Cats were breathing fire when two timely steals by McLain and Harold Pressley, and the forward's subsequent slam dunk and foul shot arguably threw the momentum on Villanova's side.

"The turning point?" Coach Massimino pondered. "Probably when Pressley dunked the ball up over to make it 51."

"The turning point?" pondered Gary McLain. "When Providence didn't convert when the game was tied. They couldn't get their points and we outscored them."

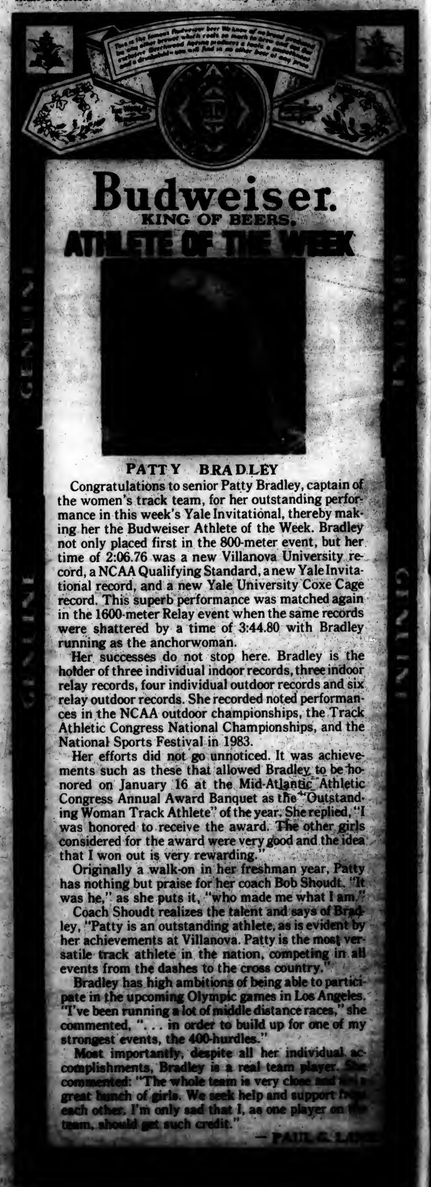
"The turning point?" Massimino felt obligated to qualify. "The turning point really was the defense. We defended terrifically."

Whatever the point in time was, the fact remains that Providence's offense faltered as their passes were stolen, their shots blocked, and their lanes clogged. The Wildcats' magical halftime performance was due in part to their switch from a zone to a man-to-man defense.

In the last ten minutes, Villanova outscored Providence 27-10. Not only was the stall run well, but the one run by the second string worked just as smoothly. It appeared that the Cats could do little wrong in the second half of the game and the loss at South Bend last week may have played some small part in it.

"I'll tell you," Massimino intoned, "we practiced as hard Sunday as we ever have in probably six years, just going after everything we had to do to get us all in the best shape."

The turning point? Last Sunday at practice.



PATTY BRADLEY

Congratulations to senior Patty Bradley, captain of the women's track team, for her outstanding performance in this week's Yale Invitational, thereby making her the Budweiser Athlete of the Week. Bradley not only placed first in the 800-meter event, but her time of 2:06.76 was a new Villanova University record, a NCAA Qualifying Standard, a new Yale Invitational record, and a new Yale University Coxe Cage record. This superb performance was matched again in the 1600-meter Relay event when the same records were shattered by a time of 3:44.80 with Bradley running as the anchorwoman.

Her successes do not stop here. Bradley is the holder of three individual indoor records, three indoor relay records, four individual outdoor records and six relay outdoor records. She recorded noted performances in the NCAA outdoor championships, the Track Athletic Congress National Championships, and the National Sports Festival in 1983.

Her efforts did not go unnoticed. It was achievements such as these that allowed Bradley to be honored on January 16 at the Mid-Atlantic Athletic Congress Annual Award Banquet as the "Outstanding Woman Track Athlete" of the year. She replied, "I was honored to receive the award. The other girls considered for the award were very good and the idea that I won out is very rewarding."

Originally a walk-on in her freshman year, Patty has nothing but praise for her coach Bob Shoudt. "It was he," as she puts it, "who made me what I am."

Coach Shoudt realizes the talent and says of Bradley, "Patty is an outstanding athlete, as is evident by her achievements at Villanova. Patty is the most versatile track athlete in the nation, competing in all events from the dashes to the cross country."

Bradley has high ambitions of being able to participate in the upcoming Olympic games in Los Angeles. "I've been running a lot of middle distance races," she commented, "... in order to build up for one of my strongest events, the 400-hurdles."

Most importantly, despite all her individual accomplishments, Bradley is a real team player. She commented: "The whole team is very close and has a great bunch of girls. We seek help and support from each other. I'm only sad that I, as one player on the team, should get such credit."

Irish Rally Swamps Cats

By ELIAS A. PAPSON

When the Wildcats took to the court last Saturday against Notre Dame they had hoped to extend their winning streak to four games and reach the .500 mark (7-7) for the first time since they were 3-3 in late December. And halfway through the second half, the win was well within their reach. But Tom Sluby's game-high 23 points and Scott Hicks, who came off the bench to score 14 points, propelled the Irish to an 81-68 victory.

The Cats' record fell to 6-8, while Notre Dame increased its record to 10-5.

Nova scoring was led by junior guard Gary McLain, who had 16 points. Dwight Wilbur added 15 and Frank "Happy" Dobbs contributed 13 in the Cats' losing effort. Center Ed Pinckney was held to only five points.

The Cats got off to a rather slow start. Following some sloppy execution and Sluby's three consecutive field goals, Nova found itself down 8-2, just two minutes into the game.

But they did not give up just then. In the next two minutes, they countered with an identical scoring run and tied the Irish at 10-10.

It again looked bad when 5'9" guard Joe Howard entered the game and threw a perfect pass assisting on Sluby's crowd-arousing slam dunk.

But, Nova again responded. Dwight Wilbur entered the game and led the Cats to another 8-2 scoring run which featured some crisp passing, fine execution, and good follow-ups. The superb defense that ensued stifled Notre Dame's inside game for some time and following Harold Pressley's three-point play, Nova led by 25-18.

Digger Phelps

A three minute scoring drought by both teams followed, but then the Irish regained the tempo and cut the lead to two, 25-23. And the [illegible]

The second half opened with a three minute exchange of scoring in which Nova retained its six point lead at 35-29. Then disaster struck. Poor passing and sloppy execution paved the way for Notre Dame's 10 point scoring surge which put them up 39-35. In this spree, Nova went five minutes without a score before Chuck Everson's two free throws broke the ice. Assessing the situation and the game as a whole, Gary McLain said, "We didn't execute our offense, lost our composure, and made mental mistakes which all contributed to the negative outcome." Nova struggled to a 39-39 tie, and appeared to be back in it when Sluby's field goal at the nine minute mark put the Irish up for good, 43-42.

Then came the deluge of fouls in which four of Nova's starters and Jensen fouled out. Notre Dame's lead went to three when Dwayne [illegible]

Massimino entered the game and turned the ball over twice. Luckily, Notre Dame was unable to capitalize on these opportunities. Then Harold Jensen stole the ball and fed Wilbur for an uncontested break in which he scored the basket, got fouled and sunk the two free throws propelling Nova to a 29-23 halftime lead.

Delays Raise Field House Costs

By JAMES H. DeLORENZO

Construction is slated to begin this week on Villanova's new multi-purpose athletic facility, despite several months of delays in which the expected cost has risen by $1.5 million.

"There has been an increase in cost over the months, as the project originally envisioned was delayed," noted William Clouse, the University's director of construction.

"The Board of Trustees approved a budget for the construction of the athletic facility of $11 million at its Dec. 13 meeting," Clouse revealed.

The previous announced budget for the project was $9.5 million. Part of the funding for the construction will come from the Covenant II Campaign (see adjoining story).

Delays in the field house project include the weather, Radnor Township approval and the increased cost. But the major stumbling block has been an unforeseen problem with the roof design.

"When the Tully organization [Daniel F. Tully Associates, the architectural firm in charge of the project] initially presented the concept two years ago, the roof was designed for a hyperbolic paraboloid structure," explained Clouse. "The concept of the configuration was such that when the University accepted it and got into the actual structural considerations, they discovered that the prefabricated sections would be too large to transport from the factory to the site by highway.

"Since Tully's first presentation," Clouse continued, "steps have been taken to now prefabricate the structure and ship it. They've learned more about the process, and now the project is in a position to go forward."

"When completed, it will be a laminated wood beam and wood shell construction," added Clouse.

Since September, the bulk of the work completed on the site located behind the present field house "was the relocation of the site utilities, which was the only thing we were really allowed to do by Radnor Township," Clouse commented.

"Now we have the approval to get the foundation permit," stated Clouse. "We'll start to actually pour the concrete sometime next week."

The actual construction will be completed in the fall of 1985. "We're looking to have the arena area and the natatorium finished by the fall of 1985," Clouse noted.

According to Athletic Director Ted Aceto, "I don't know if it's realistic, but we'd like to play all or part of the 1985-86 basketball season in the new field house."

"Renovations to the present pool building are scheduled to be completed then as well," Clouse said. The present pool building will be converted into locker rooms, while the new natatorium will be connected to the old field house through this locker room.

"We have to keep the existing pool open for as long as possible," explained Clouse. "That is going to be tough.

"Renovations to the present field house will follow in early 1986," Clouse stated. The present field house will have additional athletic offices, and new training facilities. The Butler Annex [adjacent to the field house] will also be renovated, to include seven

Covenant Yield Increases

Figures revealed to the Villanova Board of Trustees at Tuesday's full meeting show that the University's Covenant II fundraising campaign has raised a total of $5,820,047.41.

"This represents the total commitment dollars in cash and pledges up to Feb. 14," acknowledged Eugene Tennis, resident director of the Covenant II campaign. "A pledge over a three-year period is standard in this type of fundraising campaign."

"We have received significant contributions from a few major corporations, with several proposals still out and unacted upon," Tennis added.

Covenant II had been organized to raise $20 million in order to fund several capital projects, including the construction of a new multi-purpose athletic facility. The Covenant campaign has earmarked $9 million to that project.

The budget for the field house project has recently been increased to $11 million. "We never expected that $9 million to complete that project," stated Tennis.

"The goals of the campaign will not change," he concluded.

Faculty View Succession

By JOSEPH MARUSAK

There is little evidence to suggest that newly-appointed Soviet Communist Party General Secretary Konstantin Chernenko will deviate from the political ways of his predecessors, according to several Villanova University professors.

As a result, Soviet relations with the United States will probably remain as cool as they were under Yuri Andropov's regime, said the faculty members.

Chernenko, once a top aide to President Leonid Brezhnev, came into power on Monday, four days after the announcement of Andropov's death.

Some analysts view his appointment as a triumph of the conservative old guard in Moscow, while others see the 72-year-old leader as a mere transitional figure allowing the younger, more reform-minded Politburo members a chance to solidly further their own claims to future power.

Despite the differing perspectives — which are not mutually exclusive — few observers are expecting the Soviet Union to stray from its current domestic and foreign policy agendas.

"The emergence of Chernenko indicates that the Soviets have opted for stability," said the Rev. Kail C. Ellis, O.S.A., an assistant professor of political science. "It's an immobile approach."

"As far as their government and society are concerned, I think it's a very poor move," commented Dr. Bohdan P. Procko, a professor of history. "All it does is forestall any serious reforms in their entire system. It will certainly continue the same abuses, the same inactivity that characterized Brezhnev's period. This is the same old guard, and apparently they are very much concerned with not allowing the younger people to take over.

"I think Chernenko will basically say he will continue the work of Andropov, which was not much different from the work of Brezhnev," Procko said.

According to Dr. Jeffrey Hahn, an associate political science professor, "I really don't see a policy agenda coming out of Chernenko, whereas Andropov clearly did have something in mind that he wanted to do when he took over. I don't see him staying in power for more than five years at the most.

"I think the new generation has decided to wait in the wings just a little while longer because they can't quite make up their minds about who the major actors should be. In the meantime, they're putting out a person who really can't threaten them very much."

Several faculty members noted that the basic structure of the Soviet system precludes any new ruler, Chernenko included, from instituting radically new policies.

"There is one thing you have to keep in mind," said Dr. Hafeez Malik, the director of the American Institute of Pakistan Studies. "Policies in the Soviet Union are evolved through the Central Committee, the Politburo and the Secretariat. These are the three organs that play a crucial role.

"Of course, whoever is the general secretary becomes the spokesman and therefore a clear voice of the Soviet Union. But policies are collectively evolved. They are not the subject of a one-man show. The day of the Stalin-type leader is over," he said.

If that era has since faded away, observers continue to speculate whether now a similar fate will befall the days of attempted reform under Andropov.

According to several accounts, Andropov's 15-month stay was marked in part by plans to change the Soviet economic system and to rid the political system of corruption.

"The wheels of reform were put in motion during Andropov's time — somewhat tentatively — but new people were brought in who were capable of doing what An-

Senate to Meet Today

By CARROLL GARVEY and GARY R.DYER

The University Senate meets today at 4:00 p.m. in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall. The Senate will, amid other business, consider a resolution endorsing the establishment of a Day Care Center on campus.

Senator Angelo Armenti Jr., dean of University College, will present a motion stating that "the University Senate strongly endorses the notion of a Day Care Center on campus and urges the Administration to proceed as quickly as possible toward implementation of such a center."

Last year a survey to determine the need for such a center was prepared by Dr. Pamela Blewitt and Dr. Patricia Broderick of the psychology department and Patricia Wiedinmyer, the University College director of adult services. Six hundred eighty-one of the 5,900 members of the Villanova community of child-rearing age they surveyed responded that they could use University child care.

Armenti has submitted to the administration a proposal for a Day Care Center to be instituted in St. Clare's Hall on Lancaster Ave.

"I think the administration would probably prefer to see it come from the Senate because it would get talked out," Armenti commented last month.

"If the Senate were to approve it by a substantial margin the administration would take it very seriously and probably would implement it if the funds were there," Armenti said.

Also at the meeting, Dr. Richard Neville, vice-president for student life and the chairman of the Rules and Review Committee, will make recommendations concerning evaluation of the structure of the Senate. It has been three years since an evaluation of the Senate subcommittees has been conducted.

"The Rules and Review Committee is charged with evaluating the Senate every third year," said Neville. "The recommendation of Rules and Review is that that evaluation be done as part of the total evaluation that the University is entering into, of all its departments and all its activities. I'm recommending to the administration of the Senate that they request that the Senate also be evaluated along with all the other departments."

The Senate will also consider an evaluation of the Social Action Committee by the Rules and Review Committee.

"The evaluation of the Social Action Committee is different from the three-year evaluation of the Senate," Neville explained. "One of the ongoing charges of Rules and Review is to review each of the other committees of the Senate, evaluating each of them every three or four years."

The monthly Senate Budget Committee Report will be presented by Senator Alvin A. Clay, dean of the College of Commerce and Finance.

Majors' Night Set for Monday

By AMELIA McGOVERN

Villanova's first "Majors Night" will be held on Feb. 20. "Majors' Night" is sponsored by the Arts Council to help freshmen and sophomores in selecting a major best suiting their needs and goals.

"The purpose is to help students in declaring their majors. We want them to be as well informed as possible. They need to see every angle before making a decision," said the Rev. William A. McGuire, O.S.A., assistant to the dean of arts and sciences.

"To help students make the best decisions, we sent the students a letter with three suggestions," explained McGuire. "The first is to attend the workshops on decision making and opportunities sponsored by the Career Development Center.

"The second is to attend 'Majors' Night.' At this event there will be chairpersons, faculty and students from all departments, majors and concentrations present to answer questions.

"The third suggestion is to really talk to students in prespective majors," McGuire continued. "They can give you the best information."

"The national average for the number of times a student changes his major is two," noted McGuire. "Our goal is to give the students the information to make the best decision from the beginning. The idea is to get them the most information for the first time around.

"Hopefully, 'Majors' Night' will become a yearly event. We hope to get suggestions from students, then make improvements. If it is beneficial for the students, we will certainly have it again."

McGuire concluded, "My main concern is to have available as much information as possible so students can make a well informed decision."

Committee Plans Programs

By GARY R. DYER

The Student Life Educational Programs Committee offered free fitness tests yesterday in the Radnor Room of the Connelly Center. The Committee offers "some education programs that really wouldn't be covered by any other organization or group," according to Lucyna Gorski, director of Student Activities and a member of the committee.

"Each year the group continues, we pick this kind of a topic," Gorski explained. "This year it's health and decision-making. Last year it was alcohol awareness."

At the fitness-testing, people could have their pulse rate, oxygen consumption and body fat measured while riding bikes supplied by ATRA.

During the Resident Student Association's Wellness Week the Student Life committee will offer a nutrition exposition. "Hopefully, we'll do examples of the kind of cooking you can do if you live in an apartment and don't have a lot of money."

On April 10 and 11 the committee will sponsor programs on interpersonal skills and value clarification "for people who want to know more about the way they fit into the decisions that they make every day. This will include stress management."

The Student Life Educational Programs Committee is composed of Judicial Affairs Officer Joseph Burke, chairman of the committee; Gorski, Assistant to the Dean of Students Christine Lysionek, two other administrators, one faculty member and four students.

Field House Delays Costly

racquetball courts and a pair of squash courts.

The new multi-sports facility will cover approximately 125,000 square feet upon completion. It will include a main arena for men's and women's intercollegiate basketball games, additional intramural courts, a synthetic surface 200-meter, six-lane running track, and the natatorium, which will have an eight-lane pool and four diving pools.

One major question has been the seating capacity of the new basketball arena. "It has been mandated by Radnor Township that it not exceed 6,400 people," emphasized Clouse.

"You'd like to see this project get off the ground soon," concluded Aceto. "The major problems it's had have inhibited that, but you have to live with that."

Weight Room Renovations

By BRIAN D. WEBB

The weight room in the Field House will be renovated next month just in time for the National Collegiate Powerlifting Championship.

According to Dr. Theodore A. Aceto, director of athletics at Villanova, the renovations will focus on three areas: painting the walls, repairing the floor, and rehabilitating the universal machine.

Aceto said, "The renovations would have been made anyhow, but this seemed like the best time. The [national championship] is a major event."

Powerlifting team captain Pete Anninos feels that the repairs are long overdue. "The weight room is pretty much a disgrace. We are hoping that more renovations will be on the way." Anninos hopes to "open people's eyes" by doing well at the national championship.

When asked to describe the current condition of the weight room, Aceto said, "With the volume of students, it is adequate. Although I'd like to have a larger place."

Competitors at the national championship will use the weight room as a place to warm up before their lifts. The actual competition will take place on the basketball court.

The weight room will be closed from March 19 to 24 while renovations are made.

dropov had in mind," noted Hahn. "Andropov was chosen particularly by the military-industrial complex — the police, heavy industry people — precisely because they wanted to see the society cleaned up.

"My guess is that those in power said, 'We can keep Chernenko in a figure head position while carrying out the many reforms that were begun by Andropov — ones that society needs.'"

Malik agreed that those reform policies could be expected to continue under Chernenko. "I think reform will continue," he said, "because that was not an Andropov policy, but essentially the Politburo's."

Others disagreed, however. "I think that it was mostly talk," Procko noted. "There was talk of getting rid of the abuses, but I really didn't see too many actual changes."

"There is not nearly as much a chance for reform now, as there would have been if Andropov were still in power," said Dr. Alexander Rudhart, a professor of history. He noted that Andropov "did have the interest of the ordinary Soviet 'consumer' in mind" while attempting reform.

Although the reform movement's fate still hangs in the balance, analysts see the topic of U.S.-U.S.S.R. relations as a bit more clearly defined.

Few, in short, see any improvement in the chilly relationship between the two superpowers. Under Andropov, such relations hit a low-point after the Soviets shot down a South Korean airliner in September, killing the 269 persons aboard.

The situation only worsened later on when NATO deployed new American missiles in Western Europe, prompting the Soviets to cease arms negotiations with the United States.

"As to an immediate expectation of change (in relations), I think that's wishful thinking," Procko said. "No new regime is in a position instantly to start making changes. I think it's going to be a matter of months and months before anything can be actually accomplished."

"It just seems that right now the relations are at an all-time low," commented Ellis. "Reagan really is quite hardlined, and, of course, the Soviets are matching that same type of rhetoric. They probably do see the United States now as more of a threat than, say, other administrations."

Hahn pointed out that Chernenko "knows nothing about foreign policy. Andropov was conversant with foreign affairs, though. I really think that Soviet foreign policy has been set and will continue to be set by the one person who is an expert in the field — and that's (Foreign Minister Andrei A.) Gromyko."

Hahn also noted that "from the Soviet point of view, why should relations change? There has been no change in the objective conditions on which Soviet-American relations are based.

"The United States," he said, "hasn't changed its policy one iota. Why should simply the fact that you have Chernenko elected lead to new relations? I think that's an American expectation which is going to be doomed to disillusion . . . The only other possibility is for Reagan to say, 'Okay, I'll make some concessions that are meaningful to the Soviets, not just political camouflage.'"

According to Hahn, the Soviet Union is convinced that President Reagan is committed to achieving nuclear superiority. "Up until the Korean airline incident, the Soviets still believed that Reagan was conservative, yes, but that he was someone basically interested in a balance of power.

"After that incident, they became increasingly convinced that he wanted a 'correlation of forces' — to use their term — to tip the balance in America's favor. Then, there is no way they are going to deal with him."

Malik indicated that it is in the interests of the Soviet Union to establish detente. "They feel that the world trends are in their favor, and that a longer period of peace serves them

Chilly Relations

By the time Yuri Andropov assumed leadership of the Soviet Union some 15 months ago, U.S.-U.S.S.R. relations had already hit their lowest point since the time of the Cold War. The Soviet Union's invasion of Afghanistan during Brezhnev's dying days and its interference in Polish affairs did nothing to ease tensions between the two superpowers.

Andropov's regime didn't change anything. Last September's Soviet downing of a South Korean airliner and the later U.S. deployment of new missiles in Western Europe only intensified the conflict.

Today, despite the emergence of a new Soviet leader, it looks as though chilly relations will continue between the two nations. As one political science professor indicated to the Villanovan this week, Konstantin Chernenko knows virtually nothing about foreign policy, and he will thus have to reply heavily upon Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko as far as this area is concerned. Gromyko is not one to back down, and neither is Ronald Reagan.

So how long will these dismal relations continue? It seems that they will last as long as the respective leaders refuse to make any concessions to the other side. At a time when both powers should be aiming toward detente, all that seems to be flowing out of Washington and Moscow is more of that stale brand of rhetoric.

In an article published this week in Britain, however, Chernenko indicated that, in the Soviet view, the next step belongs to the United States. Our president should welcome that challenge and have the courage to make concessions that could have some impact on relations. Otherwise, the tension will only increase.

Phi Beta Kappa's Larger Question

Football is back, and quite a few members of the Villanova community are resting after their victory. But we should take advantage of this lull between the Trustees' decision and Villanova's return to the gridiron to consider what questions football's restoration could raise about this institution's priorities, and of the importance of the policies implemented by the Trustees reflecting those priorities.

When discussing why we do or do not want football back, we should concede what conditions would make the reinstatement of the game hurt us all. We might figure we are ready to pay the $35 yearly student fee which was used for the Division I-AA football revenue projections, and we might reject the administration's conclusions, but we should decide where we would draw the line on the demands of a football program.

In a letter to administrators and faculty members dated Dec. 16, 1983, Dr. Michael Burke evaluated the effects the restoration of football could have on Villanova's effort to get a chapter of Phi Beta Kappa, the national honor society.

Burke did not express any conclusions in this letter, but the details of his evaluation, as well as the feeling that he is trying to "spoil everyone's fun," can disguise the relevance of his concern to all of us.

The benefits of getting Phi Beta Kappa would not affect only the elite eligible to join, or only the faculty, or only the Honors Program. They would reflect on the University's academic excellence and commitment to liberal education. There are fewer than 300 colleges in America with chapters, and they include our nation's finest schools.

Next month three members of Phi Beta Kappa's Committee on Qualifications will visit the campus. The final decision on Villanova's application will be made in the summer of 1985.

The honor society is insistent that athletics not "distort the education process, detract from it, draw upon funds that should be devoted to it, or contribute to an overemphasis of scholarly performance by students."

No Help for Stuck Car

Is there any organization or office on campus which could show students a "small" amount of common courtesy and service when their cars become stuck on the ice in the university's parking lots? Certainly, the security and maintenance offices lack any telephone etiquette. And, the question of service? . . . well, that's "out of the question."

It all happened two weeks ago when my car became stuck on a sheet of ice in the main lot. As classes were in session, nobody was around to help push the car. Seeking help, I dialed the security office. In a rare attempt at originality, the gentleman replied to my request, "Who do you suggest we send to help you, hon?" Dear sir, if I knew who to suggest to help me, I would not be calling you.

My next attempt for help was successfully consistent; the maintenance department who refused: "Sorry dear, we're ready to go home now and our trucks are all put away."

As a full-time upperclassman here, I am granted the privilege of using the university parking lots, provided I pay the yearly parking fee. I have then to fear help pay the salaries of the security guards who patrol the parking lots as well as pay for use of the lots in general.

Since this parking fee is increased regularly, perhaps the Villanova community is entitled to an added service: a Villanova committee which can aid those stranded in emergency situations.

What is a person supposed to do in this situation? What if the next girl to become stranded is the daughter of a Villanova security guard? Who then, sir, "would you suggest to help her?"

If neither security nor maintenance are responsible for handling this problem, who is? Checking with the University Relations, the Dean of Students and the Association of Commuting Students, I have found that there is no group on campus to aid students in this circumstance. Is not this a legitimate request?

Fire Protection Lacking

I would like to take this opportunity to respond to the recent article on the "adequate" fire protection provided in dormitories and all other buildings on campus. I was appalled at the way Mr. Janoski, the director of Residence Life, and Mr. Meagher, the Maintenance supervisor, blamed the student vandalism as the reason for this University's lack of a better fire protection system. This may be true, but it is not as important as where this school's priorities should be.

Does the cost of replacing a fire extinguisher or a fire hose outweigh the possible loss of human life? Is money the only thing the University is ever concerned with? Has the cost of material items surpassed the safety of human life? If this is true, then this University has no right to call itself a Catholic institution. If a compatible fire protection system will save just one life, then I think it is definitely worth installing, no matter what the cost might be. At least then I, the other residents of Corr Hall and probably everyone else on campus, would be able to sleep a little easier.

And, if the fire equipment is supposedly checked on each week, why wasn't it brought to the attention of Maintenance that a fire extinguisher on the third floor of Corr Hall was locked in a metal case with a sheet of unbreakable plexiglass covering it?

As probably everyone on campus knows, there was a fire on the third floor of Corr in November, which caused a great deal of damage to a room and minor damages to the hallway itself.

Fortunately, this time, no one was seriously injured. But what if this happens again? Will those victims be as lucky? It is true that this incident has heightened the awareness of the residents of Corr, especially those living on the third floor, to the extreme dangers of fire. But, must a more serious accident occur in order for the University to do something?

As a resident, I paid a high price for my dorm room and I demand that my personal safety be included in that price. There is no acceptable excuse for this University not to supply this most important requirement in every possible way. If this University is truly concerned with enhancing its image as a first-choice school for high school seniors, they should first concern themselves with enhancing its image amongst its own students.

Let's just say, for the sake of argument, that we change the scenario a bit. Where would the reputation of this school be, if the occupants of that room in Corr, or other residents, were seriously injured in the fire? This University would have lawsuits to contend with and some explaining to do. I, for one, would not hesitate a moment to slap Maintenance and this school with a claim of extreme negligence for the condition of their fire equipment. Whether it was the intention of this University to install an impossible-to-reach fire extinguisher or not, the fact of the matter is that the plexiglass cover was there and this University must take responsibility for that.

If Villanova would rather wait and put new fire systems in as buildings are renovated, then that is their choice. Someday, it may turn out to be their mistake.

Their alternative could be to finish renovating all the buildings, especially the dormitories, before they begin any new construction plans.

The safety of on-campus residents is so much more important than the cost of replacing abused equipment. The University should have no other alternative than to install a proper and compatible fire protection system in line with today's regulations. Let's get our priorities straight, okay?

Precisely since the matter is so important, however, I would like to make one correction. Though I cannot honestly be sure whether the slip was mine or your reporter's, what I meant to identify as one of the most serious problems faced by the committee is the inadequate preparatory screening of the candidates done by their colleagues and their chairman — not their deans — in some departments.

Ex-Coach

To the Editor:

For those following the fates of Villanova football associated athletes (Howie Long, Willie Sydnor, et. al.) it should be brought to everyone's attention that former football coach Dick Bedesem has been hired as head coach at Bishop Egan High School in Fairless Hills, Pa. Bedesem, a Villanova graduate, joined the Wildcats' staff shortly after the program was reinstated in 1965, following a 25-year hiatus with Villanova now a [illegible]

Bedesem was one of the premier high school coaches in the area at Bishop Egan, winning five Catholic League and four city championships. His task is to improve a team that went 2-8 last season. Bedesem is more than qualified for the job and many wish him luck in his new endeavor.

More Chang

To the Editor:

I strongly object to the objection raised by Mark Gatti in last week's Villanovan. How a socially minded, progressive newspaper like the Villanovan can print such outrageous banter is utterly preposterous! Face it: Dr. Chang, although he may be a personal friend of Mr. Gatti, is inept, an overall burden to society, and he [illegible] daily dances at children's parties.

I find the decision reached by the Dean's committee to be laudable, even praiseworthy, and I trust that Villanova University will continue to reaffirm its academic mission.

Club Hosts First Math Competition

By CHARLENE PARDOE

Many organizations meets for purely social reasons, in order just to have some fun. These gatherings are usually informal and often give one a chance to meet new people. Such was the direction in the past of Villanova's math club, until they decided early last year to host their first high school math competition.

Several area high schools are competing in the contest chosen by how well they scored on a written test. These schools are Radnor, Marple Newtown, Germantown Academy, La Salle, Friends' Central, Upper Darby and Bonner.

Letters were sent to all schools within a 30-mile radius, noted Bev Farrell, president of the club. "All of those who responded then took a written test, and the top eight qualified," she said.

Mike Gormley, chairman of the contest, noted that it was designed "to get the math club involved in something active. It's a service project we developed to get the department involved in something to do with math," Gormley said. "Before this, the club rarely had any other activities other than socials."

A second reason for the contest is that they are trying to get high school students interested in math, noted Farrell, a senior majoring in math and education. "A lot of people do not have that much of an interest in math. Today they are overwhelmed by computers and think they can have a computer science major without a strong math background, which isn't true," she noted. "With a math major, however, a person can usually get a computer science degree with a little extra effort."

"Today (people) are overwhelmed by computers and think they can have a computer science major without a strong math background. With a math major, however, a person can usually get computer science degree..."

A third reason is to introduce the high school students to Villanova and to some of the faculty and math majors, according to Trina Kavacky. Kavacky is the club's vice president and is majoring in both math and honors. She felt the contest, "Will be a good way to let them know what college life is about. A contest like this will help them to think on their feet and may introduce them to new areas," she added.

Each of the schools will consist of a team of two students and one alternate. Two high schools at a time will then compete against one another in 15-minute sessions. "It is similar to the college bowl format," noted Gormley, a senior majoring in honors, math and philosophy. "First there will be a toss-up question, and then, if that one is answered right, they will get a bonus question. They will have 15 seconds to answer the toss-up question and 45 seconds to answer a bonus," he added.

Mike Gormley

At the same time, because it is a double elimination tournament, two rounds will be going on at once. One will be in the chemistry lecture hall and the other will be in the physics lecture hall.

"The questions will cover a lot of things math majors know, up to a level of geometry," Gormley said. All of these questions, which were made up by members of the math club and some of the faculty, are designed to help a person think on his feet.

The information they are asked will be competitive as to what a high school student who is good at math will know. "The questions asked will cover a lot of things people strong in math know," Farrell noted.

"What the students will get out of the experience is an introduction to new subjects," said Kavacky. "If they're going to prepare for the competition, they may see some things that they haven't seen before. It will introduce them to new problems and ways of looking at them," she noted.

But it will also introduce them to college. As Farrell pointed out, "It will give them a taste of what college is like. Some people have even volunteered to be tour guides," she said. "They will take them around and give them a tour of the campus."

What makes this different from math in the classroom environment, however, is the fact that it isn't comprised of written tests. And that in itself should make it more positive.

DJ Starts His Own Business

By JOE ALESSANDRINE

Every crowd of friends often has one person who is more independent and enterprising than the rest. In his crowd, Ken Schaffer, a communication arts junior, is that person.

While his friends were watching re-runs of Star Trek, Schaffer was putting a new picture tube in his television. While his friends were building model cars and airplanes, he was building an alarm for his bedroom door. "I started experimenting in electronics at about the age of 10, and I haven't stopped yet," Schaffer says.

His buddies always knew that he had a creative mind and that he'd be successful some day. That some day however, came sooner than imagined.

Schaffer, 20, now owns and operates a mobile disc jockey business from his home in nearby Lansdowne. His brainchild is Schaffer Sound Productions (SSP).

Schaffer has four employees: Joe Ahern, Joe Mairarano, Joe Alessandrine and Gary Heller. He and his DJ's are a close knit group. For Christmas, Schaffer bought SSP jackets for each one. He believes that having friends on his staff "ensures trust and honesty." Mairarano adds, "I haven't had a more fair boss yet."

The story behind SSP began in 1977. Schaffer, then a high school freshman, was impressed by the popular disc jockeys and the area high school dances.

With birthday money from his grandparents, he bought his first system. Schaffer reminisces, "I had a 40-watt amplifier, two turntables, two speakers and a microphone, that's it."

Founder of Schaffer Sound Productions, Ken Schaffer.

He's come a long way, equipment wise. Schaffer now has five professional systems consisting of Technics 1200 turntables, BGW and Peavy amplifiers, Newmark and Biamp mixers, Technics and Sharp cassette decks and Cerwin Vega V-35 speakers, not to mention sound reinforcement for public address and band use.

Musically, SSP has four complete record collections and a complete tape collection for reserve. Schaffer feels that he can now supply music from any era for any occasion, including weddings, which he estimates SSP has done nearly 300 in its seven-year history.

He also believes that each member of his staff is capable and responsible. "I feel very confident in the guys working with me," he noted. "They all have good personalities and use good judgment at all times," he says.

He personally supplied the music for the A.C.S. party here last September. SSP disc jockeys have also performed at other area colleges, such as Ursinus, Philadelphia College of Textiles and Sciences, and the University of Pennsylvania.

At 20, Ken Schaffer has surely accomplished much. But, he still is not satisfied. "I'd really like to become a program manager at a local radio station. But I'd keep the business (SSP) on the side," he says.

In an age where young people are so unsure of their future and bide time idly, Ken Schaffer is the exception. For he knows what he wants, and his chances of reaching his goal appear especially

Male Tradition Continues With Villanova Singers

By ANDY MILLER

On Feb. 25, the 45 members of the Villanova Singers will give a performance of the "Faure Requiem," a black-tie affair that will be open to the public. The concert, to be sure, will be a traditional performance by a tradition-bound group.

Ever since 1954, when the group first began, the Singers have been entertaining audiences with their melodic style and smooth harmonies not only in the United States, but in Poland and West Europe as well.

One of the most interesting things about the ensemble is that it has remained all-male, which makes it one of the few such singing groups on the East Coast. And they intend to stay that way.

"We're all-male and we like it that way," said the president of the group John Timko. "It is a matter of tradition, and there are not many groups left that are just for men."

The Singers throughout the year have built an outstanding reputation in this area and beyond, due mainly to their hard work and preparation.

Compared to other such organizations in the area, Timko feels Villanova's group is well-qualified. "Penn has an absolutely outstanding group," he noted. "Their shows are almost like Broadway shows. Our music, on the other hand, tends to be somewhat more serious, so, in that sense, it would be like comparing apples to oranges. But I think we stack up pretty well to other groups in the area."

The concert, featuring music from the "Faure Requiem," will take place at the Valley Forge Military Academy in the main chapel.

ing groups there, and each will do a set of four or five songs and then combine on stage for the final numbers.

"It's an absolutely beautiful piece of music," said Timko. "We were originally going to perform it in the chapel in St. Mary's, but the construction work going on there shut us out. We're primarily having it at Valley Forge because they have an outstanding pipe organ."

In the course of a year the Singers give about 20 concerts, and for the remainder of this season have a busy schedule. They are going to tour Boston in April, where they will perform at Regis College, located just outside the city, and their annual spring concert is scheduled for April 14.

Most of the work is played on the piano by Michael Luisi, the group's director, who has greatly broadened their repertoire. Timko and Peter Gulia, a student at Villanova's Law School and the Singers' alumni director, also play musical accompaniment.

The Singers attract a lot of attention, as witnessed by a recent article in The Philadelphia Inquirer. Timko says, "We're very pleased with that story in The Inquirer . . . Peter Gulia, in particular, has been working his fingers to the bone lately, and now he's dealing with the alumni mailing list."

"Some of the guys can't really sing that well, but they're very dedicated," Timko said. "They sing with the other groups that are open to males."

Since 1953, when they first began, the Singers have consistently achieved excellence and established a high reputation. By following tradition, in fact, they themselves have become a tradi-

Chilly Relations

By the time Yuri Andropov assumed leadership of the Soviet Union some 15 months ago, U.S.-U.S.S.R. relations had already hit their lowest point since the time of the Cold War. The Soviet Union's invasion of Afghanistan during Brezhnev's dying days and its interference in Polish affairs did nothing to ease tensions between the two superpowers.

Andropov's regime didn't change anything. Last September's Soviet downing of a South Korean airliner and the later U.S. deployment of new missiles in Western Europe only intensified the conflict.

Today, despite the emergence of a new Soviet leader, it looks as though chilly relations will continue between the two nations. As one political science professor indicated to the Villanovan this week, Konstantin Chernenko knows virtually nothing about foreign policy, and he will thus have to reply heavily upon Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko as far as this area is concerned. Gromyko is not one to back down, and neither is Ronald Reagan.

So how long will these dismal relations continue? It seems that they will last as long as the respective leaders refuse to make any concessions to the other side. At a time when both powers should be aiming toward detente, all that seems to be flowing out of Washington and Moscow is more of that stale brand of rhetoric.

In an article published this week in Britain, however, Chernenko indicated that, in the Soviet view, the next step belongs to the United States. Our president should welcome that challenge and have the courage to make concessions that could have some impact on relations. Otherwise, the tension will only increase.

Phi Beta Kappa's Larger Question

Football is back, and quite a few members of the Villanova community are resting after their victory. But we should take advantage of this lull between the Trustees' decision and Villanova's return to the gridiron to consider what questions football's restoration could raise about this institution's priorities, and of the importance of the policies implemented by the Trustees reflecting those priorities.

When discussing why we do or do not want football back, we should concede what conditions would make the reinstatement of the game hurt us all. We might figure we are ready to pay the $35 yearly student fee which was used for the Division I-AA football revenue projections, and we might reject the administration's conclusions, but we should decide where we would draw the line on the demands of a football program.

In a letter to administrators and faculty members dated Dec. 16, 1983, Dr. Michael Burke evaluated the effects the restoration of football could have on Villanova's effort to get a chapter of Phi Beta Kappa, the national honor society.

Burke did not express any conclusions in this letter, but the details of his evaluation, as well as the feeling that he is trying to "spoil everyone's fun," can disguise the relevance of his concern to all of us.

The benefits of getting Phi Beta Kappa would not affect only the elite eligible to join, or only the faculty, or only the Honors Program. They would reflect on the University's academic excellence and commitment to liberal education. There are fewer than 300 colleges in America with chapters, and they include our nation's finest schools.

Next month three members of Phi Beta Kappa's Committee on Qualifications will visit the campus. The final decision on Villanova's application will be made in the summer of 1985.

The honor society is insistent that athletics not "distort the education process, detract from it, draw upon funds that should be devoted to it, or contribute to an undervaluation of scholarly performance by students."

Of course, the restoration of football might not affect the University's application of Phi Beta Kappa. But it would be an injury to us all if it killed it, and that conviction should be borne in mind when discussing the return of the game to Villanova.

No Help for Stuck Car

Is there any organization or office on campus which could show students a "small" amount of common courtesy and service when their cars become stuck on the ice in the university's parking lots? Certainly, the security and maintenance offices lack any telephone etiquette. And, the question of service? . . . well, that's "out of the question."

It all happened two weeks ago when my car became stuck on a sheet of ice in the main lot. As classes were in session, nobody was around to help push the car. Seeking help, I dialed the security office. In a rare attempt at originality, the gentleman replied to my request, "Who do you suggest we send to help you, hon?" Dear sir, if I knew who to suggest to help me, I would not be calling you.

My next attempt for help was successfully consistent; the maintenance department also refused: "Sorry dear, we're ready to go home now and our trucks are all put away."

As a full-time upperclassman here, I am granted the privilege of using the university parking lots, provided I pay the annual parking fee. I suspect these fees help pay the salaries of the security guards who patrol the parking lots, as well as pay for use of the lots in general.

Since this parking fee is increased regularly, perhaps the Villanova community is entitled to an added service: a Villanova committee which can aid those stranded in emergency situations.

What is a person supposed to do in this situation? What if the next girl to become stranded is the daughter of a Villanova security guard? Who then, sir, "would you suggest to help her?"

If neither security nor maintenance are responsible for handling this problem, who is? Checking with University Relations, the Dean of Students and the Association of Commuting Students, I have learned there exists no group on campus to aid students in this circumstance. Is not this a legitimate request?

Fire Protection Lacking

I would like to take this opportunity to respond to the recent article on the "adequate" fire protection provided in dormitories and all other buildings on campus. I was appalled at the way Mr. Janosik, the director of Residence Life, and Mr. Meagher, the Maintenance supervisor, blamed the student vandalism as the reason for this University's lack of a better fire protection system. This may be true, but it is not as important as where this school's priorities should be.

Does the cost of replacing a fire extinguisher or a fire hose outweigh the possible loss of human life? Is money the only thing the University is ever concerned with? Has the cost of material items surpassed the safety of human life? If this is true, then this University has no right to call itself a Catholic institution. If a compatible fire protection system will save just one life, then I think it is definitely worth installing, no matter what the cost might be. At least then I, the other residents of Corr Hall and probably everyone else on campus, would be able to sleep a little easier.

And, if the fire equipment is supposedly checked on each week, why wasn't it brought to the attention of Maintenance that a fire extinguisher on the third floor of Corr Hall was locked in a metal case with a sheet of unbreakable plexiglass covering it?

As probably everyone on campus knows, there was a fire on the third floor of Corr in November, which caused a great deal of damage to a room and minor damages to the hallway itself.

Fortunately, this time, no one was seriously injured. But what if this happens again? Will those victims be as lucky? It is true that this incident has heightened the awareness of the residents of Corr, especially those living on the third floor, to the extreme dangers of fire. But, must a more serious accident occur in order for the University to do something?

As a resident, I paid a high price for my dorm room and I demand that my personal safety be included in that price. There is no acceptable excuse for this University not to supply this most important requirement in every possible way. If this University is truly concerned with enhancing its image as a first-choice school for high school seniors, they should first concern themselves with enhancing its image amongst its own students.

Let's just say, for the sake of argument, that we change the scenario a bit. Where would the reputation of this school be, if the occupants of that room in Corr, or other residents, were seriously injured in the fire? This University would have lawsuits to contend with and some explaining to do. I, for one, would not hesitate a moment to slap Maintenance and this school with a claim of extreme negligence for the condition of their fire equipment. Whether it was the intention of this University to install an impossible-to-reach fire extinguisher or not, the fact of the matter is that the plexiglass cover was there and this University must take responsibility for that.

If Villanova would rather wait and put new fire systems in as buildings are renovated, then that is their choice. Someday, it may turn out to be their mistake.

Their alternative could be to finish renovating all the buildings, especially the dormitories, before they begin any new construction plans.

The safety of on-campus residents is so much more important than the cost of replacing abused equipment. The University should have no other alternative than to install a proper and compatible fire protection system in line with today's regulations. Let's get our priorities straight, okay?

Precisely since the matter is so important, however, I would like to make one correction. Though I cannot honestly be sure whether the slip was mine or your reporter's, what I meant to identify as one of the most serious problems faced by the committee is the inadequate preparatory screening of the candidates done by their colleagues and their chairman — not their deans — in some departments.

Ex-Coach

To the Editor:

For those following the fates of Villanova-football-associated athletes (Howie Long, Willie Sydnor, et. al.) it should be brought to everyone's attention that former football coach Dick Bedesem has been hired as head coach at Neshaminy High School. Bedesem, a Villanova graduate, coached the Wildcats for seven years before the program was dropped in 1981 following a 6-5 season; complete with victories over Cincinnati, Temple and Boston College.

Bedesem was one of the premier high school coaches in the area at Bishop Egan, winning five Catholic League and four city championships. His task is to improve a team that went 2-8 last season. Bedesem is more than qualified for the job and many wish him luck in his new endeavor.

More Chang

To the Editor:

I strongly object to the objection raised by Mark Gatti in last week's Villanovan. How a social-minded, progressive newspaper like the Villanovan can print such outrageous banter is utterly preposterous! Face it: Dr. Chang, although he may be a personal friend of Mr. Gatti, is inept, an overall burden to society, and he belly dances at children's parties.

I find the decision reached by the Dean's committee to be laudable, even praisworthy, and I trust that Villanova University will continue to reaffirm its academic mission.

DJ Starts His Own Business

By JOE ALESSANDRINE

Every crowd of friends often has one person who is more independent and enterprising than the rest. In his crowd, Ken Schaffer, a communication arts junior, is that person.

While his friends were watching re-runs of Star Trek, Schaffer was putting a new picture tube in his television. While his friends were building model cars and airplanes, he was building an alarm for his bedroom door. "I started experimenting in electronics at about the age of 10, and I haven't stopped yet," Schaffer says.

His buddies always knew that he had a creative mind and that he'd be successful some day. That some day however, came sooner than imagined.

Schaffer, 20, now owns and operates a mobile disc jockey business from his home in nearby Lansdowne. His brainchild is Schaffer Sound Productions (SSP).

Schaffer has four employees: Joe Ahern, Joe Mairarano, Joe Alessandrine and Gary Heller. He and his DJ's are a close knit group. For Christmas, Schaffer bought SSP jackets for each one. He believes that having friends on his staff "ensures trust and honesty." Mairarano adds, "I haven't had a more fair boss yet."

The story behind SSP began in 1977. Schaffer, then a high school freshman, was impressed by the popular disc jockeys and the area high school dances.

With birthday money from his grandparents, he bought his first system. Schaffer reminisces, "I had a 40-watt amplifier, two turntables, two speakers and a microphone, that's it."

Founder of Schaffer Sound Productions, Ken Schaffer.

He's come a long way, equipment wise. Schaffer now has five professional systems consisting of Technics 1200 turntables, BGW and Peavy amplifiers, Newmark and Biamp mixers, Technics and Sharp cassette decks and Cerwin Vega V-35 speakers, not to mention sound reinforcement for public address and band use.

Musically, SSP has four complete record collections and a complete tape collection for reserve. Schaffer feels that he can now supply music from any era for any occasion, including weddings, of which he estimates SSP has done nearly 300 in its seven-year history.

He also believes that each member of his staff is capable and responsible. "I feel very confident in the guys working with me," he noted. "They all have good personalities and use good judgment at all times," he says.

He personally supplied the music for the A.C.S. party here last September. SSP disc jockeys have also performed at other area colleges, such as Ursinus, Philadelphia College of Textiles and Sciences, and the University of Pennsylvania.

At 20, Ken Schaffer has surely accomplished much. But, he still is not satisfied. "I'd really like to become a program manager at a local radio station. But I'd keep the business (SSP) on the side," he says.

In an age where young people are so unsure of their future and kids time fifty, Ken Schaffer is the exception. For he knows what he wants, and his chances of reaching his goal appear especially

Male Tradition Continues With Villanova Singers

By ANDY MILLER

On Feb. 25, the 45 members of the Villanova Singers will give a performance of the "Faure Requiem," a black-tie affair that will be open to the public. The concert, to be sure, will be a traditional performance by a tradition-bound group.

Ever since 1954, when the group first began, the Singers have been entertaining audiences with their melodic style and smooth harmonies not only in the United States, but in Poland and West Europe as well.

One of the most interesting things about the ensemble is that it has remained all-male, which makes it one of the few such singing groups on the East Coast. And they intend to stay that way.

"We're all-male and we like it that way," said the president of the group John Timko. "It is a matter of tradition, and there are not many groups left that are just for men."

The Singers throughout the years have built an outstanding reputation in this area and beyond, due mainly to their hard work and preparation.

Compared to other such organizations in the area, Timko feels Villanova's group is well-qualified. "Penn has an absolutely outstanding group," he noted. "Their shows are almost like Broadway shows. Our music, on the other hand, tends to be somewhat more serious, so, in that sense, it would be like comparing apples to oranges. But I think we stack up pretty well to other groups in the area."

The concert, featuring music from the "Faure Requiem," will take place at the Valley Forge Military Academy in the main chapel.

ing groups there, and each will do a set of four or five songs and then combine on stage for the final numbers.

"It's an absolutely beautiful piece of music," said Timko. "We were originally going to perform it in the chapel in St. Mary's, but the construction work going on there shut us out. We're primarily having it at Valley Forge because they have an outstanding pipe organ."

In the course of a year the Singers give about 20 concerts, and for the remainder of this season have a busy schedule. They are going to tour Boston in April, where they will perform at Regis College, located just outside the city, and their annual spring concert is scheduled for April 14.

Most of the work is played on the piano by Michael Luisi, the group's director, who has greatly broadened their repertoire. Timko and Peter Gulia, a student at Villanova's Law School and the Singers' alumni director, also play musical accompaniment.

The Singers attract a lot of attention, as witnessed by a recent article in The Philadelphia Inquirer. Timko says, "We're very pleased with that story in The Inquirer . . . Peter Gulia, in particular, has been working his fingers to the bone lately, and now he's dealing with the alumni mailing list."

"Some of the guys can't really sing that well, but they're very dedicated," Timko said. "They sing with the other groups that are open to males."

Since 1953, when they first began, the Singers have consistently achieved excellence and established a high reputation. By following tradition, in fact, they themselves have become a tradi-

New Graduate Journal to be Published in March

By CHARLENE PARDOE

Graduate students in the department of philosophy here are putting together a new publication on campus for graduate students of any major. The journal is titled Concept, and the editors will be accepting graduate papers, covering any topic, from now until March 15.

What the journal is committed to is a belief that the philosophical reflection of graduate students can make a contribution to the discussion of a wide range of social, political, and other concerns. Bob Walsh, a graduate assistasnt in the philosophy department and "Concept's" editor-in-chief, noted that "it has been founded to provide graduate students in every field a forum for the expression of their philosophical views.

"The first issue of "Concept" will be devoted exclusively to the Last Hanover

Due to a shift of idea in the writer, this will be the last week of Perry Simon's "Hanover." However, Simon has created a new strip which will begin next week entitled "Lotusland," a strip that will be in a 9 in.-by-3 in. panel. John Hanover will appear in "Lotusland," but he will not be in it on a regular basis, nor will there be any other regular characters.

But the setting will stay the same. It takes place out in California and centers around show-biz and all else the state implies.

If you'd like to express your opinion on the new strip next week, just drop off a letter at the Villanovan in Room 201 Dougherty.

work of Villanova graduate students," he said. "After that, we'd like to expand it to include those in the Philadelphia Philosophy Consortium, which is comprised of Bryn Mawr, the University of Pennsylvania, Temple and Villanova."

What it will cover is a cross-section of arts from different departments. "The papers should have philosophical ramifications," Walsh noted. "They should be philosophical in nature, but don't need to be in content. We would like to see the papers cover a general appeal rather than a specific appeal."

The main reason for the paper, though, is to bring together graduate students. "We would like first to see graduate students have some kind of vehicle to get them more involved in what is going on at Villanova," he said. "With this journal, we feel that it should be intellectually more meaningful to graduate students."

Each edition will consist of five or six articles, with each article being approximately 20 pages long. This year one edition will be published, but Walsh hopes to see two being published in the near future.

Besides Concept, there is just one other periodical like this in the United States. "There is only one other in the country that is devoted to the work of grad students of a philosophical nature," Walsh noted "which is located at Southern Illinois University.

NROTC Program Selects New Battalion Commander

By BRIAN J. McDEVITT

On Jan. 17, Midshipman First Class Tom Hull replaced Midshipman First Class Chris Cover as commander of the battalion of midshipmen in the NROTC.

Villanova's battalion of midshipmen is composed of approximately 260 students. These students, some of whom receive financial benefits, don the uniform of a naval midshipman one day a week and participate in various military functions. Of these students, Hull has reached the pinnacle of his midshipman career by becoming the battalion commander.

As Hull stepped into the job, he stressed he would continue to maintain Cover's high standards. Hull stated, "Cover redefined standards of discipline which were previously lacking in Villanova's NROTC. He fine-tuned the battalion and made it a more regimented military organization."

Hull thus heads a highly qualified battalion staff and will supervise the training of the battalion for the spring semester.

Hull's job is to oversee the professional development of midshipmen in the NROTC Unit. He meets with Capt. Tansey, commanding officer of Villanova NROTC, in weekly conferences. It should be noted that the active duty personnel on the NROTC staff serve in advisory and educational positions. Hull, then, serves as the communication link between the active duty officers on the staff and the battalion.

Starting off the new semester, Hull urges all midshipmen to show more enthusiasm. "Everyone should want to be here. We should all show enthusiasm in the unit. I intend to put forth my best effort and expect everyone else to do the same," he said. He also stresses better academic performance as a goal for the battalion. "I would like to see an overall average of 3.0 or better and more utilization of our education programs."

He has found his four years of NROTC at Villanova very rewarding. "I've grown personally and matured through the unit. I came in as a scholarship student using my first year as a trial period, but I quickly realized NROTC was for me and became very enthusiastic."

He is now looking forward to his career in the Navy's nuclear power program. After attending nuclear power school, he hopes to be stationed on board a nuclear-powered cruiser and later possibly serve a tour aboard a nuclear-powered aircraft carrier. Thirty years from now, in fact, Hull hopes to be head of the nuclear power program.

Well, boys and girls, here it is . . . For better or worse (we like to think worse), we present to you the winning entry in WKWC's semi-annual writing contest . . . The two geeks who wrote it don't want their last names published (we wonder why), so all we can tell you is that Stu and Ron put this piece of trash together . . . We hope you can sift your way through it . . . We certainly could not . . . And so . . .

Well, the other week's WKWC told us contestants not to hold anything back, so they asked for it . . . According to that issue's article about the housing situation, the University had a chance to buy the Chetwynd apartments, but decided not to because it "was not a sound financial investment" . . . Oh, you mean like the Connelly Center . . . One sound financial investment the University did make was repaving the parking lot with those smaller yellow spaces for compact cars. It's been such a success that they plan to soon add more special colored spaces. There will be orange spaces placed 3 feet apart for motorcycles, green spaces 15 feet apart for cars worth over $15,000 (since owners of expensive cars usually like to take up two spaces anyway), black spaces for hearses, fire-engine red for fire engines, and rust-colored spaces way in the back for cars from New Jersey . . . But seriously folks, until the new dorms are built, you're all gonna have to participate in the housing lottery if you want to live on campus next year. The lottery's gonna be run a little differently this year, though . . . Anyone who wants to live on campus next year must write a 300-word essay entitled "Why I want to live on campus at Villanova." There's so many reasons to live on campus — the liberal visitation policy, the liberal alcohol policy, the wild parties, the luxurious furnishings in the rooms, the aroma of trash (and worse) in the hallways, and of course, those good old (and we mean old) security guards . . . speaking of senior citizens . . . we bet you seniors can't wait for the 50-Days till-graduation party . . . you better be prepared though . . . to get in you have to show your ticket, senior ID, proof of 21, birth certificate, signed permission from your academic adviser, three references, a note from your mother (notarized), and a 300-word essay titled "Why I want to go to the 50-Days-Till-Graduation Party" . . . they're doing away with the wristbands and hand stamps though . . . this time they're just gonna use a branding iron . . . speaking of days, there's only 14 more days until spring break . . . we hope all you people going to Ft. Lauderdale read the fine print on your contracts . . . the trip will be chaperoned by the Radnor Police . . . Anyway, until next time, we still think the Dean's committee should have hired that Korean guy Chang . . . Who Knows Who Cares . . .

Billy Joel Takes Over Spectrum

By DEAN C. BALSAMINI

I don't care what you say anymore this is my life; go ahead with your own life, leave me alone."
"My Life" — Billy Joel

Throughout his career Billy Joel has always been his own man, and in the process, he has often been lambasted by the critics. He has in the past been called childish, unprofessional and even a "cheap lounge act." But in truth, the man is one of the greatest contributors to contemporary music, with five Grammys and close to 40 million record sales under his belt.

This past Monday and Tuesday evenings, sold out Spectrum crowds found out that Joel is one of music's best performers and a master showman who doesn't take himself too seriously. The "Piano Man" is touring in support of his latest LP, "An Innocent Man," which pays tribute to the styles of the '50s and '60s. It is an album that is completely different from Joel's last record, the brooding, stark, "The Nylon Curtain."

From a "Piano Man" . . .

"I never do the same thing twice," Joel has said. "To keep me interested, there always has to be something new, something different. I decided I wanted to have as much fun as I could have," said the performer, "and I wanted it to sound like I was having fun."

If one word can be used to describe Monday's Spectrum performance, it's fun. Joel always goes out of his way to make sure both he and his audience are having a good time; and he's not afraid to relate to them as if they were the buddy next door coming over for a few beers.

Joel took to the stage, mimicked the theme from "Rocky" on the piano and proceeded to perform a rousing two-hour set. The first part of the show consisted of Joel's heavier tunes such as "Angry Young Man," "Piano Man," and "Allentown," while the latter part saw him highlight the new LP.

Joel, who was decked out in his familiar suit and sneakers attire, was constantly moving back and forth from piano to frontman depending upon whether the song was a ballad or a rocker. He has perfected the art of writing pretty ballads, without being sappy. "Don't Ask Me Why," "Innocent Man," and especially the beautiful

"I never do the same thing twice. To keep me interested, there always has to be something new, something different."

"Just The Way You Are," are such examples.

The second half of the evening was quite electric as Joel bounced and bopped to many of his well-known rock tunes. Throughout the show, the Spectrum crowd was on its feet dancing right along with Joel and responding to his every movement.

One of the many highlights of seeing Joel perform is that he has an extremely funny, wise-guy sense of humor. After performing "An Innocent Man," Joel put on his shades and commented in a pseudo-German accent: "Now that we have explored the romantic side of relationships, it's time to explore the darker side, where we enter the intriguing world of sado-masochism." With that, the band struck up the first few bars of "Stilletto," the S & M hit from the "52nd Street" LP.

. . . to an "Innocent Man."

Also, when introducing one of the band members, Joel commented that "not only does this guy play, but he also does a little a this an' a little a that, he makes faces, does a little schtick . . ."

The New York native also reminisced about the days of acapella where people who hung out on the streets sang because, "we didn't have any drugs."

It's really a lost art," Joel said in reference to acapella, and he proceeded to sing "The Longest Time," a do-wop tune that recaptures the beauty of that musical style. Joel and his band clicked their fingers and harmonized beautifully, in what was definitely a highlight of the evening.

"Billy the Kid's" band is first-rate, and includes some of today's finest musicians: Doug Stegmeyer is the bass player, Russell Javors, rhythm guitarist, David Lebolt, keyboards, David Brown, lead guitar, Mark Rivera, horns, and old stand-by Liberty DeVitto on drums.

Rivera exhibited some fine playing, especially on sax during "Scenes From An Italian Restaurant" and "Big Shot," while DeVitto's pounding on drums gave each song a rawness that isn't heard on vinyl.

In contrast to last year's show at the Spectrum, this one was somewhat slick as Joel brought "The Affordables" along with him for good measure. C'mon video freaks, you know who they are. They're the five guys who helped give the "An Innocent Man" LP its nostalgic sound with their horns and backing vocals. "You May Be Right" was one song that was jazzed up by the addition of horns, but it was during "Tell Her About It" that one really appreciated their presence.

In order to give them their just due, "The Affordables" are Larry Etkin, Bob Livingood and Glenn Stulpin on horns with Bob Duncan and Peter Hewlett on backing vocals. Hewlett has an astounding voice that brought cheers from the crowd during "An Innocent Man" as he and Joel brilliantly sang what really is a difficult vocal piece.

For an encore, Joel performed "Tell Her About It," "You May Be Right," and the song that put him originally on the musical map, "Captain Jack." It was this underground tune that was regularly played by WMMR back in 1972 and built Joel a cult following. In concert, "Captain Jack" is extremely haunting (pardon the cliche), as Joel sings from the gut almost maniacly.

The satirical "Only The Good Die Young" was the final song of a most memorable concert that more than filled the pallates of concert goers hungry for some good ol' rock 'n' roll.

Legend of Lennon Lives

By NICK ANASTASIO

"Milk and Honey," the album that John Lennon was working on (and almost finished) at the time of his death, is very similar to "Double Fantasy," the album that preceded it. The cover photos are almost identical (except that "Milk and Honey's" is in color), all the musicians from "Double Fantasy" appear on "Milk and Honey," and both albums are "Heart Plays" — one Lennon song followed by a Yoko Ono song and then back to Lennon.

Like he did on "Double Fantasy," Lennon has proved once again that he is still rock and roll's foremost genius. Songs like "I Don't Wanna Face It" ("You wanna save humanity/but it's people that you just can't stand") and "Nobody Told Me" reflect on the confusing and complex world in which we live, while "(Forgive Me) My Little Flower Princess" and "Grow Old With Me" are thoughtful ballads.

"I'm Stepping Out" opens the album. The lyrics are taken from Lennon's days as a house-husband, while the music sets the tone for the rest of his songs. The music is not as hard-edged as "I'm Losing You" (from "Double Fantasy"), but it is still up-tempo rock and roll. "I'm Stepping Out" and "I Don't Wanna Face It" show that, unlike the other three ex-Beatles, Lennon had not forgotten how to rock.

The version of "Nobody Told Me" on the album is faster, and slightly different, than the single version. Those differences make this cut the better of the two.

The highlight of the album, however, is "Grow Old With Me," Lennon's best ballad since "Imagine," along with Yoko's "Let [illegible]." "Grow Old With Me" was the backbone of the "Heart Play" concept. Both songs were originally scheduled to be part of "Double Fantasy," but there was not enough time to finish them properly. Lennon wanted a symphony and horns backing him up, but he never got the chance to go into a studio and record it. "Grow Old with Me" features Lennon on piano, with only a rhythm box backing him up. It was recorded in his bedroom — the last song he ever recorded. Inspired by a Robert Browning poem, "Grow Old With Me" is the perfect marriage proposal: "Grow old along with me/The best is yet to be/When our time has come/We will be as one/ God bless our love."

Unfortunately, "Milk and Honey" is also like "Double Fantasy" in that Yoko Ono's songs do not complement Lennon's. Yoko is still an avant-garde artiste; her music is disjointed, her lyrics incomplete. "Your Hands" is sung

ABC Expands Its Horizons

By MIKE MATHIS

"Beauty Stab," the latest album by ABC, opens up a new door in the annals of techno-pop new wave music. It goes beyond the limits of traditional new wave and adds a vibrant new sound to the genre.

Unlike its predecessor, "The Lexicon of Love," "Beauty Stab" explores many different brands of musical styles, including classical and Caribbean influences. Both musically and conceptually, it does not pick up where "The Lexicon of Love" left off; instead, it breaks new ground with the influx of heavy metal bass lines and guitar licks into the bulk of the album's compositions.

"That was Then but This is Now" was chosen to be the album's first single and it's no wonder why. Martin Fry's vocal pitch is similar to David Bowie's and the Romantics-like tempo seems melodramatic. Excellent synthesizer work by the trio's utilityman Mark White makes this a highly enjoyable number. Although it has not received much airplay on American radio stations, it is a hit in Great Britain.

"If I Ever Thought You'd Be Lonely" retains the band's musical roots and is the most prevalent song on the album. It is reminiscent of the music that the trio performed during its club days in Sheffield, England, and exemplifies the influence that such diverse artists as The Beatles, David Bowie, and the Clash have on them.

"Bite the Hand" utilizes stereo effect to the fullest extent, with no single instrument balanced completely onto one channel. Its string accompaniment in accordance with the synthesizer qualifies this number as one of the album's best.

The album's rockingest song is a short ditty called "Unzip." ABC truly unzips their potential here; the song is equipped with earripping guitar chords and a quick tempo.

'Space' is Filled with Action and Drama

By TOM BARAN

Stanley Mott is an engineer involved in the space program. Norman Grant is a U.S. senator who fights all who oppose the space program. Dieter Kolff is a German rocket scientist whose dream is to send rockets past the moon. Cynthia Rhee is a reporter who strives to show the world what the space program really is like. All these people are characters in James Michener's novel Space.

Space is much like other Michener novels in that it deals with an historical topic but contains fictitious characters.

The book follows the development of the United States space program from World War II to the present. It shows how the nation rises and falls with the ups and downs of both our program and the Soviets'. Not only does the novel deal with the space program in general, but it also shows how it affects the lives of the individuals involved.

Michener is an author who develops his characters so well that you can easily picture them and develop a feeling toward them. Dieter Kolff, for example, was one of Hitler's top rocket scientists, who brought with him to the United States a knowledge of rockets far greater than any American's. Michener shows the reader how Kolff struggles for acceptance among his peers and for his sometimes radical ideas. When Kolff's rocket reaches the moon the reader, along with Kolff, feels a great sense of joy and accomplishment.

Another character in the story is John Pope, husband of the woman responsible for pushing much of the space budget through the Senate. Pope was one of the astronauts on a manned space flight. The novel traces his life from when he first discovered the stars until he actually flew in space.

Michener does a fantastic job on this novel. He takes a subject which could be boring and presents it in a fashion which is entertaining, while at the same time very realistic. Some people may not think that the novel has enough action, but this is far from true. From Kolff's escape from the Germans to Pope's run with death, Michener keeps the story moving with action and drama.

CANCER. NOT KNOWING THE RISKS IS YOUR GREATEST RISK.

A lot of people think cancer is unbeatable.

That simply isn't true. In fact, over two million people have had cancer and survived to lead happy, normal lives.

And not only can cancer be beaten, it can also be prevented.

There are definite precautions that have been proven to decrease your risk of getting certain cancers.

Ask your local American Cancer Society to send you a free booklet about cancer risks.

Living With the Wolves

By RON GAHAGAN

If one wants a break from the recent run of shallow and sex-oriented movies, then "Never Cry Wolf" offers a pleasant change. Although it has its weaknesses, the beautiful scenery and the message that the movie conveys make it worth seeing.

Charles Martin Smith who stars as Henry in "Hill Street Blues" portrays biologist Robert Tyler, who is chosen for the Lupis Project. This project is the study of Canadian wolves in the Arctic, determining whether or not they are destroying the vanishing Caribou deer. It sounds simple enough, but the frigid and isolated Arctic forces self-preservation to be the first priority of Tyler.

After a rather comical battle with the elements, Tyler is saved by an Eskimo and then left alone to observe the mysterious wolves, about which he has nightmares. Summer begins and he sets his sights on a particular wolf and its family. Through mutual respect the two of them develop a "friendship." This touches the viewer's heart in a way that only man-animal relationships can.

When Tyler discovers that the wolves are actually living mostly off mice, he is forced to prove this somehow for the biologists back home. He does this as any good biologist would do — by living off of only mice. Disgusting at first, one is surprised at the many enticing forms in which mice can be served. This act symbolizes the developing bond between Tyler and the wolves.

Just how much Tyler has changed is seen when he meets the pilot portrayed by Brian Dennery, whom he hasn't seen for six months. His disgust for the pilot and his greedy friends evokes a strong feeling of hate directed toward human society and its abuse of nature. This is where the movie's weaknesses appear; although the viewer can sense the feelings, it is poorly articulated by Tyler's narration. He consistently understates the character change that has occurred within himself.

The fact that this is a true story and the excellent camera work in the Arctic are enough to make one want to pay to see this movie. However, Smith does a fine job and the message is there; thus the movie is well worth paying for, more so than some of the movies with which it is competing.

Heavy Metal With a Twist

By TOM BARAN and SEAN McDONALD

Twisted Sister has released their first album in the United States. The heavy metal quintet out of Long Island has finally made its mark here, after years of being popular only in England. Their album, "You Can't Stop Rock 'N' Roll," is possibly one of the most powerful heavy metal albums ever released.

Dee Snider, the band's lead singer, has written all the music and lyrics for this album. Snider's lyrics and powerful vocals are what make this album.

It opens with "The Kids Are Back," a song which seems to characterize Twisted's we-don't-care-as-long-as-we're-having-fun attitude. Other songs on the album include "I Am, I'm Me," which although seemingly a simple title is a song full of meaning. This song also shows that the band does not really care what people think of it.

The song "You're Not Alone" is one that is written about Snider's wife and shows that, along with crunching metal, the band can also slow things down and still sound great. The final song on the album is the title track, which might well become the anthem of rock and rollers. "You Can't Stop Rock 'N' Roll" is a song that makes you identify with what the band is saying and also makes you want to play the song louder.

Accompanying the vocals on this album is music that's hard to beat. Backed by A.J. Pero on drums and Mark Mendoze on bass, guitarists Eddie Ojeda and Jay Jay French perform some of the finest work that can be heard. From the screaming solo on "The Kids Are Back" to the slower and more precise work on "You're Not Alone," this album is packed with powerful guitar playing.

Twisted Sister is a band not easily comparable to anyone else, although many people like to compare them to the rock band Kiss, because of the heavy makeup worn by the band members. Admittedly, the looks of the band may turn some people off but their music speaks for itself.

The band's biggest asset is their live show. They passed through Philadelphia opening for Ronnie J. Dio and showed the crowd that they are one of the finest, loudest, and most energetic rock bands that America has ever produced.

Nick's Knacks

A New Beginning

By NICK ANASTASIO

A funny thing happened to "Random Notes" last week. It died. Actually, it seems that Rolling Stone magazine has a column called Random Notes, and has had it longer than we have, so . . .

Welcome to Nick's-Knacks, or Bill's-Fills, depending on who writes the column each week. For now, it's Nick's-Knacks.

Adam Ant will be at the Spectrum on Monday night, but this won't be just another concert. The Spectrum will be set up in the Showcase Theatre format, making this the second time that the new format has been used (the first occurred back in October, when Hot Tuna and Bobby and the Mid-Nites played in front of a packed house). The Showcase Theatre is perfect for Ant; he is not a big enough draw to fill the entire Spectrum, and the Tower is too small for him (which he found out last year).

Elvis Costello is also on the road, this time solo. While the Attractions take a brief vacation, Costello is taking his acoustic guitar with him on a one-man tour. It will be a short tour, though — work begins soon on a new album.

Paul McCartney is out crusading for the legalization of marijuana. So far, he has been criticized by both Pete Townshend and Denny Laine. Townshend overcame an alcohol problem three years ago, and Laine, who was with McCartney's Wings in the 1970s, said that Paul and Linda "smoke (marijuana) like cigarettes."

After all the legal troubles that the McCartneys have been in because of marijuana, one would think that Paul would have taken himself more seriously when he said that he'd never smoke the stuff again (which he said twice).

PICK HIT: "Wrapped Around Your Finger"

The album's theme, playingly enough, appears to be a bittersweet mockery of Great Britain, from which ABC so proudly hails. "The Power of Persuasion," "King Money," and "S.O.S." are but a few of the songs that illustrate a part of Britain that few of us have ever seen. Slums, corruption, high taxes, and anger felt by the British people are all in some way referred to on "Beauty Stab."

This concept also fits in musically. ABC has abandoned the layered horns and disco tempos that were commonplace on "Lexicon of Love" and has developed instead a more driving sound. "Beauty Stab" is a fresh, new product in the already flooded and stale genre of new wave music. With it, ABC has redefined the outer limits of new wave music and may set the standards for the fledgling club bands of the 1980s.

in Japanese, with English translations spoken after each verse. "Don't Be Scared" sounds like something that Barnes and Barnes (the people responsible for "Fish Heads") would do.

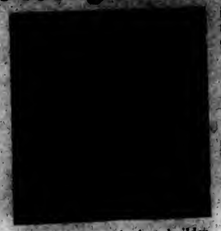
Yoko's only good song is "Let Me Count the Ways," which was inspired by an Elizabeth Barrett Browning poem. After Yoko wrote "Let Me Count the Ways," she suggested to Lennon that he try to write a song from a Robert Browning poem, which turned out to be "Grow Old With Me." These two songs are inseparable, which is why "Let Me Count the Ways" was also recorded in the bedroom. Yoko is more restrained on this song; it is definitely not avant-garde.

Still, even with Yoko's avant-garde compositions, "Milk and Honey" is an excellent album, carried by Lennon's strong vocals and crisp music. Five years as a house-husband had not dulled his skills.

Book Turns Junk Into Fun

By JOSEPH McALEE

Low Tech : Fast Furniture For Next to Nothing is a cleverly put together book which offers many creative ideas for the home furnisher on a low budget.



Low Tech, written by British designer Rick Ball is an extremely readable work, fortunately lacking the technical jargon which is usually the downfall of such books. The instructions, dealing with such things as the assembly of tables, chairs and lighting fixtures from industrial cable spools, old inner tubes and cheese graters are short and easy to follow. Every instruction is ably and creatively illustrated by artist Paul Cox.

In addition to being an excellent instructional book, Low Tech gives ideas on where to locate and how to identify the materials which every low-budget builder needs. There is also a special section for the amateur craftsman detailing the use of the many types of tools, nails, screws and joints which are needed in assembling low-tech furniture.

The whole purpose of the book is to provide attractive functional inexpensive furniture, "using materials which under normal circumstances would be discarded as useless. Low Tech has many good ideas especially with regard to remodeling a kitchen or bathroom or relandscaping a yard.

Even though all of the ideas in the book are extremely creative, some of the furniture and furnishings are extremely unattractive. For example many people would balk at having the back seat of a car for a couch or an industrial storage drum for a coffee table.

However, taken as a whole, Low Tech does have some excellent ideas for the low budget home furnisher (particularly the college student) which come in an attractive package written by Rick Ball, illustrated by Paul Cox and edited by Mary Smith.

Utopia LP Not Oblivious

By BOB SMITH

Todd Rundgren has released nearly twenty albums since 1970, the year that his original band, the Philadelphia-based Nazz, broke up. This makes him one of the most prolific artists recording today. Rundgren's recorded output can be divided into two distinct categories. First, there are his solo albums, for which he handles most, if not all, of the instrumental and vocal chores.

While working on his own, Rundgren seems to enjoy writing soft, wistful ballads. While the best of these ("We Gotta Get You A Woman" and "Hello It's Me," to cite two standout examples) have been quite successful, all too often Rundgren's ballads meander about in a boring manner, holding his albums back.

In recent years, Rundgren has worked extensively as part of the rock quartet Utopia. As a studio whiz (a reputation enhanced by his work on hits by Hall and Oates and Grand Funk, as well as on his own records), Rundgren has the capability to turn out excellently engineered LPs. Unfortunately, Rundgren sometimes lets his technical abilities and eccentricities get the best of his records, rendering his albums a bit inaccessible for most tastes. Utopia's best LPs are those on which Rundgren allows the band's innate rock instincts to determine the course of the music, with his studio touches playing a supportive rather than a dominant, role.

Fortunately, for his fans, Rundgren appears to have realized this himself. The last Utopia release, "Network Nine," was an enjoyable upbeat record. "Libertine," the single drawn from the record, was one of the band's finest songs. The most recent Utopia release, entitled "Oblivion," works in the same vein as "Network Nine," improving on that album's successes. Most of "Oblivion's" ten cuts are stylistic rockers on which Rundgren ably combines his studio know-how with Utopia's straightforward musicianship.

Rundgren's songwriting is at its best, as he manages to mix in some of his always bizarre wit into the lyrics. "Love With A Thinker" and "Winston Smith Takes It On The Jaw" are humorous exercises in which Rundgren respectively discusses the hazards of becoming romantically involved with an intellectually superior girl and delivers a wry sendup of Orwell's "1984" with a cautionary note — "We Got No Razor Blades, no Victory Gin . . ./ But I just met a girl from the Antisex League" — leaving the final interpretation of the song up to the listener.

"Cry Baby," the best cut on the album, is classic Utopia. The playing is forceful, while Rundgren delivers one of his best hard-rock vocals; he manages to keep his voice clear while giving the impression that he is shouting the words into the wind.

While some of the songs are flawed — "Bring Me My Longbow" and "Too Much Water" are still somewhat abstract — by and large "Oblivion" is a fine release that shows that Utopia may finally have gotten their musical act together. Hopefully, there'll be more where "Oblivion" came from.

Cats Whip Princeton . . .

By DAVID ERRICO

With the return of Sandra Williams, a 5-11 junior forward, Villanova's women's basketball team should greatly improve their chances of finishing high in the Big East standings. Williams has been hampered by a recurring knee injury aggravated in a game against St. Joseph's. Although she only played 11 minutes and scored five points against Princeton last Wednesday, her presence was a major factor in Villanova's 94-67 thrashing of the Tigers.

Andrea Burton

Shelly Pennefather, who scored 14 points and grabbed nine rebounds, commented on the return of Williams to the line-up "It definitely helps to have Sandy back. It's such a crucial part of the season and her return will be a big boost to the club."

Villanova, which beat Princeton last season by 16 points, was in control most of the game, jumping out to a 37-24 lead at the 2:58 mark of the first half. Princeton was particularly inept at stopping the Wildcats' press late in the first half. Coach Harry Perretta added, "We are a pretty good pressing team. I didn't want to use it too early because sometimes you have to wait until the team is ready and the game gets flowing." Villanova closed the first half with a commanding 44-32 lead.

The Wildcat's leading scorer was Nancy Bernhardt with 16 points. Coach Perretta was particularly pleased with Bernhardt's performance: "Nancy played exceptionally. She had a great all-around game."

Bernhardt, who was coming off a 39-point effort against Syracuse, was satisfied with the team's performance. "Tonight, we ran well and got more aggressive as the game went on. With Sandy back, our team is getting back into shape."

Villanova's press was again a factor in the second half. Princeton, with 21 turnovers, was never quite able to get back in the game despite a gutsy outing by the Tiger's Lois Hatzenbeller, who scored 20 points. Villanova put six players in double figures with Andrea Burton dishing out a hefty eight assists and scoring 11 points.

. . . Yield to Irish

By WENDY WISE

Despite an outstanding individual performance by Shelly Pennefather (35 total points, nine rebounds, two blocked shots and four assists), the Cats lost to the Fighting Irish of Notre Dame, 79-85, last Saturday in South Bend, Ind. This dropped the women's record to 16-6.

It was a close game throughout the first half, with Villanova leading the first seven-and-a-half minutes, but never by more than three points. By then, Notre Dame had compiled six team fouls, three by Denise Basford, who was retired early in the half. But they then racked up six quick unanswered points to take the lead, 18-15, with a little more than 12 minutes to play. Notre Dame kept the lead until Nancy Bernhardt hit a 10-foot running jumper to put Villanova up by one point with 6:01 left.

Notre Dame's Trena Keys seemed to dominate the second part of the first half, scoring six, but got in early foul trouble.

Notre Dame went on a 14-point run against Villanova's nine to end the half with a four-point lead, 40-46.

Coming out of the lockerroom, the Irish women expanded their lead to seven in four-and-a-half minutes. Then, under the direction of Nancy Bernhardt's jumpers and an Andrea Burton layup, the Wildcats took a 51-50 lead at 12:48. This was not permanent however, as the game went through 12 lead exchanges until the 4:53 mark, when Villanova had come up with a four point lead, seemingly on the road to victory. Shelly Pennefather was on fire as she tallied 18 points in seven minutes of play, hitting from a favorite left-of-the-lane area. But by the 6:42 mark, she had compiled four personal fouls and finally fouled out with 1:26 left in regulation. Not letting down, her aggressive play earned her 10 points between the fourth and fifth foul.

Villanova, down 79-73, lost sight of the lead for good with 1:13 left, and soon had to intentionally foul at 0:57. Notre Dame's final six points all came from the foul line.

Wildcats Blast B.C. on Road

By GARY DEGEN

The Villanova men's basketball team has seemed to be happy after their 70-49 win over Big East rival Boston College. The Cats, Villanova's senior guard, Pressley, after scoring 22 points in the Wildcat's effort in B.C.'s Roberts Center on Feb. 8.

Pressley, who shot nine for 10 from the field and eight for 10 from the foul line, was unstoppable from the opening tap. His scoring performance added to a superb shooting effort on the part of the entire Wildcat squad, which, overall, shot 61.8 percent from the floor, as compared to a rather mediocre 44 percent performance from the grounded Eagles.

The victory raised the Cats' overall season record to 12-8, and at the time helped them inch their way up to an impressive 7-2 second-place Big East Conference record behind the Georgetown Hoyas.

It was very apparent to the 4,400 fans who attended the game that it was not B.C.'s night, both on the floor and off. Dobbs, along with the rest of the Wildcats, took control early in the game.

The senior guard came out shooting, scoring on his first four shots from the floor. The Wildcat lead jumped to 10-2 on a Dobbs right corner jumper with a little over 15 minutes left on the newly-obtained portable game clock replacing the unstoppable Roberts Center timing board. Harold Pressley added two of his career high 22 points with about nine minutes left in the half to extend the Cats' lead to 20-8. Along with their outstanding offensive show, the Wildcats' relentless man-to-man defense was able to stun the scrambling Eagles early in the first half. Jay Murphy, the Eagle's scoring center, was unable to score until midway through the half.

Plagued by turnovers, the Eagles just couldn't get on track against the streaking Wildcats, who had won nine of their last 10 games going into this one against the unprepared Eagles. By half-time, Villanova led by seven, 39-32. B.C.'s only real chance to capture the lead came with about 13 minutes left, when Wildcat coach Rollie Massimino was hit with a technical foul. Murphy hit both free throws, cutting Villanova's lead to one, 43-42.

But B.C. was not able to pull together a winning combination and from that point on, the Cats never looked back. The Eagles were able to pull within six with about one minute to play, but some clutch free throw shooting from the entire Wildcat squad kept the Nova lead intact.

On the sidelines

By N. JOHN CAVUTO

Going for the Glory

This week, America is tuned in to what many believe is the greatest sports event in the world — the Olympics. Yes, this is what sports was meant to be; individuals from all the nations of the world representing their countries in athletic competition. Athletes competing (cough) not for the money, but just for the glory the pride, and the satisfaction of being labeled one of the greatest athletes in the world. Imagine if they were playing for a Michelob Light.

In the Olympics, it doesn't matter if one wins, just participating is enough. While so much emphasis is placed on being number one in professional sports, just being at Sarajevo is reward enough for the majority of the athletes. Like George Tucker, the lone representative of Puerto Rico, who competed this week in the Men's luge competition. Yes, he did finish last, but he completed all four of his Luge runs, an admirable and courageous accomplishment. And what about the American representing Egypt in the downhill slalom? Now, maybe he is a bit strange, spending 40 days and nights in a cave as preparation for the Olympics. But he still competed, and that's what mattered. Both of these people had no chance of winning or even finishing high in the standings. But it is people like these who make the Olympics so special. The Olympics are a pleasant respite from the over-commercialized, over-aggrandized world of professional sports today.

Unfortunately, there are many critics of the Olympic regulation prohibiting professionals from competing. It is argued that such a rule hurts the United States, which loses many potential Olympic athletes to the professional level of sports, while countries such as Russia claim they have no professionals, but rather that all their athletes compete on the amateur level. Well, so what if the Soviet hockey team is in reality a group of professionals masquerading as amateurs? If this is true, then so be it. But come on America, keep the Olympics for the amateurs. OK, the United States might never be Olympic Champions again. And imagine what Dr. J. and "Magic" Johnson could do against the Olympic basketball competition.

But, the Olympics are special, and it is the amateurs that make it so. Athletes not yet corrupted by the business aspect of professional sport, but still in it for the joy and excitement of athletic competition. So don't ask that the Olympics be opened to the ranks of the professionals. Leave them to the George Tuckers of the world.

Nova Loses at Buzzer

By ELIAS A. PAPSON

The Wildcats had been in this situation before. In fact, they were becoming masters at it. The score was deadlocked at 45-45. Less than half a minute remained. Their only option was to run down the clock and play for the last shot. It had worked against Arkansas and Syracuse, but it somehow backfired against Pitt.

The Cats inbounded the ball, passed it around cautiously, and with :08 left, George Allen stripped the ball from "Happy" Dobbs and drove the length of the court. His layup was cleanly blocked by Ed Pinckney, but the ref called goaltending. The basket was good and Pitt escaped with a 47-45 victory.

Referring to that call, Dobbs said, "Personally, I don't think it was a goaltend. It was a good block."

Whether goaltending or not, the basket counted and Pitt had achieved its greatest upset of the year. The loss dropped Nova one-and-a-half games behind Georgetown in the Big East, at 8-3 and 12-9 overall.

Gary McLain led the Cats with 14 points and Pinckney added 12 more. Andre Williams led Pitt with 16.

The Cats, who only shot 40 percent, got off to a slow start. Five minutes into the game, Pitt led by 6-2. In this early going, and throughout most of the game, Nova was plagued by poor passing and sloppy execution. Dobbs explained, "We didn't run our offense fluidly, and a couple of guys didn't shoot well."

Yet, Pitt's offense was not spectacular either. The Panthers hit only 35 percent of their shots, and good defensive rebounding enabled the Cats to tie the score at 12-12 with eight minutes left in the half.

Roger Allen

Both teams exchanged a few sets of baskets before Dobbs' three-point play gave Nova a 21-20 lead. Following Vaughn's jumper, McLain hit a short jumper giving Nova a 23-22 halftime lead.

Nova began the second half outscoring Pitt by 4-0 and amassed its biggest lead at 27-22.

As the game wound down, neither team established any substantial advantage. The lead exchanged hands for over five minutes before Vaughn's baseline jumper gave Pitt the lead, 43-42. The Cats were never to lead again.

Half a minute later, Allen's layup gave the Panthers a 45-42 lead. The situation worsened when Pinckney missed the front end of a one-and-one, and Pitt went on to freeze the ball for the next two minutes. Curtis Aiken's missed foul shot at 1:49 gave Nova its final hope. Then, 15 seconds later, Pinckney drove against Armstrong, drew the foul, converted on the free throw, and the Cats suddenly found themselves tied at 45.

Pitt's subsequent drive yielded nothing. Pinckney rebounded the ball and passed it to McLain, who brought it over the half-court line and called time-out with :26 left.

Again they looked for that winning shot, but with :08 left, Dobbs was stripped of the ball by Allen.

On the most controversial call of the season, Pitt had escaped with its biggest upset of the year. For Nova it was a heartbreaking loss which sent the Cats home wondering what went wrong.

Runners in Three Meets

By PAUL MACCHIA

Last weekend the Villanova men's track team participated in three meets: The Husker Invitational, the Vitalis Olympic Invitational and the Bud Light Invitational.

The majority of the Cats traveled to Lincoln, Neb., to compete in the Husker Invitational. This is the best meet in the Midwest and attracts a lot of outstanding athletes. The track, a 270-yard flat tartan, is known to be a faster track than most.

Sophomore Martin Booker had an outstanding day as he won his heat for the 60-yard high hurdles in a time of 7.29. This time qualified him for the NCAA meet. In the finals, Booker placed second to Albert Lane of Missouri.

Lane was clocked in 7.19 seconds, while Booker clocked 7.33.

In the 440-yard dash, freshman Tony Valentine ran a 48.95 to finish seventh overall. The race was won by Iowa State's Danny Harris who turned in a sizzling time of 46.98.

Chip Jenkins placed sixth in the 600-yard run in a time of 1:12.59. The race was decided on place by time. Caesar Smith of the University of Iowa won in a time of 1:09.68.

Brian O'Keefe ran a 4:11.10 mile to win the College Division Mile Run. O'Keefe ran a strong race and defeated the second-place finisher by almost one second.

In the Invitational Mile, sophomore John Keyworth raced to fourth place with a time of 4:06.99. The winner of the race was Rob Verbeeck of Belgium and Iowa State in 4:04.63, followed by teammate Paul Black (from England) in 4:04.67 and Jan Verster of South Africa in 4:06.74. Coach Pyrah stated that Keyworth ran a good race despite his problems earlier in the year.

Brian O'Keeffe

Tony O'Reilly and Gerry O'Reilly finished fifth and eighth respectively in the two-mile run. Tony was timed in 8:56.1 and Gerry in 8:58.0.

The mile relay team posted its second best time of the season — 3:14.93. The Cats finished fourth overall behind Iowa, Iowa State and L.S.U. Booker (48.7), Jenkins (48.3), Jim Adams (48.4) and Valentine (49.5) composed the team. Anchorman Valentine was bumped by the two Iowa runners and lost valuable seconds. Coach Pyrah remarked that it was a very good mile relay performance on a 220-yard flat track.

On Friday night sophomore Kevin Davis competed at the Bud Light Invitational at the Commonwealth Ave. Armory, where B.U. has its track. Davis placed fourth in the 800-meter run in a time of 1:51.4, thus qualifying him for the IC4A meet.

Saturday night saw freshman Sean O'Neill at the Vitalis Olympic Invitational at the Meadowlands. O'Neill placed sixth in the 1000-meter run in 2:23.3. Villanova assistant coach Don Paige won the race and set an American Record of 2:18.88 in erasing Tom Byer's old U.S. standard of 2:19.50. Paige was just .30 away from World Record-holder Sebastian Coe's 2:18.58, set in 1983.

Former Villanova star Mark Belger won the 800-meter run in a time of 1:51.24. Another Villanova runner, Tony Tufariello, was second in 1:51.36.

Academics Beat Cats Men Lose Final Two

By JUDY ROGERS

The Villanova men's swimming team wrapped up its season with a final record of 10-5. They were defeated in their last two meets by Army and Navy.

On Feb.8 at Annapolis, Villanova was defeated 67-46 by the U.S. Naval Academy. Some competitors who stood out for Villanova were diver Bob MacDonald, who took first in the optional dive, and Dan Nies, who won the 200-meter butterfly. A factor going against Villanova was that "we're used to swimming in a yards pool, and the Navy pool is in meters," offered tri-captain Jack Hallahan.

At the Field House on Feb. 10, the last meet of the regular season, Villanova succumbed to Army, 78-35. This was the last Field House appearance for senior Wildcats Mike Gallagher, Dan Morgan, and Hallahan. MacDonald performed well again, winning both the optional and required dives. The medley relay team of Pete Maloney, Jose Alvarez, John Gargula and Hallahan deserves special mention for its "best time ever without shaving," stated Hallahan.

An observation made by Hallahan on this type of meet was that "it's always difficult to compete in a non-revenue sport against the academies. They recruit heavily and successfully in swimming."

Villanova is off to the Big East Tournament this week at Pittsburgh. It is between three teams, Villanova, Syracuse and Pittsburgh. The Wildcats will be skinned for the tournament. This is known as shaving down, where the swimmers are completely bald. "This cuts down resistance; it gives you a great feel in the water, and a psychological advantage," commented coach Ed Geisz.

Deserving of mention besides Geisz is the assistant coach of two years, Darrell Linder. Coach Geisz can't say enough about him: "We could never have had the season of last year and this year without him; he's just super and he's contributed an awful lot." Linder was the captain of the Villanova swim team two years ago. Right now he's incorporating hypnosis into the team's workouts as a tool to further their chances of winning.

Swimmers Win Final Two

By LAURA FORTUNATO

The Villanova women's swimming team closed its season with two more victories, winning 88-52 over LaSalle and 88-46 over West C

Coach Chris Mckee

Against LaSalle, Lisa McFadden won the 1000-yard freestyle (10:16.7), the 500-yard freestyle (5:08.2) and the 200-yard butterfly (2:14.4). Genny Mulderig captured the 200-yard backstroke (2:14.0) and the 400-yard individual medley (4:47.0), and Anne Murphy won the 200-yard freestyle (1:59.1) and the 100-yard freestyle (54.6).

Lori Bukaty dominated the diving events, winning both the one-meter required, 154.6, and the one-meter optional, 171.45. Bukaty also qualified for the NCAA Regional Championships in Annapolis in March. If she finishes in the top 18, she will advance to the NCAA Championship in Indianapolis, March 15-17.

Defeating West Chester in its final dual meet of the season, Villanova won 12 of the meet's 13 events. The 200-meter medley relay of Sue Adams, Anne Vaughn, Beth Metzger and Laura Fortunato began the winning streak that continued throughout the meet.

McFadden, who has dominated the distance freestyle events all season, once again won the 1650-yard freestyle, and then came back to win its counterpart, the sprint 100-yard freestyle. Completing the season with 29 wins, she has recorded a 22-event winning streak and has proved her versatility as a swimmer over and over again.

Metzger, who has consistently won the backstroke and butterfly events, took both the 200-yard backstroke and 200-yard butterfly. Metzger has won 20 events this season.

Vaughn was a winner in the 50-yard freestyle and the 200-yard breaststroke events, and diver Lori Bukaty captured the one-meter required diving event.

The 200-yard freestyle relay of Metzger, Vaughn, Fortunato and McFadden was once again victorious. The relay was the grand finale in two ways: first, as the final event of the dual meet season, and secondly, as the final dual meet for seniors Metzger, Fortunato and McFadden.

Skaters Win in MACHC — But Lose to Div. III Foe

By MARY AGNES MATYSZEWSKI

Last week Villanova's ice hockey team played two games against MACHC foes, Drexel, and travelled on Sunday to play Division III opponents St. John's in Freeport. The conference games resulted in two victories for the Icecats to elevate their record to 6-1, but unfortunately, the Division III game ended in a loss.

In Wednesday night's game, Nova travelled to the Class of 23 rink in Philadelphia and defeated the Dragons by a score of 9-3. One of the highlights of this game was junior Jamie Huston's record-setting hat trick, all on short-handed shifts — two of the goals he scored on the same shift. Others to score for Villanova were Glen Smith, Bill Davis, Brian O'Connor, Jim Hageney, Bill Mc Hugh, and Frank Segreto.

On Saturday, the Cats hosted Drexel in the second conference game, and again walked out with a win — this time by a score of 7-4. Rookie Tony Huss began the Icecat's scoring drive halfway into the first period. He was assisted by Huston and John Canuso. Canuso scored next, on an assist by Huston and assistant captain Tim Curran. The second period saw goals scored by rookie Steve Thorley and junior Shawn Campbell. The former was assisted by captain Segreto and Campbell, and the latter by Thorley and Segreto. In the final period of play, Segreto scored on an assist by Huston, next came Canuso with Segreto assisting, and the final tally came from Thorley with Huston and goalie Fred Christie assisting.

Rookie Shawn Campbell

On Drexel's encounters, captain Segreto said, "We finally put some scoring punch together and got some goals. Hopefully we can get some momentum going into the playoffs and we'll be able to beat Delaware tonight. Freddie Christie had two good games for us in the nets. Jamie Huston's short-handed hat trick also sparked the Cats."

Sunday's game, however, did not prove as fruitful for the squad. Despite a dauntless attempt and some spectacular Icecat displays, the buzzer reflected a final score of 8-3.

Nova managed to score the first goal of the game. This came as the result of a well-executed shot fired into the nets by McHugh. The next to score was Thorley, and finally Campbell placed one between the posts.

According to Head Coach Skip Probst, "St. John's is much quicker than they were last semester — we played better, but they just outskated us."

DIRECTORY LISTS SUMMER JOBS

BARNSTABLE, Mass.—The seaside resort areas of Cape Cod, Massachusetts and the off-shore islands of Nantucket and Martha's Vineyard are experiencing a growing problem in finding enough college workers to adequately service a rapidly expanding tourist industry.

This summer Cape Cod and the Islands will be offering over 55,000 good paying jobs to college students and teachers. Many of these jobs require little or no prior experience.

Because it is impossible to fill these jobs with local residents, most of whom make up the year 'round work force, it is necessary to draw from other geographic areas to satisfy this seasonal need.

Jobs for Students and Teachers

The Cape Cod Summer Job Bureau gathers all pertinent facts on available summer employment and publishes this information in a concise Job Directory which is available to college students and teachers by February 1st each year.

Names and addresses of individual seasonal employers are listed in separate job categories from bartenders to yacht crews.

The Job Bureau is a service agency, and therefore charges no fees to employers or employees.

An easy-to-use job application form, which is now familiar to the local employer, is included with the Directory along with important tips on how to land a good summer job.

Housing Information Included

This year the Job Directory has a section devoted to seasonal housing which lists addresses of people who lease rooms, efficiencies, cottages, apartments, and group rentals.

A useful reference map of the area is included as is a summary of educational opportunities for college credit, and cultural classes in the arts.

For a copy of the 1984 Directory send $3 (includes 1st Class Postage & handling) to: Cape Cod Summer Job Bureau, Box 594, Barnstable, MA 02630.

Cats Lose to Tough Hoya Squad

By LARRY GOANOS

The Georgetown Hoyas derive their nickname from the Latin phrase "hoya saxa" which literally translates in to "what rocks." That phrase would have been more appropriately applied to the shots taken by the Wildcats however, as Nova posted a frigid 26 percent field goal mark en route a 59-46 loss at the Spectrum on Wednesday evening.

"The last couple of games we've kind of lost it," explained junior All-American candidate Ed Pinckney. "We haven't shot very well from the field."

Against Pittsburgh on Saturday night the Villanova offense hit field goals at a paltry 35 percent clip, while against the Hoyas all five starters combined shot nine for 46. Those kind of stats don't produce wins in the Big East.

The Wildcats came out looking a bit tentative in the early going, allowing Georgetown to run up a 14-4 lead on the strength of three Michael Jackson hoops and a pair of slams by seven foot All-American Patrick Ewing. After Chuck Everson and Pinckney each canned a pair of free throws, the Hoyas let out the throttle a little more, ballooning their lead to 24-10 at the 7:32 mark of the first half.

But just when a route appeared imminent, the Cats' offense arrived, having probably been stalled with many of the fans on that great parking lot known as the Schuylkill Expressway.

Following baskets by Gary McLain and Harold Pressley and an Everson free throw, Dwayne McClain took advantage of a perfect Mc Lain feed to throw down an alley-oop dunk that brought the crowd to its feet.

"We just started to execute our offense and take it to the hoop," observed Pinckney.

Six free throws and a Frank Dobbs jumper followed McClain's jam down the stretch, enabling the Cats to head for the lockers trailing by a single point, 28-27. The stubborn Villanova defense only allowed one Georgetown basket in the final 7:02 of the half. That basket was, what else? A Ewing monster dunk.

Despite their near collapse, the Hoyas refused to break after the half.

"When it comes right down to it, you just have to play your game," said Ewing, whose game consisted of eight for 11 shooting, eight rebounds, and seven blocked shots.

The second half began with a Villanova surge that was sparked by Everson who collected 13 points, his career high and the Villanova team high for the game.

With the Cats leading 31-30 at the 17-06 mark, Everson found himself face to face with Ewing on the left side of the court, ten feet from the basket. Hesitating momentarily, Everson put the ball to the floor and drove around the Hoya center for a quick two points. After two more Everson scores, a ten foot bank shot and a tip-in, the Cats found themselves atop a 37-34 score. But it was not meant to last.

The Hoyas battled back to take a 42-41 lead with 8:25 remaining mostly by virtue of a strong inside game and the pin point passing of Jackson.

Then the explosion occurred.

Showing that they do indeed deserve the nation's number two ranking, the Hoyas outscored Villanova 15-4 over the final 4:28 of the contest to improve their record to 21-2.

"Obviously they're an outstanding basketball team and they deserve all the credit of being the number two team in the United States," said Wildcat Coach Rollie Massimino after the affair. "I thought our players gave a tremendous effort at both ends of the floor."

Ewing had a succinct analysis to explain Villanova's inability to duplicate the 65-63 victory posted earlier in the season over the Hoyas, "They're a great ballclub but so are we. We're better than we were in the beginning of the year — in everything."

The loss dropped the Cats' record to 12-10 (8-4 Big East) and may have been a death blow to any NCAA Tournament hopes, barring an upset victory in the Big East Tournament in March.

CAT CLIPS: Villanova needs eight wins to join the 1,000 victory club with only five regular season games and at least one Big East Tournament game remaining . . . If the Cats should post their 1,000th victory this year they would be the youngest program in that exclusive group . . . Before the Georgetown game the Cats had won nine of their last 11.

Jamie Huston

As a result of his Villanova and MACHC record-setting feat of a hat trick - all of which were during short-handed shifts - junior Icecat Jamie Houston has been named this week's Budweiser Athlete of the Week.

Huston, who has been playing hockey for seven years, has been an extremely important asset to the Cats. When placed in the defensive slot, his outstanding performances have saved many a goal and broken up many an opponent's scoring drive. In addition, Huston possesses a real intelligence for the game and always seems to be able to anticipate a foe's intentions and end up in the right place at the right time to block or knock the puck out of the zone. Moreover, this talented athlete has also been moved to the front line during the season and has been successful on the offensive side as well. He has tallied several points in both goals and assists.

According to head coach Skip Probst, "He's been one of the dominant players on the team. In the last few years he's greatly contributed to our many victories and to the overall success of our program. Moreover, in the 12 years of coaching that I have done, I have never seen a short-handed hat trick. It was an outstanding accomplishment."

As Captain Frank Segreto puts it, "He's the definition of a team player, he's incredibly unselfish. That short-handed hat trick was just another way for him to show his incredible talent."

His many teammates are also impressed. According to them, "He leads by example. 'Chief' is a really good guy and a real team player. He moves the puck incredibly well across the ice."

And how does Huston feel about playing for the Icecats? "It's been a learning experience. The coach is great and he taught me a lot. I've also met a lot of people and made a lot of good friends. However, we could use more support; it's hard to get psyched up for a game when the stands are empty."

About the season in general, Huston feels, "As a whole, the year's been good for us. I think the team is very close. We're having a rebuilding year — there have been the bright moments and there have been the low." And when it comes to the bright moments, this terrific athlete definitely rests among the stars.

Tracksters Keep Winning

Several School Records Broken

By MICHELE NAPOLI

Villanova's women's track team continues to be strong and active as shown by their past few meets. The team traveled to the Princeton Women's Relays Feb. 4 and from there, to the Bud Light Invitational in Boston and then onto the U.S. Olympic Invitational in Rutherford, N.J.

At the Princeton relays, Nova set a new university record in the two-mile relay with a time of 8:51.56. It was also an NCAA-qualifying standard as well as a new Princeton Relays meet record. The relay team consisted of Debbie Grant, Lauren Searby, Joanne Van Rensslaer and Veronica McIntosh.

Not only did Nova take first in this event but the team consisting of Vickie Brown, Joanne Kehs, Coleen Gallagher and Patty Bradley took fourth in the event.

The distance medley relay team of Kelly Toole (2:16.6), Judy Palmer (69.2), Beth Lyons (3:41.5) and Melissa Grubb (3:01.6) finished second to Georgetown in 11:59.9, also an ECAC Championship-qualifying standard. Frosh Searby finished the 3000-meters in a Villanova record time of 9:36.7, for second place, while Kehs led a group of four Cats in the 500-meters, finishing third in 1:14.98. Kehs was followed by Gallagher in fourth with a time of 1:17.60, Lyons in fifth with the time of 1:17.89 and Toole in sixth place in 1:18.98.

The team traveled to Boston for the Bud Light Invitational and then to Rutherford the same weekend for the U.S. Olympic Invitational. In Boston, the Cats' 4x400 relay team placed first with a new Villanova record time of 3:43.69. The team consisted of Van Rensslaer (57.5), Grant (56.6), McIntosh (55.0), and Bradley (54.6). Nova also took first in the 4x800 relay in 8:53.03 with team members Searby (2:13.4), Gallagher (2:09.8), Mary Ellen McGowan (2:16.8) and Kehs (2:13.0).

After their success at the Bud Invitational, the Cats traveled to the Olympic Invitational where more records were set. Bradley placed fourth in the 800 meters with a new Nova record of 2:06.61. Nova's 4x400 relay team also placed fourth in 3:47.62. The team consisted of Van Rensslaer (58.7), Grant (56.1), Kehs (57.3) and McIntosh (55.5). Searby made an impressive showing by placing sixth in the mile with a time of 4:45.10.

Senate Endorses Day Care

By LINDA BOND

The University Senate approved a resolution at its Feb. 17 meeting calling for child day care at the University, despite some concern from senators that Villanova has more urgent priorities which require money and campus space.

The resolution, adopted by a 32-1 vote, now goes to the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., president of the university, for approval.

A detailed 12-page day care proposal was presented to the Senate by Dr. Angelo Armenti, dean of University College, "as evidence to the fact that this resolution I wish the Senate to consider has been given serious thought and analysis by responsible members of the Villanova community."

The Senate recommends policy — not procedure — and could only endorse the concept of University day care, not Armenti's specific proposal.

Because members of the Senate felt that the practical consequences of day care need to be debated, the proposal was discussed along with the resolution.

Armenti's report proposed the use of St. Clare's Hall, which would require a $50,000 initial investment for renovations to the building. Parents using the center would pay a fee, and in time the center could become a self-supporting venture.

The Rev. Patrick Rice, O.S.A., vice president for administration, called into question the reliability of the proposal, claiming that building regulations for child safety would double the $50,000 projection.

"A day care center is like motherhood," said Rice. "I can't fight it, but at the moment I don't think we can afford it."

Alvin A. Clay, dean of the College of Commerce and Finance, said he did not think that St. Clare's would be able to accommodate all of the people who seemed to be interested in day care.

The Rev. Patrick Rice, O.S.A., vice president for administration, at Senate meeting.

Clay pointed out that the proposal seemed to contradict itself — St. Clare's would house 45 children, but the proposal states that 681 children need day care.

Benedict A. Paparella of the philosophy department suggested an alternative, pointing out that the St. Thomas of Villanova Parish has a large, unoccupied grade school building already suited for young children. Paparella said that using their building might be of benefit to both Villanova and the Parish, if the program were self-supporting.

According to Rice, Villanova's 60-man security force is operating out of "two rooms and a broom closet," and they need more space on campus. "Nothing is more important or vital to the well-being of this university than a well-staffed, good security force," Rice said. "At the moment we are working on a wing and a prayer. It is disgraceful that this continues."

"We have lost good security people over the years when they look at what's going on. They say, 'Where's the professionalism in this operation?' We are faced with a new security director coming shortly. I am adamant in opposing space for anyone unless this is faced up to first," said Rice.

Joseph E. Thompson, of the political science department, said, "I do represent the members in the Arts and I do feel that many of the faculty are interested in a severe lack of space on campus.

"With regards to funding," Thompson said, "I'm thinking of our salaries. Why not? We are trying to get a decent salary. The faculty are not treated on the priority list, and here I think we should make sure the faculty are represented."

Thompson continued, "One thing we are interested in besides space is our library. That space is running out very quickly. If Father Rice can be for the necessary security, I think that as a faculty member I am interested in the library and its contribution to this academic community."

Problems Arise at Party

By CYNTHIA J. FITZGERALD

Due to some problems at the Day Hop Party held by Austin Hall on Feb. 18, it will be more difficult for Austin Hall to get authorization to have other parties of this type, according to the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A.

The main problem was the admission of students without tickets by the people running the party; the behavior of the persons attending the party had no effect on Stack's decision to make it more difficult in the future for Austin Hall to have parties.

"If Austin makes other requests, we'll have to look at them a little differently," commented Stack.

According to Stack, letting students without tickets into the party is unfair to those who bought tickets. The amount of food and beverages bought for the party is based on how many tickets are sold. When students are admitted without tickets, they are taking away from what the students who bought tickets paid for. The overcrowding also creates unsafe fire conditions.

This decision will have no effect on other organizations' attempts at trying to get the authorization for other on-campus parties. "Each organization will live or die on their own," said Stack.

Stack concluded, "I don't want to say they won't have any more parties; the answer is to run them right."

Student Body President Patrick Leahy, a resident of Austin Hall who helped run the party, mentioned that problems are inevitable at any party, but declined to elaborate.

Leahy said of the party, which was sold out by noon Saturday, "Everyone was satisfied . Everyone had a good time. I think there will be more parties of this type in the future.

"I encourage any group to throw their own parties; they increase student morale. I'd like to see the parties continue."

Rank and Tenure Clarified

By GARY E. DYER

University administrators recently explained to the Villanovan the procedures and committees that deal with rank and tenure.

There are two Rank and Tenure Committees at Villanova. While the Administrative Rank and Tenure Committee is composed of six faculty members who serve "at the pleasure of the President," in addition to the vice president for Academic Affairs, the Senate Rank and Tenure Committee has six faculty members elected by the faculty and two elected student representatives.

"It's more or less pro forma that faculty members on the Senate Rank and Tenure Committee go on the administrative committee," said President John Driscoll, O.S.A. "If there's a vacancy, it's filled, and there's no appeal to me. I don't recall ever questioning the claim of any candidate."

The Administrative Rank and Tenure Committee evaluates all faculty members who come up for promotion or tenure, while the Senate committee sets policy for those areas.

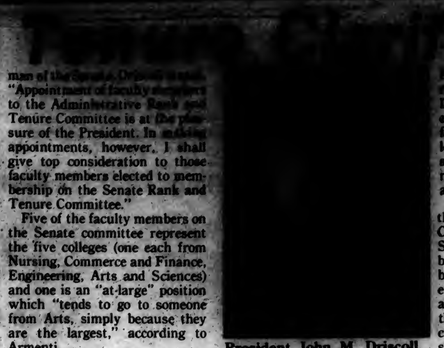
A Report

The six faculty members on the Senate committee are full professors and are elected by the faculty. Two faculty seats on this committee, one from the College of Nursing and one from Arts, will be filled this spring.

In a September 6, 1977, letter to Dr. Angelo Armenti, then chairman of the Senate Orientation and "Appointment of faculty members to the Administrative Rank and Tenure Committee is at the pleasure of the President. In making appointments, however, I shall give top consideration to those faculty members elected to membership on the Senate Rank and Tenure Committee."

Five of the faculty members on the Senate committee represent the five colleges (one each from Nursing, Commerce and Finance, Engineering, Arts and Sciences) and one is an "at-large" position which "tends to go to someone from Arts, simply because they are the largest," according to Armenti.

Currently the faculty members on the rank and tenure committees are Dr. Robert E. Beck from mathematical sciences, Dr. Joseph L. Lucia from economics, Julia B. Paparella from nursing, Dr. Bernard F. Reilly from history, and Dr. William Rice from chemical engineering. Dr. John Caputo, professor of philosophy, is absent on leave for this academic year. The student representatives on the Senate committee are Michael Ryan and Christine Obetz.



President John M. Driscoll, O.S.A.

Faculty members are elected for three-year terms, according to the Constitution of the University Senate. "Student members shall be elected by the total student body for a two-year term. To be eligible to serve, student members at the time of election must be in the top 10 percent of their college class, have at least a Sophomore II status, and be in good standing. The two student members must be from different colleges."

School Rings

The last day tor a senior to order a school ring and get it before graduation is Mar. 23. Orders are taken everyday in the office of the University Shop.

Scholarship Auditions

The Villanova University Graduate Theatre Department has announced auditions and interviews for graduate assistantships and acting scholarships for the 1984-85 school year. The department offers a two-year Masters of Arts in Theatre and a Masters of Arts with concentration in acting. Auditions and interviews will be held from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Mar. 17 in Vasey Theatre.

The graduate acting scholarship pays tuition and fees for the acting concentration. The major involves intensive training in voice and movement, styles of acting and individual scene study.

The graduate assistantship pays tuition, fees and a stipend. Assistantships are available in costume and set construction. The graduate assistant may take the acting concentration major or the general Masters of Arts program.

More information and an appointment may be obtained by calling the theatre office at 645-4760.

Students Affected by Aid Bill

By DIANA K. SUGG

Student aid experts in Washington, D.C., are fighting to stop an obscure bill that, if passed, could severely hurt most student aid programs.

The bill, known as HR 4170, would eliminate tax-exempt financing for student loans by placing a limit on the number of tax-exempt student bonds each state can issue. It will come before the House of Representatives in early March and could possibly affect almost three billion dollars in student loans.

The Associate Director of Finance Aid at Villanova, Arthur Switzer, commented that at the present time, the bill was "not an issue" at Villanova. This is because, up to this point, the state of Pennsylvania has not had the authority to issue tax-exempt bonds.

However, he did state that it would have a "definite immediate impact" on the loan consolidation feature of student aid programs. Currently, if a student has two different loans, he is able to consolidate the two into a single loan. If this very important aspect is not reinstated, it could be a "real problem" to Villanova students, Switzer said.

Arthur Switzer, associate director of financial aid.

The state of Pennsylvania has been trying to get the authority to issue tax-exempt bonds for the past six years. They just received the authority this year, so the system will not be in full operation until the 1984-85 school year. It will most probably be used to assist students who do not qualify for aid under the standard programs. This would include small loans, which banks are reluctant to grant.

If the bill is passed, it will have a dramatic effect in other states where the bonds are helping to underwrite their loan programs.

Under the bond system, citizens buy bonds from the state, which loans the money to students. As students repay the state, the state pays interest to the citizens who bought the bonds. The citizens do not have to pay taxes on the interest they earn from the state.

The bill originated in the House Ways and Means Committee, which was "concerned about the growing number of tax-exempt bonds being used for essentially private purposes," said committee spokesman Bruce Davie.

The federal government is concerned that the tax-exempt bonds are driving up interest rates and eroding federal revenues.

Switzer explained that there is a lot of pressure due to the deficit, and that the government wants to increase their revenues — and one way is by preventing the states from issuing tax-exempt bonds.

Grier Davis, the director of institutional relations at Northwestern University, who opposed the bill, argued that only $220 million — or one percent — of the fiscal 1983 federal deficit was due to tax-exempt student loan bonds.

Switzer also opposes the bill, from the standpoint that the "money for education is for the future of our country," and that the government should try to reduce the deficit by reducing spending rather than increasing taxes.

If HR 4170 is passed, no one can be certain as to the precise effects it will have on the aid programs in Pennsylvania, since the working details of the tax-exempt bond system have not yet been worked out.

Laundry Room for Sullivan

By ROBERT M. JORDAN

The former Pizza Palace in Sullivan Hall, which closed on Dec. 22, 1983, will be converted to a laundry room and lounge in accordance with the dormitory residents' wishes, university officials said.

Vice-President for Student Life Dr. Richard A. Neville said that a questionnaire survey of the residents revealed a strong desire for better laundry facilities. In fact, the ratio of students wanting better laundry facilities over those wanting a fast-food service at Sullivan was 2 to 1, he noted.

The decision to convert the Pizza Palace did not arise out of competition with the food services at Connelly Center, Neville said, but rather because "it wasn't maintained well and Sullivan needed the space for a laundry service."

Christopher M. Janosik, director of Residence Life, explained that part of the maintenance problem was due to the difficulty of getting student cleaners to work at the Pizza Palace during exam times.

According to Janosik, the rationale behind the conversion goes back to the results of the annual Residence Life surveys which revealed that resident students are usually more dissatisfied with their laundry facilities. Sullivan and St. Mary's Halls had the most complaints about this problem. St. Mary's laundry facilities had been expanded last year, and the time had come to address the problem at Sullivan. Janosik added that "the current electrical system there can't support both a Pizza Palace and a laundry."

Villanova's current contract with the Solon Laundry Co. will permit them to install coin-operated machines in Sullivan after permission to modify the former pizza parlor is granted. The area will include a student lounge as well as the laundry machines. The photography lab which has existed in the same area for four years will either be relocated or modified.

Janosik revealed that there will be other student service conversions in the near future. "The Office of Residence Life has asked for permission to convert some dormitory rooms in Sheehan, Fedigan and Delurey Halls to lounge space." Also planned is the reduction of basement lounge space in Sheehan and Good Counsel Halls to make room for study areas.

British Parliament Member Speaks

By PAULA SOLLAMI

Fergus Montgomery, a member of the British House of Commons, spoke on Thatcherism and economics in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall on Feb. 15. Montgomery's discussion analyzed how Thatcherism, the economic system imposed by England's prime minister, Margaret Thatcher, is working. It has been in effect since 1974, when Thatcher's party, the conservative party, won a majority of the seats in the House of Commons.

Although England is still suffering economically, it is definitely on the road toward recovery, according to Montgomery. He attributed this recovery to Thatcher's strong economic policies. Since these policies have been in effect, England's inflation rate has decreased from a double-digit percentage to approximately five percent.

Government spending has been cut back, along with government borrowing and the printing of money. In addition, interest rates have decreased in Britain. This is partially due to many companies being broken down in England and free competition being encouraged by the government.

One of Britain's major problems is that people are living longer and, therefore, are demanding pensions for longer periods, of time. This is complicating Britain's Social Security system.

"Welfare has to be paid by somebody," Montgomery quipped, alluding to this as a reason for Britain's tax rates, which are still high.

Thatcherism in England, like Reagonomics in the United States, has been criticized for making "the rich richer and the poor poorer." Montgomery reported that if this were true, Margaret Thatcher would not have won her landslide re-election victory in June 1983.

Montgomery continued to compare Reaganomics and Thatcherism, saying that they both are out to achieve "Similar goals." Montgomery stated, "Both philosophies are dedicated to less bureaucracy, more individual competitiveness and market forces."

Senator Daniels Receives Alumni Award

By BANITA S. WILSON

State Senator John C. Daniels from Connecticut was awarded the Black Cultural Society's Distinguished Alumni Award at the fourth annual awards luncheon held on Feb. 18 in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center. The Keynote speaker was Philadelphia Councilwoman Augusta A. Clark.

"Blacks have always been concerned with the political processes of America," stated Clark in her opening statements. She cited the early political involvement of blacks in South Carolina after the Civil War, and the four college students in Greensboro, N.C., who started the modern civil rights era.

In recent years blacks have become a more decisive force in the political arena. The political clout of the black community has been demonstrated by the recent achievements of W. Wilson Goode, Harold Washington and the Rev. Jesse Jackson. Clark also made reference to the accomplishments of Villanova graduate Robert N.C. Nix, the only black chief justice of a state supreme court.

Clark posed the question to the students in attendance, "What will we do with this political power?"

In her closing statements Clark again addressed the students, saying: "You will gather strength from your past . . . the American culture needs your ambition." She left a suggestion of a theme for next year's luncheon, "progress through economic development," to give the students present something to think about.

After Clark's address the awards were presented by Karen Storey, secretary of the B.C.S., the most prestigious of all being the distinguished alumni award, which Daniels received. Upon receiving the award he said, "What you have done is so gratifying to me, and greatly appreciated."

Students were also recognized for outstanding merit. Academic achievement awards were presented to Bart Gallagher and Darryl Ford, who was also the recipient of the Black Pride award, given to the student who best exemplifies black pride throughout his activities in the Villanova community. Veronica Pankey received the freshman of the year award. There were service awards given to Mark Waller, Erick Brunson, Diane Poland and Cynthia Woods. The Sportsmanship awards were received by trackster Martin Booker, Veronica McIntosh and Judith Palmer.

Soviet Dissenter Speaks

By ROBERT M. JORDAN

Russian dissenter Iosif Mendelevich spoke yesterday at the Connelly Center about his 11-year imprisonment by the Soviet government.

Mendelevich and 13 other Russian "refuseniks," citizens denied exit visas by the Soviet government, plotted to hijack an airplane to Israel in 1970. The KGB learned of the plan and arrested all 14 in Leningrad before the plan could be implemented, according to Dr. Evelyne Shuster of the philosophy department.

The affair would have remained a minor internal affair except that the Soviet government made a major political blunder. Two of the group were sentenced to death, and the rest were given extremely long prison sentences. There was an immediate outrage of protest around the world; newspeople everywhere attacked Moscow's harsh treatment toward the group, Shuster explained.

Fortunately, Moscow then relented and gave the two men scheduled to die long prison terms instead, while reducing the length of the other 12 sentences. Mendelevich's original 15-year sentence was cut to 12 years.

Mendelevich said that the group of Jews and non-Jews was treated so harshly because the Soviet government wanted to make an example out of the dissenters and crack down on the activities of organized Soviet Jews.

However, the two men scheduled to die but still in prison are non-Jewish. Mendelevich and the 11 others have been released from their imprisonment.

The charges against Mendelevich included his involvement in the planned hijacking and his editorship of the Russian Jewish magazine, Underground. Also, the group had planned to return the jet to Russia as soon as they had reached an Israeli airport, Shuster said.

Iosif Mendelevich, Soviet dissenter

At first Mendelevich was sent to the Vladimir Prison, but the warden there found his Jewish customs offensive. Mendelevich continued to wear the customary yarmulke and observe the Sabbath in spite of pressure and harassment from prison officials. He was then sent to the Christopol Prison in central Russia, whose warden instead admired Mendelevich's religiosity and found him kosher food to eat. Meanwhile, he worked as a prison tailor and shared ideas with fellow dissenters imprisoned at Christopol.

Upon his release from Christopol on Feb. 18, 1981, Mendelevich emigrated to Israel and got married. Currently residing in Jerusalem, he still speaks out against Russia's harsh treatment of the Soviet Jewry.

As a guest of the Torah Academy of Greater Philadelphia, Iosif Mendelevich brought his personal experiences to Villanova and pleaded with the Soviet government to release the two men still in prison before it is too late.

The coordinators of the visit were Professor John Tich and Shuster. Both had journeyed to Russia last summer to meet with dissenters and refuseniks and examine the political situation there more closely. Reiterating the failure of the Soviet government to deal with its Soviet Jewry, Shuster said that the overwhelming impression of the Russian Jews was their "spiritual strength." Moreover, Shuster added, the message which they want to pass on to the free world is "don't forget us."

Senate Supports Villanova Day Care

la's idea of putting it in St. Thomas is excellent," said Thompson.

The report presented to the Senate said that day care was in the university's own interest, for it would help to retain and hire faculty, attract graduate students and serve a public good.

In other business at the Senate meeting, Clay was called on to give the Senate Budget Committee Report. Clay said that his committee had not completed its work on next year's budget but would be able to give a report at the March meeting. Tentative figures include an increase in undergraduate tuition of 8.7 percent, an increase of up to 15 percent for some graduate courses, and a six percent faculty salary increase equivalent to seven and one half percent in faculty compensation. The committee is working on a $74 million budget which presently has a $250,000 deficit. Figures presently in the budget have not yet been approved by the administration.

Mistaken Identity

How would you feel if someone had started to use your name instead of it's own?

Biscayne College in Miami, Fla., isn't Biscayne anymore. A full-page advertisement in a recent edition of the Miami Herald boldly proclaimed that as of Feb. 1, 1984, they are now "VILLANOVA-Miami."

Villanova-Miami. How nice. After a tradition of 142 years as Villanova University, in which our name has become familiar to the world, not just the United States, along comes a pretender.

According to Tom Murphy, Biscayne's — er, Villanova's dean of Institutional Advancement, "This move was studied for a long time. It was finally approved by the Board of Trustees on Jan. 27."

Of course, Biscayne was once called St. Thomas of Villanova University. But that was when it was located in Havana, Cuba, before Castro and his revolutionaries threw the Augustinians out.

Since that time, generations of alumni of Villanova University, our Villanova, have come and gone. And we have gained greatly, in this image conscious age, by the great public recognition of the Villanova name as being associated with our school.

Murphy did not feel that it would cause an image problem for his institution. Of course not, because some people will naturally see the name "Villanova" and think it's the same place as the one they heard about all these years.

The alumni and students of Villanova University, the one founded in 1842, have been given the shaft by the Augustinian order. Acting without thought, they have decided, as the ad stated, that it is time "the torch of the Villanova tradition is carried to South Florida."

In the process, they must hope some of our Villanova's reputation will go with it. Because to be quite honest, when someone else steals your good name, do they not also steal your reputation?

It didn't matter before when they had a Villanova University in Cuba — it was outside the continental United States and did not confuse people who wanted to go to the "real" Villanova University. We guess it is only a matter of time until Merrimack changes its name, too.

So the next time you see the name Villanova in print, check to see which Villanova is meant. If you get confused, so what?

When you are an alumnus of Villanova University, you now have the pleasant prospect of being asked, "which one?" Remember that when you come back for homecoming, at Villanova University. The original one, the only "real" one.

JAMES H. DeLORENZO

Hasty Decision

The Dean's Advisory Committee, besides rejecting someone or something called Chang a few weeks back, simultaneously decided against altering the structure of student organizations at Villanova. The proposals that surfaced at the meeting were weak ones, and fortunately they were discarded by the student representatives on the committee. But the students were much too hasty in thus shutting the door entirely to any major changes.

One proposal discussed at the meeting involved the creation of one large body that would include all major campus organizations, such as the Union and the RSA.

The proposal was inherently faulty, though, because in such a consolidation, too much power would be put in the hands of whoever might rest atop the proposed organization. In addition, such a merger by its very nature would wipe out any diversity presently existing among the various campus groups.

What did come out of the meeting were suggestions for minor changes in the system, ones that would slightly improve communication among student groups.

But that's not good enough. What's actually needed is a comprehensive re-examination of the present system, because finances continue to be unevenly divided and, in the area of communications, no group really knows what the other's doing.

The Dean's committee wisely rejected the inadequate proposals offered at the meeting. Now, it is their task to come up with a better solution, for preserving the status quo helps no one.

Letters to the Editor

Who's Addressing Issues?

To the Editor:

Just what is Student Government doing? I have been forced to ask myself this question with amazing frequency. As the coordinator for the Student Government ad hoc Committee to Restore Social Life, I have found my efforts to make progress thwarted under the guise that another committee is already handling the issue. Quite a few examples come to mind immediately.

Visitation, one of my committee's initial thrusts, was supposedly assigned to some Residence Life Committee, and we were told that actions were taking place. What action? I believe the Board of Directors has discussed the issue, but what has Student Government done to push forward the desires of the students who elected them?

Secondly, off-campus housing and transportation have been major areas of concern for some time. Why is it that when the issue of a day care center arises, action is taken in the University Senate to give it a priority? What happened to the busing issue, and why was it not even mentioned at last week's meeting? Please don't get me wrong, I favor the day care center, but it only affects an estimated 700 people; what of the off-campus residents and commuters, approximately 57 percent of the undergraduate enrollment, who needs transportation? Why were they given a back seat?

It is time to bring these issues out of committee! They must be resolved. We elected these individuals to take action on these policies. After participating in the committee world of Student Government, I can report that it is not effective. It seems that the only time action is taken that would benefit the students is after the media picks up reports about demonstrations on campus. Although I did participate in the unrest of last semester, I did so as a last resort and would not like to see the situation arise again. However, if the shoe fits . . .

Response to Editorial

To the Editor:

I have read with interest your editorial from Feb. 3 describing the dangers of allowing big-time sports promoters to setup college basketball games. I do not agree with you that "V.U. should give a flat out 'no' to Gelb" for the following reasons:

1. Villanova is and will continue to be a national power in basketball as long as it is given the opportunity to prove its skills in all parts of the nation, not only the Big East.

2. If we continue to want big-time sports programs at Villanova, we must play in big-time arenas against big-time teams that would give us the financial backing to continue to run our programs with players that will give us national prominence.

3. Villanova alumni are starting to open up their pockets again with the reinstatement of the football program. The advancing of the basketball program to teams that have national prominence and TV visibility would certainly increase alumni contributions to the university.

Personally, I would look forward to continuing my support to V.U. basketball with a visit to Las Vegas to cheer the team on and to continue participating in the alumni giving program.

No Apology Necessary

To the Editor:

At halftime during the Providence-Villanova basketball game on Jan. 24, the Wildcats left to boos from some students. At the same time, the Villanova Pep Band played the "March of the Wildcats."

This organization spends much of its time and resources to support the team at home and away. The band has and will always continue to back the basketball team. January 24 was no exception. Any rumor to the contrary simply is not true.

I find it very disturbing that one individual would apologize for the actions of an organization with which he has no affiliation. We need no one to speak for us. The band is fully accountable or, and very proud of its participation in the Villanova community.

The Lesson of the Olympics

Now that we have been saturated with McDonald's "meat and potatoes" and introduced to "Beatrice," we can look back over the two weeks of Olympic competition with a more objective and detached view.

We can complain that life is not fair, nor obviously is Olympic judging. Seibert and Blumberg performed magnificently in the ice dancing competition. They moved gracefully and without flaw. The two Americans glided to the music of Rimsky-Korsakov as if he had written the music for them and no one else.

Now, if the rules say that ice dancing must demonstrate varieties in tempo and style, we can understand the judges' low marks. But then how does one explain the 6.0 score awarded to Torvill and Dean who performed to one piece of music with no variety of pace? Ravel's "Bolero" is an exquisite piece of music, sensual and rhythmic. Are the standards different for each ice dancing pair? What are the standards?

But, most of all, after the overdose of commercials and "up close and personal" looks at competing athletes, which were neither up close nor personal; after the hyperbolic commentary of Bob Beattie and Frank Gifford; after the constantly expressed surprise that Sarajevo was not a primitive settlement of non-English-speaking people who live isolated from the real world — after all that and too much of everything but the events themselves, we think an important lesson can be learned from the Winter Olympics themselves.

The lesson for all nations should be that we can compete and co-exist. We are not different. Oh, yes, we may dress differently and speak different languages and even worship differently. But we are human beings on God's earth who would like to live in peace and brotherhood. We need food on our tables, a roof over our heads, clothing on our backs and a chance to see our children blossom and grow in peace. That is not a lot to ask. Most of us are willing to work for it — if given the chance.

Athletics provide a chance for tests of strength, endurance and ability. There are winners and losers. And for the next four years the medalists can reign as the victors, and the losers can choose to try again or not, as they choose. We can be sorry that the United States did not win more medals, but we have the Summer Olympics to look forward to.

We can feel proud of our representative athletic competitors. We can feel a tear in our eyes when the National Anthem is played. We can look with pride at those observers who wave their American flags. And we can feel great national pride in America and Americans without a single shot being fired.

Compete and co-exist in peace. What a dream! What a possibility! What an Olympics!

Considering the size and stature of Villanova University, and the far superior facilities at other comparable institutions, the current weight room is as travesty. Aside from being filthy, the room is far too small to accommodate the student population. Worse, there is nowhere near an adequate selection of equipment.

The weight room contains some basic free weights, a few squat racks, almost no dumbbells and a limited Universal machine. One can find comparable facilities in most large high schools. Compare this to the facilities offered at St. Joseph's University: large, clean facilities with a wide assortment of free weights, along with the latest Nautilus and Universal equipment.

The only alternative for students who wish to start as fitness program or continue one begun during high school is to join Atra. While Atra does have fairly decent equipment, it is quite expensive and can't offer the free weight-dumbbell program that most lifters have become accustomed to.

As a powerliffer with two years experience under my belt, I can state that Villanova's facilities are far from adequate. I am lucky in that I am a commuter and have been able to maintain a membership at a nearby gym (Phoenix Fitness, located in Wayne) that has reasonable rates and an adequate program. However, most Villanova students don't share this advantage.

While updating the current facilities will require the expenditure of time, effort and money, it is a necessary step, especially when

New Union Board Elected

By ANTHONY EDWARDS

John Happ was elected Union President on Feb. 20 by the Executive Board of the Union and will take office on March 12,1984.

Kathy Foster was re-elected as vice-president, and Tom Prendergast was named secretary-treasurer.

The Executive Board of the Union is its decision-making body. It handles major programs and makes any amendments needed to the Union's constitution, explained James Lane, a committee coordinator.

The Board is composed of nine committee coordinators, the three officers and two advisers, and it meets once a week every Monday night.

The nine committee coordinators are chosen by a special selection board consisting of the new president; the old president, Tom Belmont; a coordinator; an advisor; a member of the Office of Student Life; and two regular committee members.

The new coordinators are nominated by the special selection committee and ratified by the Executive Board at the next regular Board meeting. The new coordinators will be announced next week.

To qualify to become a committee coordinator, a person must be a member in good standing of the Union. Usually a person on a certain committee applies for the chair of the particular committee.

The new officers' applications for positions were due Feb. 17. On Monday, the old officers and committee interviewed each candidate for 20 to 30 minutes. After the interview, a two-thirds majority was needed to elect each new officer.

Happ is a junior majoring in electrical engineering. Before becoming president, he was recreation committee coordinator, in charge of such events as the trip to Ft. Lauderdale.

Foster is a junior business administration major. As vice-president, she is in charge of internal affairs and leadership training, and assists the president.

Secretary-Treasurer Prendergast is a junior accounting major. His main concern is coordinating the budget with the individual committees. Previously he was on the social functions and festivals committees, handling the Big Event. He organized programming, booking and the stage crew.

The new officers begin their jobs on March 12. Their first big project is comedian Steve Landesburg's appearance at the Villanova Room on March 24.

For most events there is no trouble with Student Activities "except possibly dances with alcohol. We also wanted to run an assassination game last year, but it was cancelled," said Happ.

Happ concluded: "We want to make the student body aware of all the committees in the Union, and that we are students programming things for students."

Lottery Angers Students

By BRIAN D. WEBB

For the 13th consecutive year, Villanova University is in the process of conducting a housing lottery to determine who will be eligible for on-campus housing next year.

"We just don't have enough residence halls to house all the Villanova students who want to live on campus," said Janice Mauk, associate director of Residence Life.

Of the 2,640 current residents, approximately 30 percent of these students will be forced to find off-campus housing.

"I'm really upset," said freshman Dan Reagan, who drew one of the highest numbers. "I have no idea what I'm going to do now. It's not fair. People who have had disciplinary problems throughout the year should be the first ones to go."

In response to this outcry, Mauk said, "We just do not have the personnel, or the time to look into each student's individual case. We feel that the students with academic or disciplinary problems would not be here if they did not belong.

Mauk feels that "favoratism" would enter into the picture if individual cases were evaluated. "The lottery adds objectivity to the system. Everyone has an equal opportunity since numbers are issued randomly by computer."

Last week, the computer made its selections and lottery numbers were issued to all current freshmen, sophomore and junior residents.

The lottery will consist of three phases.

Phase I will take place Feb. 27 and 29. During that time, residents will report to the Connelly Center if they want to reserve their present room.

After Phase I, there will be a short period, period before assigning vacant numbers for eligible students. According to Mauk, this time is needed to "determine the projections."

During Phase II, eligible students will finalize reservations made in Phase I, or they will choose rooms other than those in which they currently live. Preference to these rooms will be determined by class status and lottery numbers.

Phase III will be held after contract cancellations. During this phase, residents will be allowed to change or improve their assignments.

If a student does not make the cut-off number, then he will have the opportunity to place his name on the waiting list. Since the lottery is only for current residents, those students who do not receive an assignment for next year will not be eligible for campus residency ever again.

Rank and Tenure Report

In 1977 the University Senate put two students on the Senate committee, and increased the number of faculty representatives from four to six. "As I remember, the rationale was simply that the committee was dominated by administrators," said Armenti. "It was not terribly controversial."

At the same February 18, 1977, meeting, the Senate passed Student Body President Arthur Donato's motion to put two students on the Administrative Rank and Tenure Committee.

On September 6, 1977, Driscoll rejected that motion.

At the same time, Driscoll sent the letter confirming that he would have the same faculty members on both committees.

"My feeling is that the contributions that students can make can best be made at a lower level, at the departmental level," Driscoll explained recently to the Villanovan. "At the Administrative Rank and Tenure Committee there's very little they could contribute to the technical application of criteria.

"It is very important that the students have a say," Driscoll added.

Before 1977 there was no distinction between the administrative committee and the Senate committee. When the Senate was founded in 1970 the administrative committee was "adopted" by the Senate, according to Carolyn Lea, Senate secretary.

Dr. Joseph Betz, president of the Villanova chapter of the American Association of University professors, pointed out that "very few schools give the academic deans six out of 13 votes. Deans, in a sense, vote twice: they write recommendations to the [Administrative] Rank and Tenure Committee and they vote on that committee."

The Administrative Rank and Tenure Committee has a series of meetings in the fall for deciding on promotions and a series in the spring for tenure decisions. Each year about 25 people come up for promotion and 15 to 18 come up for tenure.

When a person is hired by the university for a tenure-track position, he is contracted for a seven-year probationary teaching period. At the end of the sixth year, the decision is made on giving the individual tenure. The candidate may be dropped at any point during the six-year period, and in each yearly evaluation of him the chairperson will state where the person stands in progress toward tenure.

Most full-time Villanova faculty members possess one of three titles: assistant professor, associate professor, and professor. Rank and longevity are separate factors in determining salary, according to Driscoll.

There are set requirements for the academic ranks in the categories of teaching, research and university service.

"If it doesn't fall into one of the three categories, it's irrelevant," said Dr. William Rice, a member of the Committee. "We wouldn't look at it at all."

"My decision on the Rank and Tenure Committee's recommendations are based on the criteria set forth in university policy," Driscoll said. "Extraneous matter is not important."

When a candidate presents himself for promotion, a departmental recommendation and a chairperson's recommendation are sent to the dean of the college.

"If there is a presidential reversal of the Rank and Tenure Committee's decision; this is usually after the faculty member requests reconsideration," Driscoll stated.

"If a faculty member requests this reconsideration, he submits reasons," Driscoll said.

"When I make a decision on a candidate the first time around, I look at the Committee's recommendation," explained Driscoll. "When I review on an appeal, I look at the whole thing: the recommendations and all the materials. After eighteen years of doing this sort of work, I know the documentation for advancement."

Driscoll said that although he has the right to question the committee's recommendation, he has not done that without an appeal from the faculty member involved.

"I have, in the past, asked the Committee to examine its procedures. I have to assume they find everything in the process satisfactory," Driscoll said.

Infirmary's Busy Season

By AMELIA McGOVERN

The busiest time for the year for the infirmary is right now, the period between the beginning of the second semester and spring break, according to Dr. Denis Boyle Jr., M.D.

The rumor that there has been an outbreak of hepatitis was disclaimed by Boyle. "We have seen no hepatitis here."

Middleton Hall, the infirmary, holds 12 overnight patients comfortably and 15 if needed, Boyle explained.

The policy is that if the infirmary is filled to capacity, the regular visiting hours (9 a.m.-10 a.m. and 1 p.m. to 2 p.m.) are temporarily cancelled, explained Elizabeth Kinney, R.N. an infirmary nurse.

"This is mainly so sick students don't catch anything else and the well students don't get sick," said Kinney. "Another reason is because when there are three students in a room — in one room we can fit four — and there are visitors allowed, a student who wants to rest can't," Kinney explained. "Even when there are only two students in a room, let's say ... [illegible] ... come in this time of year have viral syndromes," he said. "We also get a lot of strep throat and mononucleosis. We see a vast array of similar problems. This is [illegible] having visitors, but the sicker one may not."

"If you let one student have visitors, you have to let them all," Kinney commented.

Another reason for not having

Middleton Hall, the infirmary visitors when the infirmary is full or near capacity is that "sometimes students who are not that sick come down to escape the noise of the dorms," Kinney said. Students who come to [illegible]

"Students on the average, stay in the infirmary from 24-48 hours. It depends on their symptoms," Boyle said.

one considers the fact that much of America's youth has become involved in fitness programs, and that members of future Villanova football teams will require up-to-date training facilities. And, unlike such issues as the return of football, the alcohol policy revision, the construction of the new field house, and the updating of Villanova's weight room to an acceptable standard can be accomplished without facing wave upon wave of legal and ethical controversies from the administration and the surrounding community.

Angry at RA

To the Editor:

On Feb. 20 there occurred an incident involving an infraction of the resident's policy. The following day I was approached by the RA, who explained, "There was a lot of trouble last night at the party. Now, I don't think I'm being unfair to you but I hope to be Head RA next year, so I have to write somebody up. Since your infraction will not get you into any serious trouble, I'm going to write you up."

My violation is not being questioned here, but rather the motives and integrity of one of the RAs at this school are being questioned. It's people like this that give RAs a bad reputation.

Library Noise

To the Editor:

I am writing to you in order to reach the masses of the Villanova community who are looking for a place to talk, laugh and be obnoxious. As you may or may not have guessed, this place is Falvey Memorial Library.

As I have found throughout the past semester, it is utterly absurd to think that anyone could concentrate in such a boisterous atmosphere as in the library. As far as I know, the library is meant to be a quiet place of study. Correct me if I am wrong, but I believe that the Connelly Center was provided for social reasons. I do not think that the library was meant to be a social gathering place. I seems to me that anyone wishing to study should be able to go to the library and study in a quiet, meditative atmosphere undisturbed by those wishing to socialize.

Quite frankly, I am appalled by the deliberate, inconsiderate behavior of so many of our students. Those students creating a disturbance should be asked to quiet down. If such a request is ignored, the students should be escorted from the building.

I am of the belief that staff members should be stationed on all floors of the library. Three staff members per floor should be sufficient to maintain the quiet surroundings usually synonymous with libraries.

I feel it necessary to point out, however, that an equal portion of this responsibility rests upon the shoulders of the students themselves.

As I have said, the Villanova campus provides more than adequate social facilities, and students should have enough courtesy to utilize such facilities if they are unable to remain silent in the library.

Spirits are Alive at Barleycorn's

By KORY SPRAUER and SUZANNE BRUSTMAN

We pulled into the parking lot at 656 Lancaster Ave., behind John Barleycorn's Pub. Word had spread of danceable rock bands and DJs found there Friday and Saturday nights, and we had come to see them for ourselves. We liked what we saw.

Having shown our proof of age and paying the required (weekend) admission fee, which entitled us to a complimentary drink, we stepped inside to find a sizeable crowd consisting of Villanovans and other local adults.

Word had spread of danceable rock bands and DJs found there Friday and Saturday nights...we liked what we saw...

To our right was a gathering around the large, decorative and amply-stocked bar. On the left was located the band, the DJ and crowd dancing to the most popular music. Booths and tables, well-serviced by efficient waitresses, were occupied by both small and large parties. We grabbed an available spot.

Learning from our waitress that both kitchen and bar were open until 2 a.m. seven days a week, we ordered from the reasonably-priced and varied menu.

John Barleycorn's logos, scattered around the rooms, had peaked our curiosity about the odd name of this tavern. A quick look at the last page of the menu revealed the legend of John Barleycorn, "the spirit of distilled spirits."

Our attention was caught by the constant flow of traffic headed downstairs to the newly-renovated dance/bar area, open for its usual weekend business. A visit below seemed necessary.

The change of atmosphere found there added an intimate dimension to our Barleycorn's experience. Whereas the upstairs was louder and more social, downstairs seemed to be geared for smaller parties: the tasteful, wood-stained decor included several tables for two, stand-up bars with built-in backgammon boards, stained glass windows, a smaller dance floor, a separate sound system and soft lighting. The bar here was also adequately stocked.

Overhearing our comments about the room, co-owner Drew Conboy, who had been mingling with the crowd, came over to talk with us. More than eager to discuss all aspects of Barleycorn's, Conboy was particularly enthusiastic about this recently-opened room. He, co-owner Dave Barr and manager Steve Seefried had devoted their entire summers to redesigning and rebuilding the room from scratch, completing all the work themselves. Despite the new tiling, heavy paneling, hand-made bars and sandblasted granite walls, Barleycorn's had closed for only one day during the extensive renovating. Conboy attributed this to his dedicated employees and "ridiculous" work hours (often 1 a.m. to 4 a.m.). This area, equipped with complete banquet facilities, is available for private parties and has been used as such for graduations in the past.

Aside from Barleycorn's dance-oriented weekend, the pub extends an innovative schedule of daily "specials." The week begins on Sunday, when the bar and kitchen open at 1 p.m. and the pub rocks to the sound of a live DJ.

Monday follows with a folk/guitar night and clam bake. Tuesdays boasts the College Night special — another DJ and all drinks, or two drafts, for $1.00 (proper I.D. required). Top-shelf entertainment can be seen on Wednesday, the infamous Comedy Night.

Ladies will especially enjoy the carnation or rose and complimentary drink presented to them on Thursday, better known as Ladies' Night. And on Friday, $4.95 buys you a ticket to the all-you-can-eat buffet, complete with a variety of dishes. Musical entertainment is provided via DJ, who precedes the band and fills in on breaks between their sets. This auditory arrangement is repeated on Saturday.

These specials are continually changing. "We have to, to keep from getting stagnant," explained Conboy. Seefried added, "We don't see ourselves in direct competition with other area bars, for most of them, we feel, strive for a particular image. What we're trying to achieve here is a well-rounded crowd; a happy medium."

Well, we think Barleycorn's has achieved this goal. By constantly putting new ideas into practice, the business stays fresh, and people want to come back. The people who run John Barleycorn's are pleased with their progress thus far, but are still reaching for

Ads Deceive Consumers

By AMY O'DONNELL

Have you ever looked at an ad and felt compelled to buy that particular product for no good reason?

Why is this? Last Wednesday, these and many other questions were answered by Dr. Benedict A. Paparella, who spoke on the controversial topic of "The Use of Sex in Advertising." Paparella, a distinguished and longtime member of the philosophy department of Villanova, has taught courses in moral philosophy, business ethics, and medical and legal ethics.

The hour long presentation was a slide show and commentary focused on exposing the advertising industry's unethical use of sex as a selling device. The program opened with a brief explanation of the nature of optical illusions and visual perception. Paparella explained that even though our minds are concentrating on one image, background stimuli are absorbed into our unconscious mind. It is this passive cognitive process that producers are investing in through the use of subliminal embedment.

Subliminal embedment is one of two approaches employed by advertising firms hoping to increase sales by appealing to the consumer on a sexual level. Paparella explained this device to be an unconscious process of determining and devious mechanism of persuasion aimed at influencing the buyer by stimulating his unconscious self.

This whole process finds its roots in Freud's theory of man's two strongest desires, sex and death. Paparella lectured briefly on the psychology behind Freud's assumptions and Jung's supporting views that the unconscious responds to signs and symbols. One may question the validity of such theories, though few will argue that advertisement on such a level is clearly an attempt to manipulate rather than inform the consumer.

Paparella offered numerous examples of photographs which were touched up by an air-brush. Hidden in the background or shadows of a photograph could be found sketchy images of skulls, wolf heads, nude people and dismembered limbs. These discreet symbols are meant to trigger our subconscious and appeal to our supposedly innate appetites for sex and death. Ads mostly for liquor and beverages utilize the intricate shadows and values of photographed water and ice to conceal these aberrations.

As Paparella uncovered the hidden forms while flashing through the slides, the once-dubious audience began to sway with the evidence. A most upsetting example appeared in the shape of a human fetus, uncovered in a glass of alcohol. He explained that symbols of controversial subjects such as the fetus (representing abortion) and the shroud (representing Christ's crucifixion) are also used to trigger unrest within the individual.

The advertiser hopes that if the consumer is not an "avid name-brand buyer," he will be moved by these sensory signals and drawn to buy their product. The question raised by Paparella was whether such an approach is not, in fact, a violation of privacy and an underhanded, if not immoral, act of deception and intimidation.

An evaluation of the direction advertising has been headed in recent years may answer this question. Traditionally, advertising has been an informative media between the producers and consumers. Yet in today's competitive market, advertising has become a tool used to "induce" a desire for a product and lure prospective buyers.

The other mechanism of the shrewd twentieth century advertisers lies at the opposite end of the spectrum. This is the overt

Library Room Displays Rare Collection of Books

By BARBARA LUCAS

An interesting feature of Falvey Memorial Library that many Villanovans are probably not aware of is the Rare Book Room. Located on the second floor of the library, the room contains many valuable and interesting items.

Kathryn Abraham supervises the Rare Book Room which is open Tuesdays and Thursdays from nine until four.

The majority of books on display in the cases are books with fine bindings in leather and gold. There are also several valuable manuscripts, especially of St. Augustine's works from the 14th and 15th centuries. Additionally, there is a manuscript of the Breyiloquium by St. Bonaventure, written in 1494, which is the only existing copy of that edition.

The library has a collection of "incunnabula", a term Abraham defined as "existing copies of books printed before 1500 with movable type." Samples of the incunnabula on display are of "interest to scholars and book collectors" and "make fascinating study," Abraham noted.

The room also exhibits a two-volume copy of the Gutenberg Bible and a copy of the Book of Kells, an illumined manuscript of the four Gospels in Latin and reputedly, the finest example of early Christian art in Ireland.

Books are not the only items of interest in the room, however. There is an original Rembrandt etching called "Death of the Virgin," done in 1639, which was stolen in 1965 but later recovered.

Another notable piece in the room is a 10-foot high solid onyx clock with trimmings in brass and fired-gold. Made in France, it is said to be one of the finest clocks that Tiffany has ever distributed.

On either side of the door to the room stand two globes — one celestial and the other terrestrial — that were made in 1696 by a Franciscan friar in Venice.

By far the oldest item on display is a small cuneiform tablet written in the Sumerian language around 2000 B.C.

The newest addition to the room arrived in December. It is a manuscript of the "Confessions" and other works of St. Augustine completed in Florence sometime between 1456-1480. This was Falvey Memorial Library's 500,000th volume and was dedicated to Mary Jane Kuhn in appreciation of her service to the library.

Abraham explained that many of the items in the room were donations. The books of rare value were purchased for the collection. Many of the manuscripts came from the monastery.

The books can be used in the Reserve Room upon request.

This is evident when one considers the pub's plans for their St. Patrick's Day Marathon Weekend, highlighted by a variety of attractions. Beginning Friday afternoon and continuing through the weekend, a corned beef and cabbage buffett will be available to customers. A leprechaun will greet Barleycorn's visitors at the door with complimentary hats and mugs for all. Carnations for every lady, and, of course, plenty of green beer and music you'll love to jig to! Offers like these can't be missed, and we'll definitely be at John Barleycorn's to enjoy the St. Patty's Day fun.

method in which love and sex are used as synonyms. Paparella noted that certain record companies are notorious for their album covers which have nothing to do with the music being sold.

Paparella pointed out that repetition is the key to subliminal embedment, whereas shock and intrigue are what sells in the overt method. Though it may appear to the consumer that such forms of advertising are increasing, Paparella feels that as a society is awakened to the trick of advertising, they are turning away with disgust.

DID YOU KNOW . . .

•Auto Service contracts can now be purchased for new or used cars in which a variety of coverage costs and services are offered to the consumer? Unlike basic warranties, however, these service contracts provide specific time during which the service contractor agrees to repair or maintain your car for an agreed upon price. These contracts last anywhere from a few months to five years, but be careful of cancellation or transfer fees which may be assessed if you sell your car.

•With the increased use of "banking cards" in automatic teller machines, there should be an increased understanding of the user's rights and liabilities. Here are some reminders. If your access card is stolen or lost, the first thing to do is to notify the issuer immediately so action can be taken to avoid loss to anyone. If you notify the issuer within two business days, regulation E says that your liability for unauthorized transfers will be limited to $50. If you fail to notify, you could lose up to $500, according to the Department of Consumer Affairs, at the Federal Reserve Bank of Philadelphia.

•Senator Bob Packwood (R-Oregon), the Senate Commerce Committee chairman, has recently re-confirmed his commitment to his telephone rate legislation after reviewing the Federal Communications Commissions's (FCC) tentative decision to again modify its "access charge" order. Although complimenting the FCC chairman for his attempts to resolve the problem, Packwood said, ". . . the FCC has modified its decision three times so far. Each time it has continued to shift telephone costs on consumers and away from big businesses."

Recently, the Senate has begun debating Packwood's Universal Telephone Service Preservation Act of 1983 or S. 1660. S. 1660 delays the access charge on residential and one-line small business phones for two years, but it does not sanction the imposition of these charges on consumer or small business phones after the moratorium.

If in support of this we must act by contacting our congressmen and urging them to act in our best interests. For further information on S. 1660, contact Ward White or Kathy Meier of the majority staff at (202)224-8144.

WKVU Changes for the Better

By CATHERINE GROODY

WKVU, at 640 AM, Villanova's only radio station, has not always gotten the prestige or recognition it deserves. In the past, WKVU has had the problem of poor reception, along with a never ending struggle against more popular AM and FM stations.

But this little radio station, headquartered on the second floor of Dougherty Hall and transmitted to every dorm on campus, the Pit, and the game room of the Connelly Center, is more powerful than meets the ear, due to recently expressed support from the administration.

Dr. Richard Welch Photo by Lisa

The University has recently hired a new moderator for the radio station, Dr. Richard Welch, of the communication arts department. "Dr. Welch knows a lot about the industry," said Joe Silvestri, general manager of WKVU. "He has a lot of good ideas for improving the station," he continued, "and has a lot more enthusiasm about it than other moderators in the past."

Silvestri is also a new asset to the station. As a graduate student in Villanova's MBA program and a five-year member of WKVU, Silvestri has expressed a mutual desire to "improve the quality of the actual product."

WKVU is a radio station that provides for its listening audience a variety of music, news and sports, including the home and away games of the men's basketball team.

The station is aired Monday through Friday from 11 a.m. to 11 p.m. and Saturdays from noon to 6 p.m. Their signals are transmitted through a carrier current over telephone wires to the small AM transmitters in each of the dorms. The signals are then rebroadcast within the buildings.

In the past, WKVU has suffered greatly, due to the lack of awareness within the community. Their choices of music and vague support from the administration had also distracted their listening audience.

"My goal," says Welch, "is to make this radio station the most listened to, both commercial and non-commercial, in the university." But even more, he plans to use WKVU on cable television. "I see this as a promising short term goal," he said.

Also, Welch would like WKVU to receive an FM license. "In order to get this," says Silvestri, "you have to get an FM search done to get a band where you can broadcast." Three years ago, an FM search was done for WKVU, but other priority matters at the time suppressed the interest of the administration.

The station currently has a membership of about 50 students, including 15 or 20 who commit themselves every day to running the radio station. Their staff consists of directors in news, sports, music, production, and traffic, along with engineering.

Members like Silvestri who commit themselves to two or three hours a day at the station do not believe their efforts are wasted.

"The staff at WKVU," says Welch, "demonstrates a level of dedication that far exceeds what the station has received in the past. This dedication will make WKVU a number one station," he added.

CANCER. NOT KNOWING THE RISKS IS YOUR GREATEST RISK.

A lot of people think cancer is unbeatable.

That simply isn't true. In fact, over two million people have had cancer and survived to lead happy, normal lives.

And not only can cancer be beaten, it can also be prevented.

There are definite precautions that have been proven to decrease your risk of getting certain cancers.

Ask your local American Cancer Society to send you a free booklet about cancer risks.

Learn the facts about cancer.

And make not knowing the risks, one less risk.

Lyndon Hits the Shubert Theatre

By LEONARD J. LaBARTH

As 36th president of the United States, Lyndon Baines Johnson did more to ensure the basic inherent rights of this country's citizens, as guaranteed by the Constitution, than any other chief executive in history. Through his "Great Society" program, Johnson brought to completion sweeping reforms in education, civil rights legislation and medical care. However, historians have remembered the Johnson administration for its difficulties in foreign affairs, primarily for the intensification of the Vietnam War.

In the James Prideaux one-character play "Lyndon," based on a book by Merle Miller, the author attempts to soften and humanize the Johnson often portrayed as the power-loving, uny ielding Texas politician who rose through Congress and the Senate, accepted the vice-presidency under John F. Kennedy and assumed the presidency following Kennedy's assassination. The effort to humanize LBJ is mostly successful because of the actor filling the role of Johnson.

South Philadelphia's Jack Klugman, of TV's "Odd Couple" and "Quincy" fame, portrays Johnson in the two-act play running through Sunday at the Shubert Theatre in Philadelphia. Klugman's portrayal is not the type that will bring audiences and critics alike out of the entertainment woodwork to lavish praise upon it, but it is a solid theatrical work, and Klugman gives a convincing portrait as an ever-aspiring politician who eventually finds himself as perhaps the most powerful man in the world, and is unable to escape the stigma of a war in Southeast Asia.

Physically, other actors may have been more qualified to play

Jack Klugman as Lyndon B. Johnson

Johnson. Klugman is not of the large, looming stature that Johnson was and, at times, his lack of Johnsonesque intimidation and a faltering Texas drawl works against him. As the play progresses, however, Klugman appears more comfortable in the role and implores the audience to recognize his portrayal as a two-hour history lesson necessary to understand Johnson's motives during his turbulent career.

Following the usual one-man play routine where the actor establishes a rapport with the audience by spinning a few yarns and proceeding to present a recollection of his life, complete with heavy nostaglia and woodsy humor, we follow Johnson from his schoolteacher days in Texas, to his rise as a powerful legislator in the role of Senate majority leader and, finally, to the presidency.

Klugman's Johnson disputes stories attributed to him. His LBJ denies several tales, including the one where he supposedly climbed into a secretary's bed and said, "Move over honey, this is your president."

The first act is rushed as Klugman seems anxious to escape Johnson's early political days to get to the meatier material in the second act. While Klugman initially appears like a determined Quincy on a case in the first act, he more than atones for it in the succeeding act, as he slips into a more sure LBJ describing his White House days.

The second half of the play is dominated by explanations of the 1960 presidential race, his acceptance of the vice-presidency, the Kennedy assassination and his taking of the oath of office. "It's the loneliest job in the world," recounts Klugman's Johnson.

Of course, the Vietnam conflict is detailed as the playwright attempts to implore the audience to empathize and sympathize with Johnson's situation. As Klugman says, "I was like an animal with one bloody paw caught in a steel trap." We see a Johnson who correctly listened to his advisor's words of encouragement for escalation of the Vietnam War, getting the blame for the mounting failures and accepting the blame. This responsibility signaled to him the necessity of the final decision not to run for re-election in 1968.

The opening night theatre-goers responded enthusiastically to the play, calling Klugman back after the conclusion for four curtain calls. This play is clearly more poignant for those who advocated or protested the Vietnam War two decades ago. Klugman's portrayal brought back memories for many in the audience.

Johnson was one of the most embattled presidents in history and it is a tough challenge for the man who played the lovable, unkempt Oscar Madison to portray the tenacious person Johnson was. Yet Klugman does a credible job and obviously enjoys the task at hand.

In this theatrical instance, we are given the opportunity to see the "other" side of Lyndon Johnson. Even with Klugman in the role, we are not totally convinced of Johnson's "softer" image as depicted by the playwright. Maybe future historians will be kinder to Johnson, but for now, we only have bitter memories to reflect upon.

Footloose and Fancy Free

By MICHAEL D. MANNO

As far as the standard teenage films that Hollywood has cranked out with machine-like regularity are concerned, "Footloose" can be considered a success. But if one were to analyze the movie in terms of plot structure and character development, it lacks the required level of continuity and depth that is necessary to maintain the interest of a serious viewer.

"Footloose" is set in a small Midwestern town (Beaumont), where dancing is outlawed and the Reverend Shaw Moore (John Lithglow) feels it is his personal responsibility to impose a high standard of morality on everyteen ager in town. We are soon introduced to Ren (Kevin Bacon), a city kid with a car stereo loud enough to be heard in the next state. Ren also has some obvious family problems, which are not addressed beyond their introduction. Ren falls for the minister's daughter, Ariel (Lori Singer) and leads a crusade to re-establish dancing as an acceptable and healthy activity. Other than this, the plot is rather desolate.

The film is lost in many ambiguities. One of the more obvious ones is that the minister forbids his daughter to listen to rock music but permits her to wear skintight jeans and fire-engine red cowboy boots. It's never really clear whether the minister is aware that his daughter is running around town with the local hoodlum or if she is simply a good sneak.

Another almost humorous contradiction occurs at the climax, when the introverted country boys of Beaumont are suddenly transformed into a group of flashy New York City break-dancers at the high school dance. Remember viewers, dancing is forbidden in Beaumont, so maybe we should be led to believe that these dancers are big-city friends of Ren, who just happened to drop in for a visit.

Fine points like these, and the question of where Ren is getting his punk-rock haircut trimmed in the conservative little town of Beaumont can be noticed throughout "Footloose." We can't help but wonder, after Ren proves his courage by participating in a "chicken" race on tractors, why nobody asks about the missing tractor, after his rival's vehicle tumbles off the road.

"Footloose" doesn't expect to be watched closely or taken seriously. It wants to fill the screen with catchy music and pretty faces. Singer looks lovely, even with the black eye she comes home with one night after a run-in with her old boyfriend. The black eye is another happening that goes conveniently undiscussed by the director.

Christopher Penn, who plays Willard, puts on a fine performance as Ren's best friend. He portrays a likeable and perhaps the most realistic character in the film. One of the most enjoyable scenes in the movie is when Willard and Ren dance to Deniece Williams' "Let's Hear It For The Boy," and a real sense of friendship is portrayed. This friendship might have served as a more substantial theme if it had been developed.

Accept LP is Powerful

By TOM BARAN

The West German rock band Accept has just released their new album titled "Balls To The Wall." Accept has shown America that the Germans don't produce only trashy pop musicians like Kraftwerk and Falco, but can offer some solid rock and roll. "Balls To The Wall" is not an album for people who dislike loud guitars, powerful vocals and powerful drumming.

Accept produces a sound somewhere between Krokus and AC/DC. The difference between Accept and most other heavy metal bands is that Accept has no even be said to sound like pop music. Accept's lyrics are very strong and in some cases may be offensive to people. Many of the lyrics deal with the way people treat each other in the world today. The song "Fight It Back" is a revolt against society, saying that everyone is different and that people are not always the way you want to find them.

The album's main drawback is that it is repetitious in some ways. Individually the songs are excellent, containing varying rhythms, clear, solid drumming and excellent vocals. After listening to the entire album, however, a couple of similarities are found in the songs. The most noticeable appear in the guitar solos. They are not much different from each other and differ little from solos found on other heavy metal albums. The second weak point of this album is the vocals. Udo Dirkschneider, the band's lead singer, has an excellent voice, but does not use it to its full potential, as he did on the band's previous release. This album almost sounds as if there had not been a lot of effort put into its recording.

Aside from the repetition in some of the songs, the album is worth buying. Accept is currently on tour with Kiss and will be playing at the Tower Theater on March 5.

Henley's Play is No Crime

By AMELIA McGOVERN

Take Southern comedy and blend it with sadness, romance and jealousy, and you have Beth Henley's play, "Crimes of the Heart."

This Pulitzer Prize-winning play opened at Philadelphia's Forrest Theatre on Feb. 14 and will run through March 3. Besides winning the Pulitzer Prize for drama, "Crimes of the Heart" received four Tony nominations during its Broadway run and won the New York Drama Critics Award and two Obie awards.

The story is centered on the day that one of three sisters is released from jail after shooting her husband.

The three sisters are reunited at home to help Babe, the ex-convict, through her ordeal. Lenny, the oldest, still lives at home. Meg returns from Hollywood, where she originally went to pursue a singing career but currently works as a clerk in a dog food company. Babe left home when she married Zachary, "the best lawyer in all of Hazlehurst, Miss.," according to Lenny.

The play is predominantly a comedy. Babe's reason for shooting Zachary, she unabashedly tells anyone who asks, is because "I didn't like his looks; I just didn't like his looks."

The acting in the play was of the finest quality, with Cyd Quilling as Babe standing out as the best character. She is believable as the naive, girlish Babe. She portrays cute and innocent in a new refreshing manner.

Kathy Danzer, as Meg, the flashy sister who admits to having a nervous breakdown while pursuing her musical career, is good, but slightly overdone. Her character does not strike a balance like the character of Babe. She is too flamboyant, too exaggerated. When she is upset or excited, Danzer seems almost crazed. When she is sad, Danzer shines. When she admits to working as a clerk to her sister when being questioned about her singing career, or when she admits to not being able to live up to "Old Granddaddy's" standards, Danzer's talents radiate.

Caryn West plays the nervous mother hen Lenny with tremendous energy. Sometimes she, too, is overplayed, but it appears this is mostly because she is trying to portray Lenny as neurotic.

Adam 'Strips' for Philly

By JAMES H. DeLORENZO

Adam Ant brought his own distinctive brand of "Ant Music" to a sold-out Spectrum this past Monday evening.

The British pop-rocker performed all the songs he is most known for, obviously pleasing the 7,000 Ant fans on hand. The crowd, mostly female, was on its feet and dancing for the majority of the 90-minute show.

The set opened with Ant, high atop a network of scaffolding, admonishing his fans to "loosen up, with a playful tease," the kicker from his current hit single, "Strip." Ant then proceeded to dance across his scaffold, obviously enthusiastic about the audience's positive reaction.

It was the first time Ant has ever played the Spectrum (in the Showcase Theatre format), and he obviously drew enough fans to warrant a return here. Ant did appear at the Tower Theatre last year.

Some questions a reviewer can't help but ask are: why do so many teenage girls go crazy over this guy? Why don't more people recognize that this is a good act this guy's doing? Ant's admitted current idol is Prince, and he performs basically the same type of material, yet has a broader base of support than Prince.

Ant has proven his talent and appeal time and again. It was most evident last May on the "Motown 25" special. Cursed with having to appear immediately after Michael Jackson, Ant more than held his own in his rendition of "Where Did Our Love Go" and even had to put up with the increasingly arrogant Diana Ross (the original performer of the song) as she made an unscheduled, and unwanted, appearance on the stage. But Ant acted as if it was all part of the plan, and integrated the former Supreme into his song and dance.

At the Spectrum, Ant dazzled the audience with his impressive vocal range, and his exciting, dynamic dancing and leaping.

On a stage set which resembled something from Elvis Presley's "Jailhouse Rock," Ant pranced his way through songs like "Dog Eat Dog," "Friend or Foe," and "Stand and Deliver." Ant undoubtedly enjoys playing to his mostly female audience with lyrics like "What do you wear in bed?" He's an eager and sincere young performer, trying his best to appeal to the audience, and at the Spectrum he succeeded.

Highlights of the show included the star's original hit record, "Ant Music." Originally released in the United States in 1980, this song has lost none of its verve and charm, as it advises us that other music "has lost its taste, try another flavor." The alternative is, of course, Ant music.

Ant also performed his biggest American hit, "Goody Two Shoes," and the follow-up, "Desperate but Not Serious." This number, performed with a strong drum and bass guitar backbeat, highlighted Ant's strong voice and clever lyrics.

The opening act for Adam Ant was the currently popular group, the Romantics. These guys are basically a club-band gone bigtime, out of place in the Spectrum. With only two modest hits to their credit, the current "Talking in Your Sleep," and "What I Like About You," the Romantics exhibited no sign of having another hit in sight. If these guys would change chords every once in a while, they might get somewhere. Every song in their 45-minute performance sounded the same.

But Ant provided his fans with his trademark, his constant change of direction. Here is a performer not afraid to be different, and not afraid to test an audience. In his Spectrum debut, Adam Ant proved that he has been neglected by the public far too long. It is hoped that more "Ant people" will hop on the bandwagon in the near future. Ant deserves better.

Three's A Crowd

By NICK ANASTASIO

Ever wonder why TV is virtually ignored in the pages of Steppin' Out? The answer is simple, as in simple-minded, as in the intelligence level of most shows on TV these days.

There may be some hope on the horizon, however. After eight years of enormous popularity (and much criticism), "Three's Company" is going off the air. Yes, that bastion of banality that has helped give TV a bad name is ceasing production. No longer will John Ritter, Joyce DeWitt, Priscilla Barnes and Don Knotts pollute our TV screens.

"Three's Company" was popular for the very same reason that it was criticized. When Suzanne Somers was on the show, her portrayal of a dumb blonde was attacked not only because it was a mediocre acting job at best, but also because no one realistically could be as dumb as Chrissy was made out. Yet Somers (and DeWitt) gave new meaning to the words "jiggle" and "cheesecake," so who cared whether or not the acting was good? Barnes did not help either. And the plots usually left much to be desired. "Three's Company" will never be confused (or even compared) with "All in the Family" or "M*A*S*H," but it will be compared with such forgettable comedies as "Too Close For Comfort" and "Sugar Time."

While we're on the subject of low-quality entertainment, it should be noted that Kiss will be appearing at Upper Darby's Tower Theatre on March 3, for one night only. The Tower holds 3000 people. Remember when Kiss used to sell out places like The Spectrum and Madison Square Garden, not for one night, but for two or three nights? It just goes to show that gimmicks alone cannot sustain an act.

.38 Special, the hottest Southern rock band around right now, will be at the Spectrum Saturday. The odd thing is that Huey Lewis and the News will be opening the show. Lewis is anything but Southern rock, and the strange mix may lead to problems. What will happen when someone who wants — and paid — to hear "If I'd Been the One," "So Caught Up in You," and "Hang On Loosely" has to first hear "I Want a New Drug," "Working for a Living," and "Do You Believe in Love?" This should be interesting.

Girlschool Plays Dirty

By MIKE MATHIS

Aren't you sick of worthless heavy metal music? In the last five years alone we've been bombarded by deficient albums from AC/DC, Motley Crue, and Ozzy Osbourne. The music is generalized by screeching guitar chords, and meaningless lyrics performed by musicians who warn, "lock up yur daughters."

One would think that a band named Girlschool would be pretty much the same thing. It is.

Originality in Girlschool is twofold. The band remains one of the last surviving all-female heavy metal bands that write their own material, although not particularly the best. (That distinction belongs to Joan Jett's former band, the Runaways.) The quartet includes guitarists Kim McAuliffe and Kelly Johnson, bassist Gil Weston and drummer Denise Dufort. They have achieved a measurable amount of critical success in their native England, where they were voted the second best new band of 1981.

After albums such as "Screaming Blue Murder," "Demolition," and "Hit and Run," Girlschool has unfolded "Play Dirty," an album that does little in breaking new ground for the band.

"Twentieth Century Boy" is one of those songs that makes you want to scream bloody murder. It's raunchy, loud and obnoxious, and it fails to resemble even die-hard heavy metal. "Going Under" is more of the same thing; biting lyrics and a nerve-racking rhythm. It begins to get monotonous after the first four shrieks.

The album's lone bright spot is lead vocalist Kelly Johnson, whose vocal punch really livens things up. "Play Dirty" and "Running for Cover" are two very appealing numbers in that the harmonies are extraordinary; none like them can be heard on any true heavy metal album. Crisp and clear guitar playing by Johnson and a glowing up-tempo beat kept up by rhythm guitarist McAuliffe hesitantly qualifies "Running for Cover" as the album's best cut.

Unfortunately, one of Girlschool's weak points is that they sound too much like Judas Priest. The bass section, the guitar chords, and the bang-your-head rhythm are all present in both bands, and it gets irritating, especially on "Play Dirty."

American heavy metal fans have been accustomed to such diverse acts as Judas Priest, Iron Maiden, Led Zeppelin, and Def Leppard. Each act has its own style of performing as well as the types of songs that they write and the stage setting on which they perform. Girlschool, however, fails to show any originality whatsoever; their songs are lyrically shallow and their music is unresponsive and lacks any material worth. This is one reason why the band has so far failed to acquire any American following. And if "Play Dirty" is any indication of what we are going to expect from this band in the future, they will be forever doomed to domestic status in Great Britain alone.

Magnum Moves to England

By MICHELE PAINTER

If you are one of the many admirers of Tom Selleck, then "Lassiter" is the movie for you. This movie has all the advantages of "Magnum P.I.," along with the spectacular capers of Agent 007. With this cast, which includes Jane Seymour and Lauren Hutton, you cannot go wrong.

Selleck portrays an American living in England just before World War II. His character, Nick Lassiter, is a James Bond-type jewel thief. There are several places in the movie where one expects Sean Connery to walk in and say, "My name's Bond, James Bond."

The unrealistic attitude which Lassiter has about the no-win situation that he is thrown in, makes his character a bit hard to take at times. Lassiter is so nonchalant that he faces impending doom as though he were about to do his laundry.

Lassiter is unscrupulously blackmailed by Scotland Yard into pulling off a seemingly impossible jewel heist. Scotland Yard wants the jewels because the Nazis want to sell the jewels to fund their operations.

To get the diamonds, Lassiter seduces a beautiful but ruthless German woman, played by Lauren Hutton. Hutton's character is one of those heartless ladies who would kill in cold blood to have it her way. She enjoys the friction that she creates between Lassiter and his girlfriend Sara, played by Jane Seymour. Sara is willing to do anything for him, anything except share him with Hutton.

The storyline has a few worn out, foreshadowed cliches, yet some surprising events that keep the audience on the edge of their seats until the end of the movie.

"Lassiter" will not win any Academy Awards, but it is an enjoyable movie.

Swimmers Take on Big East

By LAURA FORTUNATO

The bright lights illuminate the room, where varied banners hang and a multitude of competitors gather in specially-designed sweat suits. As spectators stand at attention, the resounding melody of the United States National Anthem is heard . . . no, this is not the Olympics but the sight of the 1984 Big East Swimming and Diving Championships. This past weekend the Villanova women's and men's teams participated in the competition held in Pittsburgh.

Out of the Big Eight eastern teams, the women finished in fourth place overall with 342 and one-half points, behind Pittsburgh, Syracuse and Boston College. Doing honor to the Villanova name, the women swam superb performances. Out of the 72 total swims, the women recorded 36 personal best times, and 31 of the remaining races were seasonal bests.

"I was ecstatic in terms of the team's concentration and aggressiveness toward each race. The season's preparation was definitely evident," commented Coach McKee.

The 800-meter free relay of Anne Murphy, Beth Metzger, Lynn Nelson and Lisa McFadden set a new school record with a time of 7:44.12. Each swimmer recorded personal best times with splits of 1:57.5, 1:55.5, 1:57.3 and 1:53.8 respectively, outdistancing the competitors by over three seconds and winning a gold medal.

McFadden won the 500 free in 4:55.16, posting an individual best time and new school record. She also won the 1650 in 16:52.42, a time which is less than one second off the national NCAA-qualifying standards. McFadden also placed fourth in the 200 fly and was runner-up in the 200 free.

Metzger was runner-up in both the 100 backstroke, 1:00.42, and the 200 backstroke, 2:08.27. She also placed third in the 100 fly in 58.68 and was a member of the winning 800 free relay, and fourth placed in the 400 medley and 400 free relays.

Genny Mulderig was third in the 200 back, 2:09.13, third in the 400 I.M. and fourth in the 200 I.M. Freshman Anne Murphy won her share of medals with a fifth-place 50 free and a sixth-place 100 free. Nancy Campbell was fifth in the 200 breaststroke and Cindy Cerami had a sixth place in the 1650. The 200 free relay of Murphy, Fahey, Vaughn and Nelson placed fourth. Outstanding diver Lori Bukaty placed sixth in the one meter and eighth in the three meter diving events.

Considering that each event has about 50 competitors entered, the women proved they are at the top. Assistant Coach Nick Edge believes in his team: "The team's unity and effort were the most important factors. There were a few adverse conditions, but the performances were great. From a coach's standpoint, you couldn't ask for anything better."

The women were not the only splash performance of the weekend, as the men's team compiled 287½ points for a third place behind Pittsburgh and runner-up Syracuse. Coach Geisz said, "I was delighted with our performance, although we wanted to win. It was no disgrace to finish third with that type of competition." Seven of the 19 swimmers recorded all-time bests. "Any coach would be proud. They were awesome," said Geisz.

HEADS UP: Several men's swim team members display the latest in hair fashion, preparing for the Big East Swimming Finals.

Just how awesome were they? To begin with five school records were broken in the course of the meet. The first record fell when Pete Maloney clocked a 51.67 in the 100 backstroke. This time was four-tenths off the Division I National-qualifying standards, a goal which many hope to attain and few do.

Maloney was also a member of two record-breaking relays, the 400 medley with Jose Alverez, Jack Hallahan and John Gargula, clocking a fast 3:29.8, and the 400 free relay with Keith Donohoe, Hallahan and Gargula, posting a 3:09.0.

Aside from the relay events, John Gargula, alias "Golden Boy," recorded four of six personal best times, and two individual medals for a second in the 200 fly and a fourth in the 100 fly. Keith Donohoe set two new freshman records; the 200 free in 1:44.67 and the 100 free in 47.66. For freshman Bob MacDonald, Big East was his first big-time competition, and he surprised everyone with a fourth in the one meter and a seventh in the three meter diving events.

Dan Nies captured the single gold medal in the 200 fly, just missing the school record with a time of 1:54.48. "I was thrilled. I wanted that for a long time; my freshman year I was fourth and last year I was second," said Nies. Nies also took a third in the 500 free and a fifth in the 400 I.M. Other swimmers posting top finishes were: Jose Alverez, sixth in the 100 breaststroke; Bill Slamkowski, fourth in the 1650; and Jerry Quin, sixth in the 1650 free.

Nova not only dazzled its competitors with their swimming capabilities, but eight swimmers added a unique flare to the practice of "shaving down," a ritual observed by many swimmers in championship meets. Maloney was responsible for many of the masterpieces, which included a fishhook, an apple, cornrows, and spikes; but the most spirited was Gargula's Wildcat claw atop his head. Geisz explained, "These guys demonstrated total commitment to their team and sport."

For a number of senior swimmers, the meet ended their Villanova careers.

"The Big East posed a great challenge to the team's capabilities and team comraderie, one which I enjoyed. The experience is something I'll always cherish," stated Jack Hallahan.

Quakers Bow to Wildcats

By MARY AGNES MATYSZEWSKI

It was Villanova's ball game all the way. From the very first basket to Dwayne McClain — a feat which sent thousands of basketball club members onto the court — the men's basketball team dominated the court in Tuesday night's game versus the Pennsylvania Quakers at the Palestra.

McClain was the leading scorer for the Wildcats with 15 points. In addition, he provided the fans with a couple of spectacular plays. One of these came early in the first half on a flying dunk off a rebound, which lifted the spectators on their feet. Four minutes later he made another flying dunk off of a feed from sophomore Dwight Wilbur.

Junior Ed Pinckney also had a fine night. He was the Cats' second leading scorer with 14 points and provided a strong defensive effort with seven rebounds despite an injured knee, which, according to head coach Rollie Massimino, "still bothers him." Massimino went on to say, "We've done all that we can for him. We had the knee x-rayed and the doctors have checked it out, but he says that it still hurts. We'll just have to see what happens."

Harold Pressley also provided excitement for the fans. Early in the first half he scored a six-foot, left-handed hook shot from the inside lane. Several minutes later he hit a driving jump shot, again from the inside lane. But the second half driving Wade Jones a McLain foul brought the loudest cheers of all. Even junior Gary McLain, though not scoring any points himself, provided solid defense effort and had some terrific plays. One of these was a diving save that thwarted a Penn attempted steal.

Although the game was an easy victory for the Wildcats, McClain was quick to point out the importance of not taking the game too lightly. According to the junior, "Penn is a very dangerous team because it can shoot from the outside. They can hit the long jumper. If we don't play defense as a team, they can be pretty successful in winning."

This kind of balanced scoring allows the Cats to play a more controlled game. "The 13 points by Katrina and 11 points by Andrea help take some of the pressure off Shelly and Nancy," commented McGovern. "It makes it a more comfortable game for us."

Nova, ranked nationally in free throw percentage, continued its success at the foul line shooting an excellent 27-32(84.4percent).

Villanova dominated defensively, led by senior guard Andrea Burton, who set a Villanova and Big East record with nine steals. Her efforts helped force 32 BC turnovers.

Villanova led BC for most of the first half, primarily by playing good solid defense. However, although the Cats forced 17 first-half turnovers, they were not able to convert them into points. BC.

AWESOME: Despite an injured knee, Ed Pinckney still managed to lead the team with seven rebounds and was the second leading scorer with 14 points.

Shelly Pennefather

The win was an important one in that it will provide the momentum to finish up the season strong and to do well in the Big East Tournament on March 1-4. Also significant is the fact that it was another win on the road for the Cats, often times where upsets occur. Villanova has shown signs of great progress.

Assistant coach McGovern added: "We've been very pleased thus far but we mustn't let down.

Ice Cats Tripped Up — Suffer Two Setbacks

By MARY AGNES MATYSZEWSKI

Villanova's ice hockey team dropped two Middle Atlantic Coast Conference (MACHC) games this past week, to archrivals Delaware and Pennsylvania.

The match with the Blue Hens proved disappointing, as the Cats fell, 8-1. The lone goal was scored by rookie Glenn Smith, who provided a strong defensive effort despite the upset.

The Penn Quakers' game got off to a good start, as freshman Pete Geraghty drew first blood on an assist from junior Bill Davis.

Villanova's scond tally came from Smith with John Padova and assistant captain Tim Curran getting credit for the assist. But the end result was a 5-2 Penn victory.

The weekend was not without its bright moments, however. Despite losing both encounters, the Icecats did have one offensive highlight. The line of Davis, Geraghty and Shawn Campbell played extremely well and sparked the team through much of Sunday's game. This line, which includes two Icecat rookies, has proven itself to be the perfect combination of skill, skating, energy and ability that is required to initiate an offensive drive and get the puck down the ice. This trio has been instrumental in many of Nova's finer offensive efforts.

According to head coach Skip Probst, "These three guys played their hearts out."

On tap for the Cats are games against Assumption and Pitchburg State.

Bill Davies

Defeat Seton Hall

By ELIAS A. PAPSON

No doctor could have prescribed a better medicine for the ailing Wildcats than a game against the Seton Hall Pirates.

The Cats, who had lost their last two Big East matchups, needed a win to keep pace with front-runners Georgetown and Syracuse. And Seton Hall, which is 1-12 in the Big East, had not won a Big East game since beating Providence by 60-58 on Jan. 2.

So the Wildcats traveled to the Brendan Byrne Arena last Saturday and squared off against the Pirates in a see-saw game that witnessed 15 ties, saw not one foul shot, and in which each team maintained only single-digit leads until late in the second half. And when it was over, the Cats had emerged with a 73-66 victory.

Harold Pressley's career-high 26 points led the Wildcat attack and was followed by Frank "Happy" Dobbs, Ed Pinckney, and Dwayne McClain, who all scored in double figures. The Pirates were led by Andre McCloud, who scored 24 points, and Mike Jones, who added 12 more.

The victory ended the Cats' two-game losing streak and boosted their record to 13-10 overall and 9-4 in the Big East, good for third place in the conference. Seton Hall fell to 8-16 overall and 1-12 in the Big East.

The first half was basically an even match. No team amassed a lead greater than four points. Halfway through the first half, both teams had exchanged baskets until Ken Powell's driving layup put the Pirates up, 18-14. Thereafter, both teams continued their even exchange of baskets, running the score to 24-20, with eight minutes remaining in the first half.

Nova then edged up a bit, scoring two straight baskets and tying the game at 24. They exchanged a few more sets of baskets, and then the Pirates scored four in a row on McCloud's two drives to the basket. McCloud ended the first half with 16 points.

Down 34-32, with a half minute remaining, Pressley tipped in a missed shot, was fouled and converted the free throw to boost the Cats to a 35-34 halftime lead. Pressley countered McCloud's stellar first-half performance with 19 points of his own.

Dobbs' baseline jumper at 12:16 ignited an eight-point scoring spree that put the Cats up for good, 49-41. The Pirates, though, quickly responded with four points of their own before Nova put in six straight points, and built a ten point margin with under six minutes remaining.

The two teams exchanged four sets of baskets and a foul shot, maintaining Nova's comfortable ten-point lead, at 64-54. Then, just as Nova was packing away the towels, Seton Hall scored six unanswered points, and drew to within four, 64-60, with 1:40 left in the game.

At this juncture, the Pirates adopted their fouling strategy, but it backfired when they sent key free-throw shooter "Happy" Dobbs to the line three straight time. He hit all six shots, and despite Eaves' two drives to the basket, the Cats had wrapped up the game, 71-66.

DIRECTORY LISTS SUMMER JOBS

BARNSTABLE, Mass.—The seaside resort areas of Cape Cod, Massachusetts and the off-shore islands of Nantucket and Martha's Vineyard are experiencing a growing problem in finding enough college workers to adequately service a rapidly expanding tourist industry.

This summer Cape Cod and the Islands will be offering over 55,000 good paying jobs to college students and teachers. Many of these jobs require little or no prior experience.

Because it is impossible to fill these jobs with local residents, most of whom make up the year 'round work force, it is necessary to draw from other geographic areas to satisfy this seasonal need.

Jobs for Students and Teachers

The Cape Cod Summer Job Bureau gathers all pertinent facts on available summer employment and publishes this information in a valuable Job Directory which is available to college students and teachers by February 1st each year.

Names and addresses of individual summer employers are listed in separate job categories from bartenders to ski resorts.

The Job Bureau is a service agency and therefore charges no fees to employers or employees.

An easy-to-use job application form, which is now familiar to the local employer, is included with the Directory along with important tips on how to land a good summer job.

Housing Information Included

This year the Job Directory has a section devoted to seasonal housing which lists addresses of people who lease rooms, efficiencies, cottages, apartments, and group rentals.

A useful reference map of the area is included as is a summary of educational opportunities for college credit, and additional courses in the arts.

Price of the 1984 Directory is $3 (includes 1st Class Postage & handling) to: Cape Cod Summer Job Bureau, Box 2012, Hyannis, MA 02601.

Wildcats Tame P.S.U. Nittany Lions

By JAMES H. DeLORENZO

What goes around comes around.

That's what the Nittany Lions of Penn State found out last Wednesday night, as Villanova's women's basketball team turned around its game in the final two minutes to win, 85-80.

It was the Wildcats' first win ever over the Lions, and it was greeted by the coaches and players with relief and joy.

"I just kept thinking that the same thing was happening as had happened two years ago," claimed Villanova head coach Harry Perretta. "I just kept thinking, please, don't let it happen again."

In 1981, the Cats fell to Penn State at home 79-60. Villanova had come into Wednesday's game with an 0-5 deficit against the women from University Park. But they weren't going to let this one go without a battle.

Perretta's charges held a three-point lead at the half, thanks to freshman forward Shelly Pennefather's 16 points. Yet Nova was not allowed to coast through the second half.

Trailing 51-47 with 15 minutes remaining, the Nittany Lions held the Cats scoreless for two minutes, then tied it up, 59-all, on three consecutive baskets by State junior center Kahadeejah Herbert.

Penn State built a four-point lead with 3:15 remaining. That was when the Cats clawed their way back.

"We never folded up," Pennefather noted. "We played tough and hung in there to pull it out."

That they did. Pennefather, who had been quiet for most of the second half, caught fire. She scored seven of Villanova's final 13 points, including two free throws with three seconds remaining to put the game, finally, out of reach.

Coach Harry Perretta

Also key in that two-minute spurt were junior forward Sandy Williams and senior guard Mimi Coleman. Neither had been shooting well from the line until Wednesday, when Coleman's two free throws with two-and-a-half minutes left tied the score at 74. Williams hit two from the charity stripe with 26 seconds to go, putting Villanova up by three.

"Sandy and Mimi definitely made the difference down the stretch," exclaimed an obviously pleased Perretta. "Mimi played great defense. And the whole time Sandy was on the line, I kept saying, please make the free throws. I really thought she could do it."

When Williams hit the first free throw, Perretta practically fell on the bench, saying to his reserves, "I'll quit coaching if she hits the second." She did, but Perretta had better not make good on that promise.

The key to the season has been the play of Pennefather and senior guard Nancy Bernhardt. Pennefather finished Wednesdays' game with 29 points and nine rebounds, while Bernhardt collected 26 points, eight caroms and dished off 10 assists.

"Penn State was really a very good team," Bernhardt noted. "But this win is really a big confidence builder as we get ready to go into the Big East Tournament. We've got a good win streak going."

It's a streak that has turned around the talents of Bernhardt and Pennefather. And with two games left in the regular season, and the Tournament around the corner, it looks like success has come around Villanova's way once again.

Big Hopes for Mens' Lacrosse

By TIM VALLACE

Through the leadership of head coach Randy Marks, the mens lacrosse team has become one of the fast-improving varsity sports at Villanova.

Last season, after arriving from Lower Merion H.S., Marks turned a 4-8 squad into a 7-4 team which expected a win each time they strapped on their helmets. This turn-around began with the opening face off of last year's match against Western Maryland. For it was Western Maryland that handed the pre-Marks laxers the first of eight defeats in 1982 with a 19-3 wipeout. However, last year the Cats evened the score with Western Maryland under their new coach in a 16-8 shocker.

This season Marks will be aided by three assistant coaches, Dan Altshuler, Scott Growney and John Lamb all who recently captained major Division I Lacrosse powers. The new assistants must be utilized if the Cats plan on improving on last year's record. That is, when a program expands, so does the caliber of opponents. That is evident this year, with the dropping of three of last year's weaker opponents, and the addition of three tough teams, Holy Cross, Boston College, and Virginia Military Institutes.

This year's lacrosse team will be led by upperclassmen, as 17 return. In order to keep winning in '84, the laxmen must put the ball past opposing goalies with consistency. The man to rely on for goals will be wearing number 10—John Haggerty, a junior. Last season John surprised many players and coaches, as he finished in the top 10 of Division I scorers, tallying 38 goals and eight assists. The other key attackman, Kenny Delgato, runs the offense with a confident precision often setting up Haggerty.

At midfield, the Cats are deep with their strengths in speed and experience. In Kenny Crowley, Jody DeChirico and co-captain Paul "Campy" Campanelli, the Cats have three established three year lettermen.

The midfielders will receive further help from sophomore standout Mike Ruopoli, last year's Rookie of the year, and transfer student Steve Fanelli.

The backbone of any championship team is the defense. If the Cats hope to fulfill their dreams this season they will need consistent standout defense. The person who the Cats will look to for the big save in the net is Drew Cunningham. Cunningham followed a "Rookie of the Year" freshman year by receiving the most improved player award last season. In addition to these honors, last season he finished among the top 10 Division I goalies in percentage of saves versus goals allowed.

The "hit men" defending Cunningham from opposing attackers is the strongest group of defenders put in front of Drew in his three years as Cats' netminder. They are led by co-captain Kevin Major. Major possesses a superb stick handling, a quality rarely found in defensemen. Playing alongside Major will be Larry Delgado, who enjoyed a fine rookie season a year ago. The defense will derive added strength from two highly recruited freshmen, Mike Corrado and David Vallano.

Women Tracksters Win Big East Indoor Championships

By N. JOHN CAVUTO

Look out, NCAAs, the Wildcats are off and running.

Last weekend, the Wildcats traveled to the Carrier Dome in Syracuse, N.Y., to participate in the Big East Championships. There, the women tracksters totally dominated their competition en route to capturing the Big East Conference Indoor Championships for the second straight year.

The Wildcats, led by senior Patty Bradley and junior Veronica McIntosh, took seven first place finishes and five second place finishes, while amassing a total of 164 points. Connecticut and St. John's took second and third, with 99 and 72 points respectively.

McIntosh was the woman of the hour, as she was named the Big East meet's Outstanding Performer. [illegible] the only thing but praise for McIntosh's performance: "Veronica has been an outstanding performer. She's in good condition, has run extremely well and still has room for improvement. She's a great competitor."

Grant, only a freshman, also had a big day, winning the 500 meters in a time of 1:12.72 and taking third place in the 55-meter hurdles. Grant's performance in the 500 meters was not only a Big East as well as Villanova indoor record, but also an NCAA-qualifying standard.

Lauren Searby, competing in the longer distance events, was a double-winner, capturing first place in the 1500 meters and the 5000 meters with times of 4:27.27 and 16:43.29 respectively. Both times broke the Big East indoor records and her time in the 5000 meters set a Villanova indoor record as well.

Patty Bradley, despite not taking any first place finishes, had a strong performance, breaking several Villanova indoor records as well. Bradley qualified for the NCAA's in the 500 meters, as she finished second to teammate Grant in a time of 1:13.17. She also finished second in the 55-meter hurdles, clocking in at 8.18, another V.U. indoor record, and third in the long jump with a Nova indoor record-breaking jump of 5.70 meters.

Freshman Lauren Searby captured both the 1500- and 5000-meter titles in the Big East Indoor Championships.

Veronica McIntosh

Congratulations are due to Veronica McIntosh on account of her outstanding performance at last week's Big East Conference Indoor Track Meet. In recognition of Veronica's extraordinary ability she has been named this week's Budweiser athlete.

Veronica, a junior, in all meanings of the word is a winner. She ran her way to victory in the 800-meter dash (2:11.32) and also in the 400-meter dash where she set a school and meet record. She also anchored the victorious 1600-meter relay team which also set a Big East meet record (3:49.80).

Ranked as one of the top middle-distance runners in the country, Veronica has what it takes to be a success. According to track coach Bob Shoudt, "Veronica has really become consistent and this has led to her growth as a runner." Shoudt stressed the importance of consistency in a sport like track.

As a runner for three years here at Villanova, Veronica has proven to be a vital runner in Villanova's relay teams. Currently, her group is ranked as one of the top teams in the United States.

Men Take Second Place

By PAUL MACCHIA

The Villanova men's track team competed in the fourth annual Big East Indoor Championships last weekend in the Carrier Dome at Syracuse University.

The Wildcats finished second with 104 points, just two shy of Seton Hall's 106. The rest of the standings were as follows: Pittsburgh 89, Georgetown 71, Syracuse 66, St. John's 63, Providence 36, Connecticut 29 and Boston College 25.

The Cats scored points in every event they entered with strong performances overall. Seton Hall was well-stocked with sprinters and hurdlers giving them a boost in the 300 meters, 400 meters, and 500 meters.

Sophomore Martin Booker placed third in the 55-meter hurdles in 7.35 seconds, behind Roger Kingdom of Pittsburgh (7.12) and Tommie Nnakwe of Seton Hall (7.25). Booker also went on to record a second-place finish in the 300 meters with a time of 34.49. In the trials Booker sped to a 34.37-clocking, which was .03 faster than the winning time in the final (34.40) by Paul Brown of Seton Hall.

Freshman Tony Valentine and senior Jim Adams placed third and fifth, respectively, in the 400 meters. Valentine was timed in 48.53 and Adams in 48.99 seconds. Seton Hall piled up points in this race as the Pirates took the first two places.

[illegible] and Kevin Davis [illegible] meter run. Jenkins ran a personal best of 1:04.57 in the trials and came back in the final with a clocking of 1:04.97. Davis ran 1:04.29 in the trials and 1:05.16 in the final.

After being plagued with knee trouble for about 10 days, junior John Marshall came back to run the 800 meters. Marshall turned in a time of 1:51.63 for second place. Teammate Kevin Davis (who was Marshall's top rival in high school) placed fifth running 1:52.25.

Freshman Sean O'Neill captured the Big East Indoor title in the 1000-meter run. O'Neill raced to a 2:23.70 clocking. The time also qualified him to run in the NCAA meet.

Marcus O'Sullivan won his third Big East Indoor 1500-meter title in the past four years. O'Sullivan ran to victory in a time of 3:49.12 to capture the title. Teammate Brian O'Keefe, who has been running very well lately, placed third in a time of 3:50.04.

The 3000-meter run saw sophomore John Keyworth run 8:13.86 to get third place. Freshman Gerry O'Reilly finished sixth in a time of 8:17.60. Junior Anthony O'Reilly placed third in the 5000-meter run with a time of 14:19.28.

In the relay events Villanova picked up one first-place finish and two second places. In the 1600-meter relay Jim Adams (48.7), Chip Jenkins (48.3), Valentine (48.4) and Marshall (49.2) put their talents together and ran to a 3:14.60 clocking which is currently the second-fastest Wildcat-clocking of the indoor season. The Cats just missed beating Seton Hall by .30.

In the 3200-meter relay Brian O'Keeffe (1:56.2), Marcus O'Sullivan (1:51.9), Kevin Davis (1:52.3) and Sean O'Neill (1:51.9) combined for a 7:32.98 clocking to finish second to Pittsburgh, which ran a 7:30.

Dean's Committee Rejects Chang

Student Organizational Structure Unaltered

By DIANA K. SUGG

The Dean's Advisory Committee discussed the possible restructuring of student activities at a meeting Jan. 25.

Several proposals for changing the present system were discussed, the most drastic being the institution of one large organization under which the current ones, such as the Resident Student Association and the Student Government, would be placed as committees.

However, the general student feeling at the meeting seemed to be against such a major change, and the Rev. John Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, decided that "there will not be a major restructuring at this time."

Stack said that he felt, after discussing the idea with faculty and students, that such a system would be "too unwieldy" and "not serve the students well."

Stack called the meeting because he "felt that there were some things that could be improved" and "wanted to serve the students better."

The major organizations have been experiencing some internal difficulties involving communication and the conflicting schedul[illegible] one general organization could have possibly eliminated this problem, as well as prevent the duplication of services by any of the organizations, according to those involved.

Richard Corino, president of the Resident Student Association and one of the six student leaders on the Dean's Advisory Committee, commented that if all the groups were made into a single entity, it would be so big that it would become "impersonal." He added that the leaders would be representing too many people, and consequently it would be difficult to feel "patriotism" to one particular group of students.

Another member of the Dean's Advisory Committee, Tom Belmont, the president of the Villanova Union, commented that Boston College is using this system currently, and it does not seem to be working.

"You lose a lot of leadership training," Belmont stated.

Although the idea of a major change has been ruled out for the present time, there were other more moderate suggestions proposed which would improve communications. One idea was a university calendar, similar to the one the Union currently puts out, that would have all the major organizations' activities on it. This would prevent two organizations from scheduling activities on the same night and going in competition with one another.

Prior to the meeting Stack had contacted other schools to investigate different student activities programs. He then met with his professional staff members to get a feel for their views and come up with some proposals.

The information was forwarded to the members of the Dean's Advisory Committee so they could find out what their individual groups thought about the restructuring of activities. Then at the meeting they presented their reactions to the idea and made proposals themselves. Basically, it was a time for the faculty, students and staff to discuss the system and find out each other's positions and proposals.

John Dunphy, director of Music Activities, described it as a "critical look at our whole system" and discussion on "what we can do to make it better."

The student representatives at the meeting — the Dean's Advisory Committee — represented the six major groups on campus: the Resident Student Association, the Student Government, the Villanova Union, the Association of Commuting Students, the Panhellenic Council and the Interfraternity Council. Formed last September by Stack, the committee allows the student representatives to voice their concerns, as well as offer their advice to the faculty about campus issues and social concerns.

Corino described the committee's function as the chance for the organizations to "combine on the problems and issues that affect us all."

Stack urged that students go to these representatives with their concerns so something can be done about them.

Fire Protection Termed Adequate

By JAMES F. DeLORENZO

"The building is reasonably safe," claimed Christopher Janosik, director of Residence Life at Villanova.

"The students are synthetic toward the possibility of fire," noted Maintenance Supervisor Ed Meagher.

"I've never had any problem from Villanova," Bernard Quinn, Radnor Township fire marshal, said.

The consensus of the officials consulted was that Villanova's dormitories and classroom buildings are safely protected in the case of fire, but the situation now, Janosik explained, "is adequate."

"I think there are things that could be improved," continued Janosik. "The University is becoming more sensitive to the living environments, and the institution is aware of its deficiencies and looking for ways to improve them.

"Of course, some of our buildings are very old," Janosik said. "Some of the fire detection equipment is less than state of the art, but it is sufficient in terms of the fire codes."

Meagher clarified this. "We call it the 'grandfather clause.' When a building is built, it is constructed according to the code of that date. As fire codes change, older buildings are not required to change with that code, but new construction is required to comply."

"Any proposed building must be approved by the Department of Labor and Industry in Harrisburg," Quinn explained. "Then the plan comes to Radnor Township. Our codes are more stringent than those of the state. If a building meets our code, it is approved.

"As we go along, fire codes must be changed. There are instances where we can't bring an old building up to the standards of a new code," commented Quinn. "Then it is up to the authorities to waive requirements."

(The oldest building on campus is Alumni Hall, a residence hall. Connelly Center is the most recent construction completed on campus, opening officially in March 1980.)

"All dormitories and academic buildings have fire alarm systems," Meagher noted. "You are required by the state of Pennsylvania to have them in order to construct the building. Even a building as old as Alumni has to have a system.

"The state," added Meagher, "does not require compatible alarm systems in all buildings."

"Fire safety is something we want to give a higher priority to," Janosik claimed. "There are no plans for one central system on the campus. It's one of the options that should be considered. Fire locator boards in buildings (also termed 'annunciators') are being considered, but what we are talking about is probably a whole new system."

The cost of putting a compatible system in all buildings on campus "would be astronomical," according to Meagher. "It could be done eventually as we renovate the buildings, though."

In the case of a dormitory, "It is really tough to make them absolutely safe," Janosik said. "You have to blame students who misuse the system. It's our greatest frustration."

"If the alarms, and other fire equipment, were left for their intended purpose, we would all be better off," added Janosik.

"Systems can only be abused so much," Meagher commented. "These things have a certain life expectancy, and as you interfere with that, by pulling bells off walls, or using fire extinguishers for other purposes, it causes problems in the reliability of the system.

"Vandalism jeopardizes the fire protection as a whole," noted Meagher.

Vandalism was the main reason fire hoses were removed from most of the residence halls last year. "Each hose has to be replaced after use, and students were using them in games," explained Meagher. "If the hoses aren't dried out properly, they rot, and fall apart. If we don't know that, and try to use the hose, it won't be reliable.

"The fire department indicated they would prefer not to use those hoses, that they would prefer to use their own," Meagher continued. "I don't blame them."

The University is serviced by two separate fire companies, according to Quinn. "East of Spring Mill Rd. (the main campus) is serviced by the Bryn Mawr Fire Company," he explained. "Radnor Township pays them a fee each year to do that. The West end (St. Mary's Hall and the Morris Estates) is taken care by the Radnor Fire Company."

Villanova's 50 buildings are furnished with "several thousand" fire extinguishers, according to Meagher.

One of those fire extinguishers was out of the reach of students in Corr Hall last November. A fire in Room 320 resulted in an estimated $8,000 in damage.

Six feet from the door of Room 320 was a fire extinguisher locked in a plexiglass and metal case. "It was not our intention to use plexiglass," Meagher contended. "All the other cases are covered in breakable glass."

"There is no acceptable explanation for that," Quinn said. "It has been brought to the University's attention."

"The new system," explained Meagher, "allows less vandalism of the extinguishers.

"It is difficult, if not impossible, to keep on top of the vandalism of fire equipment," Meagher said. "We have someone checking each building weekly, that's how serious the vandalism is.

"There is always room for improvement in the system," concluded Meagher. "If we didn't have the vandalism to contend with, the reliability of the system would certainly be improved."

Single-Sex Housing Explained

By AMELIA McGOVERN and GARY B. DYER

Co-ed residence halls will not be introduced at Villanova in the near future, despite their presence at such other Catholic colleges as Georgetown, Holy Cross and Merrimack.

"There are pros and cons for both single-sex and co-ed dormitories," said Dr. Richard Neville, vice president for student life. "The current position of the administration is to have single-sex dorms.

"Knowing the Board, but not speaking for anyone but myself, if the proposition came up, it would probably not be approved," commented the Rev. Edward J. McCarthy, O.S.A., chairman of the Board of Trustees.

According to Christopher Janosik, director of Residence Life, there are two basic reasons for the lack of co-ed housing: the facilities are "not conducive to a co-ed situation," and the officers of the institution — "the Board of Trustees, and others" — are opposed.

"For me, being co-ed is not a question of morality, but of privacy and comfort," Janosik said. "Are V.U. students comfortable in a co-ed situation as opposed to single-sex?"

Janosik explained that in their recent survey of all residents the responding students "seemed interested in increasing visitation hours, but they are not clamoring for co-ed facilities."

Going co-ed does not add to the educational experience," said the Rev. John Stack, O.S.A., dean of students. "The Board of Trustees felt that going co-ed was not in the best interest of the school."

New Dorms Planned For Women

The two residence halls currently being built on the South Campus are both intended for women. When they are put into use, Moriarty Hall, now for women, will be become a male dormitory. After these changes, 55 percent of all rooms on campus will be for men and 45 percent for women.

"The ratio of male to female is such that both new dormitories are needed for women students," Neville said.

"The buildings are not designed for co-edness," according to Neville. "The apartment design is better than co-edness by floor.

"But the best thing about single-sex dorms is that you can have better security in the women's dormitories," Neville explained. "Security of women is easier to maintain in an all-women's facility.

"Co-edness is easy in small dormitories, harder in large dorms," Neville commented.

Asked to state the factors favoring co-ed housing, Stack said that "kids tell me there is less vandalism in co-ed dorms. Socializing with the opposite sex is easier."

At Other Schools

Cathy McShea, who attended Villanova and lived in Good Counsel Hall before transferring to Georgetown, where all dormitories are co-ed, found the contrast between the two systems extreme. She said that her experience "points out the absurdity of Villanova's Augustinian apprehension about co-ed dorms and the insanity of the 'virgin vault' syndrome.

"It was ridiculous at Villanova, forcing people to hide in closets in Stanford," McShea explained. She said there was a general acceptance of co-ed housing from all the sectors of the university, including the Jesuit priests who run the school.

Some Georgetown residence halls are co-ed by floor, some by room. The last single-sex dorm was phased out four years ago, according to the Residence Life office there.

The introduction of co-ed residence halls at Georgetown was necessary because of the introduction of women into the school. In 1968, one dorm went co-ed by floor, while men's and women's rooms were not put on the same hall until five years later.

Of Georgetown's 6,000 students, about 4,000 live in the dormitories.

There was more reaction to having women at Holy Cross College than to having co-ed housing, according to David Foster of the Holy Cross Crusader. "There are some comments from the alumni that the school is not the same school they went to."

The college went co-ed in 1972, and now all dorms house men and women on alternating floors, according to Erica Glynn of the Holy Cross housing office. There is no strict visitation policy at the Jesuit-run school.

"People are used to it," Glynn commented. "It's a positive program and a healthy situation. People respect each other's rights and privacy."

The Chetwynd

Villanova could have bought the Chetwynd Apartments in Rosemont three years ago for use as a dormitory, but did not. It was rumored that the building was not bought because such a large dormitory would have to be co-ed.

"The Chetwynd was not purchased mainly because it was not a sound financial investment," according to Neville. "The size was not good. It is too far from the campus. There were many reasons the administration held out."

Stack stated that the building was not feasible as a dormitory because of safety and maintenance concerns. "The outdoor balconies, which most, if not all apartments have, is what was a major concern. Concern for safety was the primary reason for not purchasing the Chetwynd."

Co-ed dorms Here

"I think co-ed dorms would be a good idea," said Gary Degen, a resident assistant in Stanford Hall. He added, "I like the way we have it here; I have no problems with Stanford."

Gina Donleavy, an R.A. in Sheehan Hall, said that "the idea behind a co-ed dorm, in my mind, is that the students are mature enough to be able to handle it, while I say, the way the students act right now does not prove their maturity. They can't live within the rules now. After seeing the behavior on Friday and Saturday nights, and hearing the language they use to ladies, I don't think they're mature enough for that."

"The reason most parents send their children here is because they see what we have and approve," said Neville. "If they want to send their children to a school with co-ed living facilities then they can go to other Catholic universities."

New Library Director Chosen

By MICHAEL D. MANNO

Dr. Mary Ann Griffin has been appointed as the new director of the Falvey Memorial Library by the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A. Griffin's contract began on Jan. 1, 1984. She was selected by a University search committee and accepted the appointment in the fall.

"I have spent most of my time meeting with faculty members and other Villanova administrators in the past month," said Griffin.

Asked what needs, if any, exist in the library, Griffin replied, "The automated circulation system needs to be replaced because it is old and not operating properly." She added, "the students need to de-emphasize noise and emphasize quiet. I realize that a lot of the noise is suggestions because some students study together, but sometimes the noise gets out of hand."

Dr. Mary Ann Griffin, director of Falvey Memorial Library

Griffin would like to get the library staff more involved in the instruction of students who have library-related projects, and she plans to promote the use of the library as much as possible.

Students are encouraged to recommend titles for the library collection. "I don't think many students are aware of this, and I would be interested in talking to any students who have suggestions," commented Griffin.

When asked about the quality of the Falvey Memorial Library, Griffin said, "Our library is one of the best and largest in this area. We have over 500,000 volumes and 2,500 periodicals in our collection. In the past few years business and nursing areas have been expanded.

"One change I'm sure students will be pleased to hear is that the library hours have been expanded to 9 p.m. on Fridays and Saturdays," commented Griffin.

Before coming to Villanova, Griffin was library director at Xavier University in Cincinnati, Ohio. She was also department head in charge of circulation and building services at Tufts University Library in Massachusetts.

Griffin is replacing Ms. Mary Jane Kuhn, who was acting director for two and one-half years. Among Griffin's duties as director will be supervision of all library operations and staff development. She will also work as a liaison with the University community.

The director received her Doctor of Arts degree (D.A.) in library administration from Simmons College, her M.S. for library and information science also from Simmons and an M.A. in German literature and B.S. in mathematics from Pennsylvania State University.

Update on Maintenance

By TIM HANLON

The facilities on Route 320 by St. Mary's Hall and the Law School are ready for the installation of a stoplight, Thomas Trucks, director of maintenance stated, "The sidewalks are paved, the fence opening by the bridge has been closed, and I am all ready for the Radnor Township to install the light."

The poles are in place for this pushbutton pedestrian crossing, but the only reason the light has not been put up yet is due to the inclement weather we have been having.

In a phone interview, Ernest L. Marmer, director of public works, Radnor Township, said, "I can't complete the installation unless I put the markings on the road. Until I do that I can't complete the job."

The state of Pennsylvania will not permit operation of a stoplight until pedestrian crossings and stopping distance from the intersection are marked.

The Rev. John McKenzie, O.S.A., director of planning at Villanova, said that they had been moving on this issue since last spring and were supposed to be finished last summer, but because of the delays in the markings, bidding procedures and power source, the stoplight installation was hampered.

A major delay in the installation was due to the Radnor Township procedures for projects involving work costing over $2,500. The light costs the town $10,000, which meant that competitive bidding must preceed on a negotiating basis. A nearby township was an instigant to the adherence of such procedures. That particular township had negotiated instead of following a competitive bid basis. That township was duly fined. This incident gave a warning to those townships considering a negotiating basis which would get their work done faster instead of a competitive basis whereby they would have to set a specific date for final bids and then begin plans for construction.

A problem with the location of the power source to the stoplight was another factor included in the delay. Philadelphia Electric will have to re-cable because the current location was incorrect.

Marmer also mentioned a more serious problem. "Radnor Township has spent years dealing with people defacing the 'clearance' sign with paint on the P&W bridge that goes over S. Ithan

The P & W Underpass on S. Ithan Avenue

Ave. near the Stanford and Good Counsel dorms.

"The signs have been repeatedly painted over with black paint. Marmer mentioned the fact that they are $60 signs and are extremely important to trucks that pass under the bridge. Four trucks have hit the bridge in the past.

The most recent accident involved the driver being "ruined for life," commented Marmer. There were two signs warning trucks that the clearance for the bridge is 10 feet 6 inches. One is on the Lancaster Ithan side and the other is on the Conestoga Ithan side facing the dormitories.

Marmer said, "I have already talked to Fr. McKenzie, director of Planning, about the situation, but hopefully the opportunity to have this fact mentioned in the Villanovan will tell students the importance of leaving the signs alone. The last accident caused the township a great sum in a law suit." The same sign frames are sitting above the bridge itself. Marmer said, "We will put the new signs up in the same location sometime next week."

In regard to the construction site between Kennedy and Corr Halls, the Rev. Patrick Rice, O.S.A., vice president for administration, and McKenzie, commented that maintenance was repairing the 30-year-old steam pipes that connect all parts of campus.

A general systematic problem with steam lines aging occurred before the construction of the Connelly Center. At that time, the problem involved a digging up of the area between Vasey and Dougherty Halls. Although the current problem is not as chronic, McKenzie felt that "we should be able to 'zip' this one up as soon as maintenance completes the work. The weather is not helping this situation either."

Correction

In last week's page one article, "New On-Campus Alcohol Policy," Arthur Shuman's name was inadvertently misspelled. Also, Shuman is the deputy district attorney, not the assistant, as incorrectly stated last week.

On Co-ed Dorms

Welcome to the Dark Ages of Villanova University.

Several key administrators indicated to the Villanovan this week that neither now, nor in the foreseeable future, will co-ed dormitories find a home at this campus. In so delivering their message, our top brass showed to what extent they remain blind to the realities of college life.

All across the nation today, co-ed housing for college students is no longer the exception; it's the norm. Except, of course, at Villanova.

Why? Why does the University flat out refuse to even test out the possibility? The explanations we received, which may be found in the page three lead article this week, add up to nothing but a lot of empty talk.

"Going co-ed does not add to the educational experience," said one administrator.

According to another, the students responding to last semester's Residence Life Survey "seemed interested in increasing visitation hours, but they are not clamoring for co-ed facilities."

Those claims have absolutely no basis. In that survey, for instance, students were asked about their feelings on various types of dormitories. But for all the choices provided, a co-ed option was not even included. Why not? Residence Life, if it wanted an accurate perspective of student concerns, should have provided at least that. They didn't, and thus turned that part the survey into a sham.

The University had a perfect opportunity to test the effectiveness of co-ed living when the property next to Stanford Hall became available for dormitory construction. Instead, they decided to create more separation, more isolation, more mistrust.

The Villanovan article this week also looks at the co-ed situation at such other Catholic institutions as Georgetown and Holy Cross. Apparently, officials at those schools understand basic realities.

"People are used to it," said a Holy Cross housing official. It's a positive program and a healthy situation. People respect each other's rights and privacy."

At Villanova, we may further ask, is the student body's voice coming into play in this issue? Funny, our administrators don't seem willing to leave it open for discussion. They've made up their minds, and that's all there is to it.

At the same time, they've tried to make up our minds. We shouldn't have allowed them to get away with it so easily.

Cagers & Casinos

La Salle plays Louisville at the Palestra tomorrow, but at stake may be more than just the outcome of a college basketball game. Hoping that the contest financially succeeds is one Frank Gelb, an Atlantic City boxing and entertainment promoter who, according to the Philadelphia Daily News, apparently laid down close to $45,000 in arranging the match for the visiting Cardinals. It is Gelb's first dip into the college hoops pool, but if tomorrow's event pays off, it might not be his last.

The implications for Big Five basketball? According to the Daily News last week, Gelb would like to aid the Big Five in the future by setting up Spectrum double headers, pitting local schools against various national powerhouses. For the Philly schools, Gelb's plan comes as a good idea.

However, as reporter Kevin Mulligan further noted, Gelb would also like to arrange a home-and-home series next year between a Big Five member and, of all the unlikelies, Nevada-Las Vegas. And where would the games take place? Why, in the casinos of Atlantic City and Las Vegas, of course.

Considering the national exposure it has continued to receive, Villanova would certainly appear as a candidate for such a series. In that case, VU should give a flat out "no" to Gelb. The meccas of gambling are no place for college basketball, which has enough trouble keeping itself clean, let alone having to contend with such unfavorable outside forces.

By showcasing collegiate talent, the casinos will reap the benefits of a new source of exposure and dollars. Villanova, or any school for that matter, should not help them accomplish these publicity pitches.

The solution is simple. Leave the casinos to professional boxing.

Response to Palace Survey

To the Editor:

As a Sullivan Hall resident I just received a questionnaire asking my opinion on the future use of the Pizza Palace facilities in the basement of Sullivan Hall.

One of our options is to have a new food service similar to the one which presently operates in Stanford Hall. It is my opinion that this was the university's goal when it refused to renew the lease of the Pizza Palace. Villanova wanted to kick Mr. Bouikidis off campus in order to open its own pizza facility. Now they are asking our opinion, knowing that we will ask for a new pizza facility.

Once again, the Office of Residence Life will get what they want while making the residents feel that they got what they wanted. This sort of practice is disgraceful for any office, especially one that is supposed to represent Christian values.

When Andy Bouikidis operated the on-campus Pizza Palaces, we were given an option of buying good food from friendly people. Now we will be forced to eat food prepared by Villanova food service, and, if it is run by the same people who run Stanford's facilities, we will also have to put up with the rudeness of the proprietor.

If the Office of Residence Life really wanted our opinion, they why didn't Ms. McGraw send us a survey before telling Mr. Bouikidis to hit the road?

Women's Basketball

To the Editor:

My wife and I have tickets to attend all of the men's basketball games held in the Field House, as well as some that are scheduled for the Palestra. On Dec. 3 we arrived in time to see the second half of the women's game with Fairleigh Dickinson University that preceded the men's game. Both of us were impressed with the high caliber of play exhibited by the women — especially that of senior Nancy Bernhardt. She is an extremely talented basketball player. As a result, we have been attending as many of the women's home games as possible. We have been bringing with us our daughters and son and as many of the neighborhood children as will fit into our car.

Although we have read about the women's team in the student newspaper, we did not witness a game until this season. For this we apologize. We do find it somewhat distressing that the attendance at the games is not as good as it could be. We would hope that the student body at Villanova will quickly recognize what a championship team they have and give it the support it deserves. We wish them continued success for the rest of the 1984 season.

Literary Magazine

To the Editor:

In my one semester at Villanova I have been greatly influenced and impressed by the tremendous wealth of talent the Villanova community possesses, and disappointed in the many ways it passes by unnoticed and unexpressed.

Therefore, it was with great excitement that I became aware (reading last week's Villanovan) of the resurgence of the Villanova Literary/Arts Magazine. This Villanova family has a real imagination which needs to be heard, a presence which is important to be felt, and the new literary/arts magazine is the perfect (and most accessible) vehicle to accomplish this.

The new arts magazine will be composed of drawings, commentaries, essays, short stories, poetry, critical analyses, sketches, enlightening observations, random thoughts, prose, etc. It will be a synergy of the Villanova psyche set in print. The success of this creative initiative depends directly on the willingness of all students, graduate and undergraduate, to open themselves, both artistically and supportively, to the magazine, whether it be through contributing original material, applying for an editorial staff position, or simply supporting the various upcoming fundraising projects. The cooperation of every member of the Villanova family is vital to insure success.

The literary/arts magazine has an office located in the basement of St. Mary's, next to the yearbook office, and a box in the student activities center in Dougherty Hall. All input and ideas are welcome.

The Need for a 'Consistent Ethic'

We need a "consistent ethic" on life issues, said Cardinal Joseph Bernardin of Chicago in the Dec. 6 Gannon Lecture at Fordham University in New York. Cardinal Bernardin spoke of the multiple threats to life today and said that he is convinced the Catholic Church is in a position to make a defense of life. The cardinal is committed to shaping a relationship of linkage among the various life issues.

He used the U.S. Catholic bishops' pastoral letter, "The Challenge of Peace: God's Promise and Our Response," as a starting point to discuss this "ethic of life." Cardinal Bernardin is the new chairman of the U.S. bishops' pro-life activities committee. Excerpts from his address follow:

"'The Challenge of Peace' provides a starting point for developing a consistent ethic of life, but it does not provide a fully articulated framework. The central idea in the letter is the sacredness of human life and the responsibility we have, personally and socially, to protect and preserve the sanctity of life.

"The dominant cultural fact, present in both modern warfare and modern medicine, which induces a sharper awareness of the fragility of human life is our technology. To live as we do in an age of careening development of technology is to face a qualitatively new range of moral problems. War has been a perennial threat to human life, but today the threat is qualitatively different due to nuclear weapons. We now threaten life on a scale previously unimaginable.

"The essential question in the technological challenge is this: In an age when we can do almost anything, how do we decide what we ought to do? The even more demanding question is: In a time when we can do anything technologically, how do we decide morally what we never should do?

"Asking these questions along the spectrum of life from womb to tomb creates the need for a consistent ethic of life. For the spectrum of life cuts across the issues of genetics, abortion, capital punishment, modern warfare and the care of the terminally ill. These are all distinct problems, enormously complicated and deserving individual treatment. No single answer and no simple responses will solve them. My purpose, however, is to highlight the way in which we face new technological challenges in each one of these areas; this combination of challenges is what cries out for a consistent ethic of life.

"Such an ethic will have to be finely honed and carefully structured on the basis of values, principles, rules and applications to specific cases. It is not my task today nor within my competence as a bishop to spell out all the details of such an ethic. It is to that task that philosophers and poets, theologians and technicians, scientists and strategists, political leaders and plain citizens are called. I would, however, highlight a basic issue: the need for an attitude or atmosphere in society which is the precondition for sustaining a consistent ethic of life. The development of such an atmosphere has been the primary concern of the 'Respect Life' program of the American bishops. We intend our opposition to abortion and our opposition to nuclear war to be seen as specific applications of this broader attitude. We have also opposed the death penalty because we do not think its use cultivates an attitude of respect for life in society. The purpose of proposing a consistent ethic of life is to argue that success on any one of the issues threatening life requires a concern for the broader attitude in society about respect for human life.

"Attitude is the place to root an ethic of life, but ultimately ethics is about principles to guide the actions of individuals and institutions. It is therefore necessary to illustrate, at least by way of example, my proposition that an inner relationship does exist among several issues not only at the level of general attitude, but at the more specified level of moral principles. Two examples will serve to indicate the point.

"The first is contained in 'The Challenge of Peace' in the connection drawn between Catholic teaching on war and Catholic teaching on abortion. Both, of course, must be seen in light of an attitude of respect for life. The more explicit connection is based on the principle which prohibits the directly intended taking of innocent human life. The principle is at the heart of Catholic teaching on abortion; it is because the fetus is judged to be both human and not an aggressor that Catholic teaching concludes that direct attack on fetal life is always wrong. This is also why we insist that legal protection be given to the unborn.

"The same principle yields the most stringent, binding and radical conclusion of the pastoral letter: that directly intended attacks on civilian centers is always wrong. The bishops seek to highlight the power of this conclusion by specifying its implications in two ways: First, such attacks would be wrong even if our cities had been hit first; second, anyone asked to execute such attacks should refuse orders. These two extensions of the principle cut di-

Greenpeace Seeks Young Volunteers

By ANDY MILLER

On many college campuses, the organization called Greenpeace is something that is only read about in the papers or occasionally seen advertised on TV. But if you have ever wanted to get involved in the world around you, you couldn't find a better place to start.

Greenpeace means many different things to many different people, but it stands for one thing — action. Since 1971, it has become established in nine countries. In the United States, 250,000 volunteers and donors help Greenpeace continue its work. It is also a leading "anti-nukes" proponent.

Greenpeace U.S. is based in Washington, D.C., and has regional offices in seven other American cities, including Boston and Chicago. With a heavy campaign schedule coming up this summer, they're looking for more volunteers and donors.

Greenpeacer saves baby harp seal.

The pictures are graphic and alarming. Baby seals clubbed to death and then skinned for their white coats, while their mothers watch in helpless anguish. The great whales hunted and slaughtered almost to extinction, and gentle and intelligent dolphins brutally killed.

In just one example of the kind of cruelty that Greenpeace must deal with, one need only see one of the ways dolphins are hunted and killed.

Hunters spear a dolphin and hang it upside down from their ship. Its cries of distress call other dolphins over, and some of these are speared and hanged upside down also. A whole school is soon surrounded and driven toward shore. The hunters use underwater noisemakers to jam the animals' sonar, creating confusion and panic.

The dolphins are hanged upside down in the water to drown, and any still alive are stabbed to death. Often schools of 500 or more are killed at one time.

The intelligence and affection that dolphins show toward humans only make the killings more unbearable.

The list of creatures that are needlessly killed by man goes on and on. In Australia this year, for example, nearly six million kangaroos will be killed for their meat, and the annual seal hunt will be under way again this spring.

With all this, one might think that more students would become involved in Greenpeace, but that hasn't been the case.

"We don't get as many college kids as we could; it's not an area that we've really focused on," says Greenpeace spokesman Peter Dykstra, who started in the Boston office five years ago on an internship program.

"We work outside the system pretty much, and rely heavily on volunteers," he says. "It's tough because our resources are extremely limited.

"One of the best ways people can help us is to get out and vote, because if Reagan is re-elected, things will probably get worse yet."

Over the years, Greenpeace workers have taken tremendous risks. Members have been arrested and their ships seized by various countries, including Russia. Theirs is a policy of "direct, non-violent confrontation," and they have confronted hunters and seamen all over the world, often putting their lives in real danger.

Every year from 1976-82 Greenpeace has gone to Canada and dyed the fur of the baby harp seals green to make them of no value to the hunters.

Greenpeace workers surround ship carrying illegally slain whales.

As recently as 1982, British seamen tried to sink a Greenpeace ship that was protesting the dumping of radioactive waste in the mid-Atlantic, and in 1973 several crewmembers of a Greenpeace ship were brutally beaten by French commandoes who had boarded the ship.

Helping Greenpeace doesn't mean going out on an ice floe or standing in front of a harpoon. It costs $20 a mile for one of their ships to travel the oceans, and $400,000 to cover the expenses that such ships incur. That money must come from people who are concerned about their environment.

College students could look into a possible internship with Greenpeace, either in a media capacity or otherwise. It's all volunteer work, but the satisfaction and experience would be well worth it.

If you would like to volunteer for Greenpeace or send money (talk to mom and dad), drop by the office of the Villanovan The addresses of Greenpeace will be posted.

Senior-itis . . . Catch It!

By LARRY GOANOS

Wow, it's going fast. Tonight is the 100 Days Party for those of us who are members of Villanova's Class of 1984. That means that in a scant 100 days the longest week-end of our lives comes to an end. That weekend being senior year, of course.

On that fateful May afternoon we'll all be herded into the Field House in a single file line to take our respective shee.ps kins.

When we feel that diploma clutched tightly in our nervous hands, we'll know that's it — the free ride is over.

Hello real world.

But wait, there are still 100 days and a lot of fun left between now and then, so let's not rush it. The purpose of this article is not to lament the passing of senior year but rather to afford underclassmen a glimpse into the life that they themselves will be leading once they reach this exalted state known as "seniorhood." So get ready underclassmen, because it rolls around quicker than you think. Here are some of the symptoms:

You really know that you're a senior when you find yourself carrying more credit cards than credit hours.

You really know that you're a senior when the center on campus in which you spend the most time in is no longer the Connelly but rather the Career Development.

You really know that you're a senior when,while leafing through the daily paper on your way to the comics, you find yourself subconsciously peeking at the month's unemployment figure.

You really know that you're a senior when, while standing in line at the bookstore to purchase your semester's books, you calculate exactly how many pitchers you could've bought with that money.

You really know that you're a senior when the first thing that you want to know about a professor is not his grading policy,but rather his attendance policy.

You really know that you're a senior when the guy at the beer store gives you your own key to the walk-in cooler.

You really know that you're a senior when you start asking for practical Christmas gifts like briefcases and dress shirts.

You really know that you're a senior when the weekend starts after your last class on Tuesday.

You really know that you're a senior when you seriously start considering your chances of contracting cirrhosis of the liver.

You really know that you're a senior when the owner of Kelly's starts charging you rent.

Well there you have a partial list of some of the signs that tell a person that graduation is near. If you've suffered any of these symptoms fear not, there's still 100 days before the disease becomes fatal. Besides, someone told me the other day that there really is life after senior year.

Prof Favors Moral Approach to Terrorists

By BANITA WILSON

On Wednesday Jan. 25, the Talks of the Times committee of the Villanova Union presented Dr. Joseph Betz addressing "The Police Response To Hostage Takers." Betz is with the philosophy dept. of Villanova and recently sponsored the Villanovans For Life prolife march in Washington.

Betz based his theories on how police should handle hostage taking situations on the simple premiss that "it is better to negotiate than to attack." He proposes that more honest tactics be used in dealing with hostage takers.

"It's not easy (to deal with hostage takers), but they shouldn't train people to lie," said Betz, while making reference to previous hostage taking situations. "Lies attack our social fabric." His feeling is that these types of conflicts should be handled like labor negotiations, using coersive bargaining. This way it is much easier to concede rather than capitulate.

Betz's position takes the moral point-of-view. Capitulation gives in to the evil the hostage takers are trying to achieve.

Betz cited five modes of handling such situations. The first is not to negotiate at all. This was a principle strictly enforced by the Nixon administration when dealing with international terrorism, but was abandoned by the Carter administration. This method leads to violence and the possible taking of innocent lives.

Those persons in contact with the terrorists have their hands tied in a situation such as this with the knowledge that their superiors won't negotiate to save lives.

The second method is to just wait them out. Hoping that sooner or later the hostage takers will surrender. In this instance their is no chance of evil being done, but there is no good being done either.

The third mode is to negotiate without concession. This entails talking to the hostage takers, affirming the government's position, then giving in to nothing. A moral question then arises when the terrorists kill a hostage, if the police are justified in their eventual attack.

A fourth way to handle a hostage taking incident is to negotiate with concession. This yeilds to the terrorists' demands either partially or wholly. Negotiations should achieve what is morally optimal;. Neither of the parties involved must be fooled, or feel that they have been sold out. Even this method is not the best because it encourages others to commit similar crimes.

The fifth position, of which Betz whole-heartedly approves, is that of negotiating by not giving in. This method, according to Betz has been known to be successful. Lying isn't engaged which is tantamount to moral murder, no matter how much the lie can be justified. By not lying there is also less of a chance for mistrust of officials, which makes it harder for successful negotiations in the future.

Betz began his interest in terrorism about three years ago during a rash of terroristic attacks. "I noticed what bad guys were those who negotiated with terrorist are. We've fallen into fighting error with error." He is concerned about the moral handling of these situations in the present because of possible dangerous repercussions in

There are five basic financial aid programs offered by the U.S. Department of Education: Pell Grants; Supplemental Education Opportunity Grants (SEOG); College Work Study (CWS); National Direct Student Loans (NDSL); and Guaranteed Student Loans (GSL), three of which are campus-based programs.

To be eligible for aid, a student must be: enrolled in at least 12 semester hours; a U.S. citizen or an eligible non-citizen; possess adequate need; making satisfactory academic progress; and most important for males, registered for the draft at 18.

Students should check with the Villanova Financial Aid office to determine which programs he or she is eligible for. Financial Aid must be reapplied for every year and must be used exclusively for educational purposes. Forms for all aid programs must be received at the Federal Processing Center of your school by March 15 for the school year. Be sure to pick up your forms at the Villanova Financial Aid office, and complete them as soon as possible.

In 1983, $90 billion in sales was generated by firms through mail ordering, and a good part of this was brought about through deceptive practices. This past November, President Reagan signed a mail fraud bill (Public Law 98-186), which is aimed at protecting the consumer by bringing a halt to the deceptive mail order practice.

The U.S. Postal Service (USPS) has not been successful at stopping mail order schemes. In the past, the USPS would take action when a sample product and the corresponding advertisement was presented to them by a victimized consumer or, once notified, the USPS would send in for their own sample. The schemers, however, would not fill any mail orders until their advertising campaign was complete and all the order money was in, thereby escaping corrective actions enforced by the USPS.

Under the new statute, the USPS can issue "cease and desist" orders against any promoters using false advertisements, and federal courts may penalize those who refuse to comply up to $10,000 a day. It is important to realize that steps are always being taken to protect you, the consumer, so when you see unfair practices, take action and enforce your rights.

Consumers who have had transmission or engine trouble with their General Motors Corporation (GM) cars can now take their problems to their local Better Business Bureau for arbitration.

A Nov. 16, 1983 consent agreement between the FTC and GM settles a 1980 FTC complaint charging that GM failed to tell consumers about serious problems or defects in cars manufactured as early as 1974.

Consumers who have had a problem but have not yet been in touch with GM should call their local GM zone official (owner's manual). If they have no success with GM, they should call their local Better Business Bureau to obtain more information on the arbitration program. Other sources of information are the State Attorney General, FTC, or the Consumer Affairs Research Board in Bartley 331.

Terrorists

the future. "Lies attack the social fabric, this leads to them being remembered by future hostage takers. Lies are self-defeating, and lead to disbelief in the future," stated Betz.

Betz realizes that there is not enough done to educate proper procedure in these situations, but he's not advocating a radical change. The change should be gradual, incorporating competent personnel such as those involved in FBI terrorist missions. According to Betz, "Peaceful resolutions should be made by honest negotiations.

"We must confront them (terrorists) in the human way, the moral way; there's not much effort to meet them. Justice is the best and ultimate deterrent."

rectly into the policy debate on nuclear strategy and the personal decisions of citizens. James Reston referred to them as "an astonishing challenge to the power of the state."

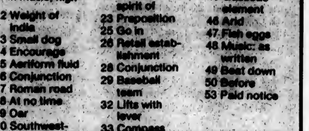
The use of this principle exemplifies the meaning of a consistent ethic of life. The principle which structures both cases, war and abortion, needs to be upheld in both places. It cannot be successfully sustained on one count and simultaneously eroded in a similar situation. When one carries this principle into the public debate today, however, one meets significant opposition from very different places on the political and ideological spectrum. Some see clearly the application of the principle to abortion, but contend the bishops overstepped their bounds when they applied it to choices about national security. Others understand the power of the principle in the strategic debate, but find its application on abortion a violation of the realm of private choice. I contend the viability of the principle depends upon the consistency of its application.

"Consistency means we cannot have it both ways: We cannot urge a compassionate society and vigorous public policy to protect the rights of the unborn and then argue that compassion and significant public programs on behalf of the needy undermine the moral fiber of the society or are beyond the proper scope of governmental responsibility.

"Right to life and quality of life complement each other in domestic social policy. They are also complementary in foreign policy. 'The Challenge of Peace' joined the question of how we prevent nuclear war to the question of how we build peace in an interdependent world. Today those who are admirably concerned with reversing the nuclear arms race must also be those who stand for a positive U.S. policy of building the peace. It is this linkage which has led the U.S. bishops not only to oppose the drive of the nuclear arms race, but to stand against the dynamic of a Central American policy which relies predominantly on the threat and the use of force, which is increasingly distancing itself from a concern for human rights in El Salvador and which fails to grasp the opportunity of a diplomatic solution to the Central American conflict.

"The relationship of the spectrum-of-life issues is far more intricate than I can even sketch here. I have made the case in the broad strokes of a lecturer; the detailed balancing, distinguishing and connecting of different aspects of a consistent ethic of life is precisely what this address calls the university community to investigate."

Linda Bond



It does not take much reflection to see how much impact other people have on our lives. Our self-image is given to us by our contacts with other people. We can trace much of our personal abilities to those few very good people in our lives that have impowered us by their friendship. The importance of friendship is easily realized. Yet important, the choosing and developing of a true friendship remains a difficult task.

I have often talked with married couples about problems in their relationship, discovering time and time again that the seeds of their problems began in those early years of dating. I have found a similar reality in talking with people about problems with dating. Here I often discover the seeds of their problems going back to the lack of true friendship in their lives.

In short, I have come to see that friendship is the school of dating and the school of marriage. Would we all not want our spouse to be, before anything else, our best friend? Would not our ability for friendship determine much of the character of our romantic relationships? It is odd then that our culture speaks so much of the importance of romance and so little of the importance of friendship. Are we deceiving ourselves? Can we really bypass the demands and challenges of friendship and enter a blissful romance?

Friendship is important. It teaches us more about relating and loving than we realize. Far more than any afternoon soap, friendship offers us an education that forms our very character.

Friendship is difficult. Difficult beeause we want to be liked by everyone but intimate with no one. Someone once said, "In order to have the right friends we must be willing to have the right enemies." To have the right friends requires a difficult decision. But you are worth it.

Basketball Marathon

Only one week away is the first annual Basketball Marathon sponsored by Alpha Phi Delta Fraternity. Alpha Phi Delta, in an attempt to raise money for the Children's Hospital of Philadelphia will take to the court and play for a duration of 24 hours, from 8 p.m. Friday to 8 p.m. Saturday. During that time, the fraternity will field a team of five on the court the whole time, playing a different team each hour of the marathon.

The highlight of the event will occur at 8 p.m. Friday when the WCAU "Hot Shots" take the court to battle Alpha Phi Delta. Playing for the "Hot Shots" will be the "morning man" Barsky, Billy Burke, the "motor mouth" Terry Young, and Christie Springfield. Other teams will be fielded by Kelly's Beer Parlor, Saco East, local police and fire stations, and by faculty, fraternities and sororities on campus.

According to brother Ken McDonald, "We feel that the Children's Hospital is a very worthy cause for us to donate our time to."

Added President John Adams, "We feel that the hospital should benefit greatly due to the support and cooperation of the local businesses and establishments through their donations."

We're looking for a few good college students and graduates who can fill the shoes of a Marine Corps Officer. That's a pretty tall order. Because it means leading other Marines. Being a leader of the finest. Being responsible for their safety and welfare. Being in charge. That's something no civilian job can offer you at 26. It's something very few people can ever measure up to. For those few who do meet our standards and have the drive to be a Marine Officer, we offer tuition assistance in the NROTC, Platoon Leaders Class (PLC), even a chance to join the Marine Reserve while you're still in college. 'Danny Rose' One Of Allen's Best

By LEONARD J. LaBARTH

The new Woody Allen film "Broadway Danny Rose" is a short, refreshing film in the vein of the earlier Allen films of the last decade: "Bananas," "Sleeper," and "Love and Death." There are the obligatory comic chase scenes, Allen's jokes about Jewish relatives, and his usual banterings about his insecurities and views of the world.

What makes this work succeed is not the material but the style in which it's presented. It is reminiscent of the style that Allen originally brought to our attention in the '60's. Allen, as writer, actor, and director, has returned to his comedic roots and given us his best film since "Annie Hall."

Allen plays Danny Rose, a small-time theatrical agent who handles such acts as a stuttering ventriloquist, a blind xylophone player, talking parrots and washed-up singers. Danny isn't making a great deal of money — he's not too successful in his bookings — but he is devoted to his acts and dreams of hitting it big.

One of his acts is Lou Canova (Nick Apollo Forte), a lounge singer whose personality fits the description of a casino crooner. Canova had one big hit in the '50's, then quickly plummeted to playing the small, sleazy nightclub scenes. Canova is actually a pretty good singer; it's just that his type has been slightly out of date for awhile. But the nostalgia craze that swept the United States in the early part of this decade engulfs Canova and soon he's in demand, playing better clubs. Danny is gradually making more money and soon devotes all his attention to his sudden hot property, determined to make him a headliner.

Woody Allen as Broadway Danny Rose, in his new comedy

Canova's weakness is revealed in the figure of Tina Vitale (Mia Farrow), the wife of a dead gangster-type. Tina still dates around with her old husband's Mafia-type associates who don't take too kindly to her outside-the-family relationship.

One of the film's most amusing scenes is at a family gathering where Danny is mistaken for Tina's mysterious, too-amorous boyfriend. Allen's attempt to get out of the situation is pure Allen as he tries to save himself ("We're gonna break both of da guys legs.") but only winds up in a confusing babble of double talk and double entendres. A chase ensues and both Danny and Tina escape.

The tale of Danny Rose is told in the narrative form as a group of Borsch-belt comedians sit in New York's Carnegie Deli and exchange stories of the too-often-a-loser agent who will handle any act. Danny cannot refuse an act, but his devotion is rarely rewarded. Of course, Danny's involvement with Lou Canova and Tina is the headline tale for the comics.

The film is shot appropriately in New York City. Allen plays agent to anyone; the city is forced to accept anyone. It is a short look at immigrant New York City, with all of its ethnic and cultural variations. Filmed in Allen's signature black and white, we see the city and its confusion as Danny does. Opportunity beckons if we can only get through at the right time and place. Cinematographer Gordon Willis, who has worked with Allen on six previous movies, displays an obvious rapport with the artist through his work.

Mia Farrow, as Tina, in her loud wig, big sunglasses and tight pants, was unrecognizable to this reviewer through the first several scenes. Viewers expect the waifish Farrow and instead, get this gaudy, funny, controlled bimbo with enough cheekiness to take over a city. Her acting is a surprise and indicates the preparation the actress put into her role.

Forte as Lou Canova is a perfect cast. He is big, swarthy and possesses a fine baritone — all the qualities perfect for a lounge singer. In this, his first movie role, the real life singer/song-writer performs two self-penned tunes.

Allen, of course, is in character completely as Danny Rose, he of the loud sports jackets, gold chains and doubletalk. He parodies not only entertainment agents but also himself. He wants to be a successful agent but gets in his own way and remains at best mediocre. The audience understands Danny Rose, laughing at his misadventures one minute, empathizing with his failures the next.

Also appearing in the movie are Milton Berle, Howard Cosell and the infamous Joe Franklin.

Allen's success as a comedian-turned-writer and director has never been dependent upon zinging memorable one-liners or resorting to pure obscenity. Instead, he collects the audience's laughter by placing himself in situations that only he could get himself into. The comedy is a result of his efforts to escape his nebbish image, one of which he has portrayed quite well for two decades.

"Danny Rose" is a thoughtful comedy, one that doesn't evoke belly laughs but long chuckles and lasting smiles. It's about laughing at one's self and attempting to better one's position in life. In Allen, we recognize a great character who is actually a composite of all of us. In laughing at himself, he teaches to laugh at ourselves.

'Zinc — The Green Album'

By BILL SANTOS

Eddie Jobson has released his first solo album, "Zinc — The Green Album." Previously, Jobson has been a member of several groups, including Curved Air (when he was 17), Roxy Music (18), and U.K. He also toured and recorded with Frank Zappa ("Zappa In New York") and Jethro Tull ("A"), and appears on approximately 30 albums.

Jobson caresses the strings of his wired, plasticene violin and the ivories of his keyboards. He is joined by guitarist Michael Cuneo, bassist Jerry Watts and drummer Michael Barisimanto, to form a modest quartet that produces not-so-modest sounds.

With synthesizer close at hand, Jobson has conceived, composed and produced "Zinc," an album that may prove to be too abstract for some. Related to previous U.K. albums, "U.K.U.K." and "Danger Money," "Zinc" contains a dichotomous cross section of Jobson, from melodious piano ("Prelude") to screeching violin ("Who My Friends . . . "), intricate synthesizer ("Colour Code") to haunting vocals ("Easy For You To Say").

"Listen to Reason" proves to be the pick of the album. With its ethereal chord changes and syncopated vocals, it produces an aura that has never been accomplished before. "Listen To Reason" has a rather quick tempo and is joined by other up-beat songs as "Turn It Over" and "Green Face." The album begins and ends with the same melody named "Transporter" and "Transporter II."

Although Jobson's vocals are not as full as his U.K. counterpart John Wetton, former lead singer and bassist for Asia, his ingenuity with a violin and synthesizer adds the needed depth to his already mellow but resonant voice.

Jobson and Wetton have both taken credit for composing the U.K. songs, but it is now evident who wrote the music. Jobson has always painted pictures with sound and has become a more vivid artist as time went on.

It would be an injustice to compare Jobson to any other artist, since his works stand alone. He tends to be dissonant, in his own elegant way; "Through The Glass" combines two separate riffs integrated to form a methodical but unharmonious pattern. Jobson meditates in his own euphoria, producing sounds found only in the colorful depths of his mind, later to be thrusted through his magical fingers.

"Zinc" is not for everyone, but if one wants a collection of prime Jobson, an illicit and explicit montage of sound, this is the album. It will open one's mind and flood the interior of one's head with colors, both pastels and fluorescents, until . . . the ultimate explosion.

Beru Revue Garners Loyalty

By BOB SMITH

Of all the bands working in and around the Philly club scene, none stand out quite like Beru Revue. By combining their own brand of off-beat wit and social commentary with straightforward rock sensibilities, Beru Revue has managed to garner a loyal following throughout the land, and is growing in popularity.

The band is the brainchild of lead singer Bob Beru. Beru, a former Penn student who was working in Philadelphia, wanted to form a band that would take its material a step further than most conventional bands by play-acting the characters in the individual songs while performing on stage.

Armed with this novel idea and a few sketchy lyrics, Beru was able to entice some of the area's finest musicians into joining his band. Guitarist Jerry Healy was drawn from the Alan Mann Band. Bassist Johnny Jacks, guitarist Greg Davis, and keyboardist Bruce Larkin had worked in Ken Queder's Secret Kidds for several years. Drummer Tom Pinto, who was hired after showing up for an audition, rounded out the band. All of this took place early in 1981.

The band played its first gigs later that year. After several slow months, they picked up momentum when their demo tape got airplay on such local radio shows as Gorilla Theatre and New Music Hour. They responded by playing every gig they could get, sometimes playing three or four nights a week. This practice, to which they still adhere, has made them the most visible band in the area.

Beru Revue's sole release, a seven song EP entitled "I Got a Job," appeared early last year. The music, which encompasses a wide field, ranges from new wave-tinged rock ("I Got a Job," "I.R.S.") to '40's-style cabaret ("Fag Song"). They even managed to throw in a twangy version of the old country standard, "Moon River." The lyrics lampoon everything from government policy to alternative lifestyles.

While the record is fairly solid, one must see the band live in order to fully appreciate its performing abilities. They put on a truly outrageous stage show, combining theatrics with hard rock. While Beru masquerades as various persona appropriate to each song (as a gas station attendant for "I Got a Job;" in a top hat and swallowtail jacket for "Monopoly;" with a bottle of Heineken for "No Shame/Falling Down the Stairs"), the

'Bad News' Makes for Great Conversation

By KELLY O'NEILL

Bad News, "the best of Esquire Magazine's Dubious Achievements," from 1961-1984, is a collection to be considered most funny by the many avid readers of Esquire Magazine. Avon Books and Esquire Press announce the publication of Bad News and consider it the "creme de la creme" of twenty years of Esquire's annual Achievement Awards.

Bad News, is a review of some of the silliest events, dumbest quotes and most misguided behavior of recent times. Accompanied by many black and white photographs, these outrageous commentaries make for an interesting conversation piece.

This paperback book has eight different sections ranging from Cheap Shots to Fun Couples. In 1983, Jim Purol of Livonia, Mich., smoked seven packs of cigarettes in 60 seconds on a local television show — talk about kissing an ashtray. What would Brooke Shields have to say about this? As a matter of fact, as featured in the Cheap Shots section Brooke Shields was quoted as saying, "Smoking kills. If you're killed, you've lost a very important part of your life." Something tells me Brooke Shields thinks guys who smoke are real losers; I don't believe that Jim Purol of Livonia would appeal to her at all.

In the Fun Couples section, we hear about the many pairs made with the infamous Elizabeth Taylor, and Warren Beatty's bevy of beauties, as well as such controversial couples as Billie Jean King and Marilyn Barnett.

Some other gems are: While in New York for an engagement at Radio City Music Hall, Lassie stayed in a $380-a-day suite at the Plaza Hotel. How about Mrs. Myra Franklin who saw "The Sound of Music" 500 times? "I'm never bored," she said.

Bad News is definitely full of some interesting information, and it seems that no one escapes the wrath of the editors at Esquire Magazine, so if are even remotely in the eye of the public, you had better just beware.

Gorky Park is Totally Lost

By JAYNE M. STUART

There are few experiences that are more frustrating than sitting through a two-hour movie and being completely lost. The recent release of the movie "Gorky Park" (adapted from the Martin Cruz Smith novel of the same title) proves to be a confusing and complicated film.

The plot is centered around a Russian Inspector, an American furrier, a New York detective, and a mysterious Russian dissident. If one had read the novel, one would be able to fill in the gaps and realize who is on who's side. Without the book's background, the viewer becomes lost in trying to decipher what each character is doing and to whom their loyalties lie.

The Russian Inspector, played commendably by William Hurt, is portrayed as insolent and disrespectful. When put on the case of a triple murder, he spends a great deal of time trying to get relieved of the assignment and seemingly stumbling upon the real facts surrounding the case. It is a credit to Hurt's fine acting ability to play a Russian Inspector in one movie and an American drug dealer in another ("The Big Chill"). The only drawback is that not enough depth is given to his character in "Gorky Park."

Lee Marvin plays a suave, rich and ruthless American businessman. He is so calm and reserved at all times that his character is hardly believable. Perhaps there are foreigners who move about the U.S.S.R. with such ease, but it is doubtful that they would be so carefree.

An exceptional performance is turned in by Joanna Pacula as Irina, the single-minded, determined Russian woman who becomes tangled in this web because of her strong will and beauty. She is unfaltering in her desire for escape from Russia, and will do anything to attain this elusive idea called freedom.

The N.Y. cop is a little too stereotyped. He is tough, mean, and cruel on the outside and a real softie underneath this facade. He is always outdoing Renko (the Russian Inspector) and makes the Russian out to be plain stupid. It is so exaggerated that it almost comes across as propaganda against Russia.

The aspect that is lost from book to movie is Renko's thought process. The audience is in the dark (figuratively and literally) as to how this puzzle fits together rest of the band churns out a driving rhythm. Healy and Davis spearhead the attack with their searing duel leads.

The only way to describe Beru Revue's stage show is, as Beru himself put it, a lot of fun. The music is at once both rocking and danceable, powerful, but not too loud. Beru's stage antics provide comic relief at just the right intervals. One of the most attractive features of the band is the accessibility of its songs. One does not have to be familiar with their material to enjoy songs like "I.R.S." or "No Shame," their songs speak for themselves.

Beru Revue will appear at the 23 East Cabaret in Ardmore tonight.

and the manner in which Renko discovers each piece. It seems as if he is subject to divine revelation and the answers just drop out of the sky.

The action in the movie is fast-paced, too much so. There is no flow, no continuity to the film. Most of all, it is such a plot of intrigue that it is completely unbelievable. This may seem trivial, yet a film of this nature needs some shred of authenticity to make it enjoyable. It involves real nations, people, events and emotions; these are portrayed in a fantasy manner, thus rendering them absurd.

It is rare for a book to be translated effectively and accurately into a successful, enjoyable film. "Gorky Park" is yet another try that only succeeds in failing.

Some Random Notes The Train Exhibition

By NICK ANASTASIO

Tired of the same old thing every weekend? Want something different to do this weekend? If you are interested in model trains, dollhouses (and dolls), and other antique toys that are collectors' items, then Greenberg's Great Train, Dollhouse, and Toy Show is the place for you. Whether you want to buy, sell, or just look at all the items on display, there's something for you here. Train track layouts range from a few feet to a 48-foot Lionel Train spread. Dollhouses on display are not the type of dollhouses you (or your sister) played with as a small child, but rather accurate models of such things as turn-of-the-century general stores.

The main attraction, of course, is the train exhibition. There are seven major railroad exhibits, including the Lionel spread, complete with crossing signals, warning lights, descending gates, and toot whistles. There are also tables set up to help you learn how to repair any broken trains that you might have and even build your own.

Greenberg's Great Train, Dollhouse, and Toy Show will be held at the Philadelphia Civic Center Sat. and Sun. Feb. 4 and 5. Wear your engineer's cap.

The Michael Jackson jokes are starting already. There is absolutely no truth to the rumors that Jackson will be recording such songs as "Disco Inferno," "Fire," "Burning Love," "Light My Fire," "Burning for You," "Heat Wave," "Fight Fire with Fire," "Burning Down the House," "Fire and Ice," "The Kid is Hot Tonight," "Heat of the Moment," and "Hotter than July." And there are no plans for Jackson to team up with Richard Pryor in the near future.

Wildcats Handle Huskies

By ELIAS A. PAPSON

Last Friday night the men's basketball team squared off against Big East rival Connecticut at the Civic Center in Hartford hoping to reach the .500 plateau. They had been denied that opportunity two weeks ago in Notre Dame, but were to be denied no longer. They controlled the opening tip-off, scored the first basket, and never looked back, in posting a convincing 69-58 victory.

High scorers for the Cats were Happy Dobbs with 20 points, Gary McLain with 18, and Harold Pressley and Dwayne McClain who both added ten points. Al Frederick led Connecticut with 25 points and Ray Broxton added 18 points in the losing effort.

The Cats, who shot 52 percent from the floor in the first half, jumped out to an early 8-2 lead on two long bombs by McLain, and one each from Dwight Wilbur and Dobbs. The lead amassed in the early going was never relinquished. It increased further to 14-8, but after that, Connecticut went three minutes without a score. However, Nova was only able to score three points in that span of time, but still led 17-8.

For the next four minutes, Connecticut and Villanova exchanged two sets of baskets and then Connecticut scored six straight points and closed the gap to 22-18. But that was the closest they were to get for some time, as Nova countered with six straight points of their own, compiling a 28-18 lead with 3:45 left in the first half.

The final three minutes of the first half were marked by another even exchange of baskets until Broxton's six-foot jumper closed Connecticut to within seven, 33-26. Gary McLain's lone free throw at :09 concluded the first half scoring, and gave Nova a 34-26 halftime lead.

Nova's first half defense was superb. Connecticut's inside game was completely stymied, while their scoring was confined to only four players. Between them, forwards Broxton and Frederick accounted for 20 of Connecticut's 26 first half points.

Opening the second half, Connecticut slowly inched closer to Nova. Good penetration and fine passing enabled Connecticut to come within one, 39-38, on Williams' basket underneath. But it was to be the closest they would get all game as the Cats scored two consecutive baskets in just over a minute to regain a modest 43-38 lead.

Nova's lead fell to four, 49-45, at 7:28, when starting center Tim Coles got his first and only basket of the game, a six-foot baseline shot.

Vernon Giscombe's second foul gave the Cats their biggest lead of the game, 61-49. Frederick's three point play cut the margin to 61-52, but Broxton's fourth foul at 1:50 put clutch free-throw shooter Dobbs on the line. He sunk his two shots and Nova retained their double digit lead, 63-52. Half a minute later, Broxton fouled out and Nova's lead remained at eleven, 65-54.

In the last minute, McClain sunk three of four free throws and Gary McLain added one more before Frederick's slam dunk at :06 closed out the scoring.

A Rocky Roadtrip:

Skaters Lose Twice

By MARY AGNES MATYS-ZEWSKI

This past weekend the Villanova ice hockey team took to the road to play Division III rivals Fairfield and Quinnipiac of Connecticut. However, despite an enjoyable journey, the Icecats succumbed in both contests as the two New England teams were able to skate right over them.

Saturday night's game against Fairfield at the Bridgeport Wonderland of Ice got off to a good start, but unfortunately, by buzzer's end Nova had lost the encounter by a score of 4-2. After a relaxing Sunday afternoon, the Cats tangled with the Quinnipiac squad. Again, Nova was skating neck and neck with their foes, but the game ended with a loss of 5-3.

However, one Icecat did manage to stand out in both contests. In each game, junior assistant Captain Tim Curran began the Wildcat scoring drive with spectacular plays. His performances served as inspiration to the Nova bench and on both nights provided a beacon of hope for a possible Icecat win. Unfortunately, though, Lady Luck did not smile on the Cat squad in either game. But Curran's outstanding skating and scoring ability will be a great help to the Icecats in the remaining season.

Also having a superb weekend was rookie goalie Geordi Borsari. Borsari had a fantastic season and has been a real asset to the Icecat squad.

When asked to comment on the games manager Carolyn Mullen was quick to state, "We really could have won both games — that's what's such a shame about our final scores, they never really reflect how well we played."

According to Captain Frank Segreto, "We played well, we just didn't get the scoring punch we needed. Once again, Geordi Borsari played fantastically in both games. Our wings, including myself, just need to start scoring."

Cats Run in Milrose Games

By DAVID ERRICO

The Villanova men's track team competed in the 77th annual Wanamaker-Milrose Games on Friday at New York's Madison Square Garden. The event is, however, not just your ordinary track meet.

The Milrose Games were developed in 1907 by Rodman Wanamaker. Its objectives have been the promotion of amateur sports and related benefits to health and worldwide sports. There are few, if any, track meets that can even come close to the prestige and heritage of the Milrose Games. Every year over 18,000 fans pay upwards of $25 to witness track's finest competitors.

The Wildcats did not have as much success this year as compared to their previous outings. However, when you consider that Villanova has won the two-mile relay 11 times since 1965 and has won the one-mile relay eight times since 1968, it is hard to improve on such an impressive reputation.

In the two-mile relay, the Cats finished second to Arizona State. Villanova won this event last year and probably would have won this year if not for the illness of freshman Sean O'Neill, who was sick the week before the meet and was unable to practice. Teammate John Marshall confirmed, "Without a doubt a healthy Sean O'Neill would have made the difference. Against such good teams as Arizona State and Georgetown, you just can't afford to give up so much and still win."

In the one-mile relay, another event that Villanova won last year, the Cats also suffered from injuries. Jim Adams, suffering from a sore achilles, was not at full health for this event. Along with Martin Booker, Chip Jenkins and Tony Valentine, the Cats could only place fourth. Texas-El Paso clinched first place in this event.

Another fourth-place finish was claimed by John Marshall in the 800-meter race. Finishing third was former Cat Anthony Tufariello. Marshall, who is the defending NCAA champion in the 800-meter was not overwhelmed by his performance. "Every runner has a race that they can't explain. The conditions were there but I just didn't run to my potential."

In probably the most popular event, the Wanamaker-Mile, Marcus O'Sullivan finished fourth as he did in 1983. His time was 4:02.36 just behind Ross Donoghue, another Villanova graduate.

Cat Scratches: Eight track men traveled to Chicago on Sunday for Bally's Chicago Invitational. Villanova won the distance medley relay with a time of 9:46.15. Competing for the Cats were Kevin Davis (800- meter), Chip Jenkins (400- meter), J.J. Clark (1200-meter) and Marcus O'Sullivan (1600-meter). The Cats finished fourth in the 4x400 relay behind Abeliene Christian. Also, John Borgese finished fourth in the 800-meter event.

Swimming Roundup

By LAURA FORTUNATO

The Villanova women's swimming team emerged the victors again after defeating Fordham University 68-45.

Senior Lisa McFadden continued her winning ways, capturing the 1000-meter freestyle in 10:28.11, the 500-meter freestyle in 5:04.33, and the 200-meter freestyle in 1:56.46. Senior Beth Metzger was a double winner, capturing the 100-meter butterfly with a time of 1:00.4 and the 100-meter backstroke with a time of 1:01.7.

Junior Genny Mulderig won the 200-meter individual medley in 2:16.5 and freshman Anne Murphey captured the 100-meter freestyle in 54.69.

Sophomore Lori Bukaty outdove opponents by winning the one-meter required and the one-meter optional diving events.

The final victory was the team of Sherri Fahey, Lynn Nelson, Mary McRae and Mulderig, who won the 400-meter freestyle relay in a time of 3:53.16.

The Long and Winding Road

QUESTION: What is interminably long and has absolutely no meaning at all?

ANSWER: The regular seasons of basketball and hockey.

Yes, in an age where more is unfortunately considered better, professional hockey and basketball seasons seem to last forever, like a Doris Day film festival, an Ozzy Osbourne concert, or a Friday night at Villanova! When one is finally able to make it through the six months of seemingly endless days and nights, another obstacle awaits him, two months of playoffs. It's kind of like waiting in line for tickets to watch someone recite the poems of Robert Frost.

Let's take a look at hockey first. The 21 hockey teams play an 80-game schedule, a long enough season to choose the best four teams in hockey for the playoffs. Right? But Noooo! Sixteen teams make the playoffs. With that many teams eligible for post-season play, I have to feel sorry for the five teams left out. As of last Sunday, Detroit, sporting an amazingly mediocre, if not to say pitiful, 17-29-6 record would have qualified to make the playoffs. How can the fans expect their favorite team to get up for games which are essentially meaningless? To put it simply, one must be incredibly bad not to make the playoffs.

Basketball must have decided that it did not want to be left behind as it increased its playoff format season to 16 teams as well, eliminating first round byes. As of last Sunday, Washington, with a 19-25 record, would be in the playoffs. The fight for mediocrity is on.

The obvious reason behind the long seasons and playoff format is money. With player salaries spiraling upwards faster than the United States' deficit, owners need an increasing source of revenue. This revenue is to be found in the scheduling of more playoff games, thus bringing in more ticket sales.

Increased playoffs actually have a paradoxical effect on the regular season. It makes the regular season meaningless for the really good teams who do not even have a first round bye as an incentive. But the teams immersed in mediocrity are given a reason to play, an opportunity to make a quick appearance in the playoffs followed by a quick exit, or if luck prevails, the chance of being the spoiler, knocking off a heavy favorite. It also gives the fans of these teams a reason to stay interested during the regular season, which makes the owners very happy. After all, sports is a business like everything else.

Since everyone wants their team to make the playoffs, the solution will not be found in reducing the number of teams that make the playoffs. Instead, why not shorten the regular season by 20 games? Of course, one would have to expect the owners to increase ticket prices by approximately 25 percent. However, the product one would get for the money would probably be much better than that received today. Players would get a longer break between games, and thus, would be able to get up more for them.

I'm sorry, but if I were a season ticket holder of the Flyers, I would not want to see the Jersey Devils more than once in a season. I would rather see a Doris Day film. For this season, there is a light at the end of the tunnel. Only 30 games left to play.

BIG AND FRIENDLY

There's something you should know before you hit the slopes again.

Not far from where you are right now, there's a mountain where the lifts are short, the slopes are long and the skiing is indescribable.

It's Elk Mountain. And you have to ski it to believe it.

Elk Mountain is the biggest ski mountain in Eastern Pennsylvania — with a vertical drop of 1,000 feet of snow-packed trails — 17 all together — some as long as two miles — and six of them lighted. With a new "expert" trail 3,000 feet long.

What all this means is what every skier wants: More time skiing and less time waiting in line.

And, confidentially, it means more time to relax in our friendly new restaurant, cocktail lounge and bar — where you'll meet some very interesting people.

You know it's going to be worth the trip. So come up to Elk Mountain.

Cats Win Thriller at Palestra

By JOE BAGLEY

Dwayne McClain shot 90 percent from the field, went two for two from the line and grabbed and stuffed the biggest offensive rebound of his career in Villanova's outstanding 58-54 win over Arkansas.

The game, played before the second of Villanova's three consecutive national television audiences was a weekend thriller from start to finish. Razorback Leroy Sutton scored in the first 30 seconds and Arkansas held the lead from that point until deep into the second half. The Hogs' top scorer, rebounder, and enforcer Joe Kleine hit two free throws and was then held scoreless for the next 25 minutes of play.

Kleine, built like a Southwest Conference linebacker, was averaging 20.8 ppg going into the contest, before being held to eight points. Arkansas' other scoring threat, senior Alvin Robertson, who has scored 37 points in a game this season, managed only 13.

McClain hit four straight field goals in the opening minutes to keep Villanova close. Dobbs then took over with two 15-foot jumpers. Pinckney was fouled by Hog Ricky Norton and his two free throws closed the Hog lead to 18-16, Villanova managed to keep it close the remaining seven minutes as Arkansas ended the half with a 27-25 lead.

The Razorbacks then came out screaming to their largest margin, 33-26. Again McClain answered his opponents, slamming down a drive along the baseline, making a flying dunk on a feed from Gary McLain and pumping in a 15-foot jumper from the left side. The two teams began exchanging blows, shot for shot, with Arkansas consistently maintaining a five point spread.

Eddie Pinckney wiped that deficit out with a layup and two free throws. Once more the teams fought back and forth for control of the game, this time over a single point. A Charles Balentine miss and a Villanova rebound allowed "Happy" Dobbs the go-ahead basket.

With Villanova ahead 52-51, Massimino had to make a decision. No Villanova players had been substituted in the second half and Massimino left it that way.

"I thought that we could handle it (playing without subs). . .I usually substitute Dwight (Wilbur) when we hold the ball, as a matter of fact, we got it down to 3:28 and I said, 'that's enough, that's all we need.' "

Villanova went into an effective spread offense forcing Norton to foul Dobbs, who made both free throws. Kleine then sank two free throws and Sutton one to tie the score at 54 with 43 seconds left. The Cats used two timeouts getting the clock down to :21.

Massimino had outlined the last shot to his team. "We wanted to get the ball on a screen, down to Eddie," the coach stated, "and bring 'Happy' up on top. We wanted to reverse it back to Eddie, but he was covered. We got the ball to 'Happy' who took the hard dribble to his left and shot the ball . . ."

"I was in an awkward position at the time," Dobbs said later. "I had to get it up there the best way that I could . . ."

The shot missed and Harold Pressley and Pinckney were blocked from getting to the rebound.

"Initially, I was getting ready to call a timeout when I saw that he was having trouble getting the ball off," McClain observed. "Then I saw that he shot it. No one boxed me out at all. I was stepping out on the wing and the closest guy to me was Robertson and he didn't box me out first so I just snuck inside him and laid it up."

McClain slammed the ball in with four seconds left to put Villanova ahead to stay. The Razorbacks flubbed the inbounds pass which enabled McClain to sink two free throws as a result of the play.

The game was more than a desperately needed check in the win column. Dwayne saw its significance.

"They (Arkansas) deny everything. The wings, the pass outside. They really know how to execute. We lost our last one on national TV so we didn't want to do that two weeks in a row. This was a very big game for us."

Women's Hoop Wins Twice

By BOB HELLER

Last Thursday the Villanova women's basketball team defeated the Lady Knights of Rutgers 68-56.

The Wildcats were led by senior Nancy Bernhardt and freshman Shelly Pennefather scoring 21 and 16 point respectively.

Both teams exchanged baskets during the first five minutes of the game with Rutgers taking an early 9-6 lead. During the next 5:45 the Wildcats outscored the Lady Knights 13-1, to take a commanding 19-10 lead.

Rutgers slowly battled back to tie the score at 23 with 4:14 left in the half. Some defensive lapses by the Cats enabled Rutgers to take their biggest lead of the game 33-29 as the halftime buzzer sounded.

Villanova controlled the tempo of the game throughout the second half starting with the opening tap. A jumper by Bernhardt from the top of key, tied the score at 37. Three minutes later a jumper from senior Andrea Burton from the same spot gave the Wildcats a 41-39 lead which they never relinquished.

The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly.

Villanova's women's basketball team starred in its own version of Sergio Leone's classic this past week, managing a win over Georgetown, but suffering a setback at the hands of Cheyney State.

First, the good. Villanova pulled out a win over East Conference rival Georgetown, 63-59. It was a game which was much closer than it should have been. That's the bad part.

"We didn't play as well as we are capable of," commented Wildcat head coach Harry Perretta. "We should have lost."

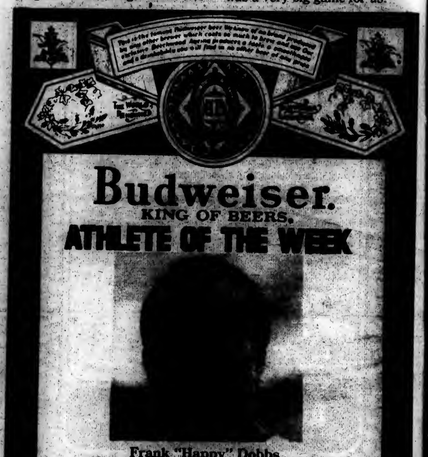
Andrea Burton, a senior guard, hit four from the charity strip in the last 43 seconds of the contest to ensure Villanova's victory, the 13th of the season.

Pennefather led all scorers with 20 points, and she hauled down 20 rebounds, a career and game high.

But the game with Cheyney State was just plain ugly.

The nationally ranked Lady Wolves (number 12) stunned the Wildcats, 96-55. The loss was Villanova's fifth of the year.

Pennefather and Katrina Messenger, a sophomore forward, were high scorers for Villanova, with ten each, while seven Cheyney players scored in double figures.



Frank "Happy" Dobbs

Senior co-captain Frank "Happy" Dobbs, for his outstanding play in helping to lead the men's basketball to victories in six out of the last seven games, has been named Budweiser Athlete of the Week.

Dobbs has been instrumental in his team's success. He has sparked the offense with his excellent outside shooting, opening up Villanova's potent inside shooting game. Dobbs has made his presen ce felt both on and off the court as a leader and a real motivator of the team.

Teammate Gary McLain commented: "He's been a total emotional and very apparent lift to the team as far as leadership is concerned. He works very hard and I hope that he continues to play as well as he has."

On the court, Dobbs has manifested his scoring potential by averaging 15.7 percent points per game against Villanova's last three opponents: Providence, Connecticut, and Arkansas. He shot superbly from both the floor and the line hitting 60.8 percent and 86.4 percent respectively. A strong rebounder because of his size and aggressiveness, Dobbs pulled down 3.3 rebounds per game along with five assists.

Dobbs' performance has made an impact on the team's total performance. "By our making the outside shots more, this helps to open up the middle so we can get the ball to Ed (Pinckney) and Harold (Pressley)," commented assistant head coach Mitch Buonaguro. "He's really helped our offense."

Dobbs himself said that "Personally, I knew that I had to assert myself more and that the rest of the team had to assert themselves too."

The Cats have certainly done that as they have pulled their record up to 9-8 and are looking ahead to the future.

"I think that the team has a lot of confidence now and we feel that things are finally coming together. Things are looking brighter for us and we are looking forward to playing these next few games."

Coach Buonaguro has nothing but praise for Dobbs. "I think we began this season in need of a leader and I think that Frank has taken that role. He's been showing tremendous leadership in the last eight or nine games. He is the ideal student-athlete and he is a great credit to Villanova." ROGER VAN ALLEN

AAUP Reviews Rank and Tenure

By AMELIA McGOVERN

The University procedure for rank and tenure of faculty members was the topic of discussion at the Feb. 2 meeting of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP).

Dr. Joseph Betz of the philosophy department, president of the Villanova chapter of the AAUP, chaired the 90-minute meeting.

A four-person panel, including Dr. Bernard Reilly, history professor and senior member of the Rank and Tenure Committee; Dr. Francis Gerrity, senior member of the Rank and Tenure Committee at St. Joseph's University; Dr. Jonathan Knight of the AAUP's Washington office; and the Rev. Lawrence Gallen, O.S.A., ex officio chairman of the Rank and Tenure Committee, was present to first explain rank and tenure procedures, then to answer questions.

Reilly spoke first, giving the faculty members present a clear idea of how the Rank and Tenure Committee is chosen and run.

Reilly explained that the committee is made up of 12 members. Six of these are faculty members, full-time professors who are not the chairpersons of their departments.

The faculty members who serve on the rank and tenure committee are elected by full-time professors who have been at the University for at least two years, according to Reilly.

The other six members of the committee are made up of the academic deans of each college in the University: Arts and Sciences, Commerce and Finance, Engineering, Nursing, University College and the Graduate School.

Gallen noted, "If the vote concerns someone in the humanities, Fr. O'Malley (dean of Arts and Sciences) will vote and if it concerns someone in the sciences, Dr. Markham will vote. Either will vote, but at no time will both vote."

Gallen votes only in the case of a tie.

Reilly continued by explaining the ordinary business of the committee. "There are two sets of meetings: those held in the fall for deciding promotions and those in the spring for voting for or against tenure."

Reilly estimated from past experience that about 25 people are recommended for promotion each fall and 15-18 are considered for tenure each spring.

Stressing that when deciding promotion and tenure, the committee does not decide on its own criteria, but that of the University. Reilly continued, "The University has an official set of standards promulgated by the Board of Trustees and the president of the University. The committee tries to apply these in individual circumstances. Inevitably we have to apply these rules to each individual case.

Dr. Joseph Betz, president of the Villanova chapter of the AAUP.

"What the committee decides in either case, promotion or tenure, is limited, " Reilly said. "About 60-65 percent of the decisions are effectively made before the decision comes before the rank and tenure committee.

"Your colleagues decide in the department, your chairmen decide and your deans decide — each are separate recommendations

"My experience, which has been five years, is that it is an extreme rarity that if your department members, chairman and dean all recommend you, that the rank and tenure committee rejects you," Reilly said.

"Of the recommendations that reach us, ordinarily 60-65 percent have that kind of unanimity to them.

"The committee makes an independent decision except when there is a division in the recommendations. This is when the committee really gets involved, " stated Reilly. "This is rare. When recommendations are not firmly grounded in University policy, we look at it closely."

Reilly summed up his presentation by saying that "the record of the committee is good. The president has reversed us outright. But mainly, presidential consideration is only brought about when the committee is substantially divided, for example, a seven to five vote."

Gerrity, from St. Joseph's University, spoke next. He compared St. Joseph's rank and tenure procdure to Villanova's procedure. The main difference is at St. Joseph's there are no deans acting on the committee. There are only faculty members — the peers of

Academic Committees Enforce Standards

By GARY R. DYER

In January the University's six academic standing committees asked a total of 141 students to transfer out of their various colleges, according to figures submitted to Villanova's Academic Affairs office.

The Colleges of Commerce and Finance, Nursing, Engineering and University College each have one academic standing committee, while the College of Arts and Sciences has two, one for arts students and one for science students.

A student must have a cumulative quality-point average of 2.00 to graduate, and the students who fall below this average are subject to academic probation or dismissal from their college.

No academic standing committee dismisses a student from the University; the student can only be asked to leave the particular college. The dismissed student can then apply to one of the other colleges.

Students on academic probation are limited to four courses and are barred from extracurricular activities.

According to the University bulletin, those students subject to dismissal are freshmen with quality-point averages below 1.60, sophomores below 1.80, juniors below 1.95, and seniors below 2.00. Any student below 2.00 can be subject to probation or dismissal.

Although the University bulletin lists specific guidelines for these actions that the academic standing committees can use, the actual evaluative process is more complex.

The College of Engineering makes up lists of all engineering students whose cumulative quality-point averages fall below 2.00, according to Dr. Robert D. Lynch, dean of the College of Engineering. Each student's academic record is then examined by Engineering's Academic Standing Committee, consisting of the dean and the four department chairpersons.

Every student whose cumulative average falls below 2.00 either goes on probation or is asked to leave the college. The committee meets and decides how to handle each student.

Letters are sent to affected students. Letters announcing dismissal inform the student that he can appeal the decision. Appeals, in writing, must be received by the dean's office the Thursday before classes start.

"If there's some reason for the poor performance — family problems, sickness, emotional problems, social problems — can affect academic performance," explained Lynch.

"We expect that if there are certain circumstances to be considered they will present them in the appeal," Lynch said. "We do have a lot of experience in engineering education, and we don't want any young person to waste his time and money trying to pursue a goal that cannot be realized."

Dr. Robert D. Lynch, dean of engineering.

The College of Engineering sends out both letters and mailgrams to students who have been dismissed, to ensure that they can appeal within the prescribed week.

If the appeal is granted, the committee will set a target quality-point average which the student must attain "in the courses we tell you to take," according to Lynch.

Engineering's Academic Standing Committee meets on the Friday after appeals are due, and the letters with their decisions go out that day.

Probation cannot be appealed. The committee also studies the records of students who were put on academic probation the semester before. They are removed from probation if their averages have risen above 2.00, but if they stay below 2.00 they will be looked at very closely before being given another chance.

"If we are to continue someone on probation and not dismiss them, we have to know why we're doing it," Lynch explained. "If it's a declining performance in key courses, we would say to the student that we really believe that he ought to get out."

The courses in which poor grades are received are a factor in all academic standing committee decisions. "In engineering, one thing we look at is how performance in technical courses is," Lynch commented. "We think, for example, that for freshmen, success in math and science is very important for ultimate success in engineering."

This year there were 118 students in the College of Engineering with quality-point averages below 2.00. Of these, 56 were put on probation and 62 were asked to leave. Twenty three of those dismissed appealed the original decision, and 18 of them were granted probation instead of dismissal. Nine students were removed from probation. There are now 74 students on academic pro-

Lecture

Talks of the Times Lecture Series presents a lecture by Dr. Benedict A. Paparella on the "Use of Sex in Advertising." The talk will be held on Feb. 15 at 2:30 p.m. in the West Lounge of Dougherty.

Pre-Law Society

Attention all members. Important meeting at 12:45 on Feb. 16, West Lounge Dougherty. Special guest: Alan Freedman of the National Testing Services will discuss new LSAT format and law school options.

WKVU Radio

Anyone who is interested in promotion and wants to get in on Villanova's new radio experience should stop by the WKVU offices on the second floor of Dougherty Hall. Stop by and ask for Pat Reilly.

Upcoming Films

The Cultural Film Series' next two presentations will be a film version of Casanova's memoirs and an acclaimed documentary. Fellini's Casanova, by Italian director Federico Fellini, will be shown on Feb. 12 at 3:30 p.m. and 7 p.m. and on Feb. 13 at 7 p.m. in the Connelly Center Cinema. Following the Sunday night showing, Dr. Judith Switzer will lead a discussion entitled, "The Eternal Pursuit."

The Sorrow and the Pity, a documentary covering the German occupation of France during World War II, will be shown Feb. 15 at 7 p.m. in the Cinema.

Tickets for students, staff and faculty are $1.50 for all showings.

Wine and Cheese Party

The Rosemont/Villanova Siena Program will hold a wine and cheese party on Feb. 9 at 4 p.m. in the Radnor Room of the Connelly Center. All interested students are invited to attend.

Villanovans for Life

Villanovans for Life would like to thank all those who participated in the Blood Drive we sponsored Feb. 1-3. Thanks for the Gift of Life!

Communication Arts Society

Attention all members! The speaker scheduled for Feb. 15 has been rescheduled to Feb. 22, 8 p.m. in the Haverford Room. Diane Bones from Gray and Rogers will speak on Public Relations.

St. Augustine Lecture

The annual St. Augustine Lecture will be sponsored by Villanova University and given by Professor Robert A. Markus from the University of Nottingham. The topic of the lecture is conversion and disenchantment in Augustine's Spiritual Career. The lecture will be held in West Lounge, Dougherty Hall. The public is invited.

Yearbooks on Sale

Your last chance to buy this year's Belle Air will be Feb. 15, 16, 17. They will be sold in the Connelly Center lobby between 11 a.m. and 11:30 a.m. The price of this year's yearbook is now $20.00.

Engineering Career Conference

All engineers are encouraged to come to the 15th Annual Engineering Career Conference sponsored by the Dean of Engineering and E.J.C. on Feb. 23.

Session I Career — Options Lecture: 1:30 p.m. Freshman Session and 2:30 p.m. Career Lectures by Major

All Session I events will be held in Dougherty Hall or the Connelly Center. Attendance at the Session is FREE.

Session II Distinguished Public Lecturer Dinner: 5 p.m. Dinner Starts.

Tickets for Session II are $7 and may be purchased from your EJC Rep or at the EJC and Dean of Engineering Offices.

Math Competition

All those interested in helping staff a high school math contest on Feb. 18, PLEASE come to our next meeting. It will be held Feb. 14 at 12:45 p.m. in the Dalton Room of Falvey Library. No knowledge of math is required.

Pre-Health Professionals

Alpha Epsilon Delta, the Pre-Medical Honor Society, is currently accepting applications. Interested sophomores, juniors and seniors with an overall GPA of 3.3 should pick up an application in the AED box in the Biology Office, Mendel 115.

Volleyball Club

The Villanova Volleyball Club will have a practice Feb. 11 at 11 a.m. in Alumni Gym. All old members should attend the practice. New members are welcome.

Balloon Day

There will be a meeting for everyone interested in working on this year's Balloon Day on Feb. 16 at 6 p.m. in St. Rita's Chapel. Balloon Day is a Spring Festival which raises money for the homeless of Philadelphia. Everyone is welcome!

Summer Activities Jobs

Applications are currently available for three Summer Activities positions. Responsibilities include planning, supervising and evaluating activities for Summer Session. Applicants must have programming experience, administrative abilities and the ability to work with groups. The period of employment is May 21-Aug. 10, 1984. Summer activities staff will receive $1650 plus room and board on campus. Applications are available in the Villanova Union office, the Connelly Center and the Student Activities office. Deadline for applications is Feb. 17.

Calendars

The Men at Villanova Calendars are now on sale at the front counter in Connelly Center. Due to the limited supply they will be sold on a first come first serve basis.

Spring Conference

The spring conference of the Delaware Valley Writing Council, cosponsored by Villanova University's English Department, will be on "The Written Word and the Word Processor" and will take place Feb. 25, from 8:30-4:30 p.m. in the Connelly Center Panels, individual talks and presentation will include:

1. the experience of colleges and universities like Clarkson and Drexel who have mandated the purchase of personal computers for all their students.
2. the availability of computer aided programs related to the writing process and their usefulness,
3. the opportunities elementary through university faculty can envision for themselves, their students and their schools with computer-aided instruction,
4. the applicable uses word processing might have inside and outside the English classroom and across the curriculum,
5. the specific use of computers by faculty and students for their scholarly, creative, and administrative work.

For registration forms and further information, please contact Thomas Martines, director of Freshman English, at 645-4645.

Christian Perspective

Anyone interested in writing articles on various topics within a Christian perspective, please see John in Campus Ministry.

Leisure Courses

The opportunity is yours! Take a "Leisure Course" this semester. Leisure Courses, a committee of the Villanova Union, encourages you to participate in a self-growth experience. Register for the "mini-courses" on Feb. 8, 9, 10 in the North Lounge of Dougherty Hall or Connelly Center from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Choose from Aerobics, Yoga, Ballroom Dancing, Acting, Harmonica Lessons, Roller Skating, Hypnosis, Woodcarving, Lifesaving, Painting, Tai Chi Movement and much more.

We are always open to new ideas and new instructors so don't hesitate to contact us at 645-7280 in the Union office. See you at registration!

Thatcherism and Reaganomics

Mr. Fergus Montgomery, M.P., a noted member of the conservative party in the British House of Commons, will be on campus Feb. 15. He will present a major address at 4:30 p.m. in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall. The topic is "Thatcherism and Reaganomics: A comparison of Economic and Political Processes."

Mr. Montgomery has been a member of Parliament for more than 20 years. In 1973 he was appointed Parliamentary Private Secretary to Mrs. Margaret Thatcher when she was Secretary of State for Education and Science. After Mrs. Thatcher became leader of the opposition, Mr. Montgomery was her PPS till January 1976.

Mr. Montgomery has been a member of the Select Committee on Environment and the House of Commons Services Committee since 1979. He is now a member of the Select Committee on Home Affairs.

The address is sponsored by the Department of Economics and the College of Commerce and Finance.

Amateur Radio Club

The Amateur Radio Club will be holding an organizational meeting on Feb. 12 at 7:30 p.m. in the Haverford Room. New members are encouraged to attend.

Computer Society

Wanted: Motivated students to help organize or merely join a computer science society. Do you believe that an organization is needed on campus to unite computer science students, provide tutorial programs, provide guest speakers and information on job opportunities and graduate school, give the students a voice and organize social gatherings? If any of these prospects appeal to you, your input and ideas will be greatly appreciated at a meeting to be announced in the FYI section of next week's Villanovan. Take an active role in getting the organization started, or just come to display your interest. Computer science kmajors and non-majors are invited. For more information, contact Steve Johnson (525-9151) or Terrence Fitzpatrick (525-9351).

Students Assaulted by 'Cabbie'

By VINCE RAIMONDI

Seven Villanova students were apparently assaulted Jan. 20 in an Upper Darby gas station by twelve unidentified men.

According to one of the students, the group, stranded in West Philadelphia, accepted a ride from a man claiming to be an off-duty cab driver. This eventually led to an altercation in which two students were injured.

At 6:30 p.m. that evening, Joe Cavallaro, Dean Cullen, Dennis Flynn, John Kirkwood, Don Otterbein, Tad O'Karma and John Mullar, all Villanova students, left for Smokey Joe's via the Norristown Regional High Speed Line.

Later, intending to meet at the 69th Street Station to take the 1:08 a.m. train to Villanova, the students missed the train by two minutes.

They were offered a ride to Villanova from an "off-duty cab driver" for $15, which they accepted.

Three or four miles out of Philadelphia, the driver pulled into an A.M. P.M. gas station on West Chester Pike in Upper Darby and said it would cost them more money as he needed more gas, said one student.

After the students got out of the car, the two parties argued back and forth over the original $15 and the request for more money, according to a student involved in the incident.

At that point, a gas station attendant reportedly approached the driver and said to him, "You're on your own."

In the view of one of the students involved, this statement indicated that the two men knew one another and that similar incidents had occurred at this gas station before.

The driver then said he would "call some friends." Less than five minutes later, several men arrived, and a fight ensued.

Flynn suffered an injury to his jaw, while Kirkwood's leg was injured.

O'Karma and Otterbein were able to flag down an oncoming motorist, who in turn pointed to a policeman.

"We started walking toward the police," Otterbein stated, "but they kept going."

After the confrontation ended, at 1:15 a.m., the group met a few blocks down West Chester Pike and went to a Dunkin' Donuts to call the police.

Upon arrival, Officers Massi and Seng said, "We saw you; we thought you were just fooling around." The officers assisted the students in obtaining a ride back to campus with a real cab.

Course Overloads To Cost Students

By JOHN M. BURGESS

Villanova University will begin charging students for taking course overloads next semester, a policy which was proposed by the Rev. Lawrence Gallen, O.S.A., vice president for Academic Affairs.

Gallen proposed this to the Council of Deans because of a "serious problem with too many people cheating the system."

Dr. Alvin Clay, dean of Commerce and Finance, said "students, instead of taking courses for their enrichment, overload their first two or three years only because they have the opportunity to do so, at no extra cost." These students, administrators noted, either graduate in three and one-half years or transfer into University College and take courses at a much cheaper rate to complete their education.

It is a major problem for the Colleges of Commerce and Finance and Arts and Sciences because neither of their programs is as structured as the other schools, thereby allowing the student to take a wider variety of courses for credit, according to Clay.

Due to grade inflation the average student at Villanova has almost a "B" average, thus qualifying to take overload courses, explained Clay.

He continued that new sections must be opened up for these courses and new teachers must be hired at extra expense to the University.

In fairness to all students a fee will be charged at a per-credit rate to the student who takes the overload course. The Rev. John P. O'Malley, O.S.A., dean of Arts and Sciences, said, "The amount has not been discussed and the figure is up to the budget committee."

Gallen estimated that the cost of the overload courses probably would be in line with the cost of a course in the University College at a per credit rate.

The old requirement of having to have a quality point average of 3.0 or better in order to take an overload course will be changed to a 3.5 to get only motivated students taking overload courses. However, it will still be necessary to have permission granted in order to take an overload course.

The new policy eliminates the system of charging the same tuition for those taking a normal course load and those taking an overload.

Committee's Standards

bation in a college with approximately 1,150 students.

"That bad Q.P.A. could have been the result of poor performance in science or mathematics," Lynch said. "That doesn't say that the person couldn't be a very fine arts major."

The committee of the College of Engineering meets twice after each of the fall, spring and summer terms.

The academic standing committee for arts works from a list of all arts students with quality point averages below 2.00, but not all people who fall below that mark receive probation or dismissal. "The committee has the discretion to put them on probation, to dismiss, to send a letter of concern, or to do nothing," explains the Rev. John O'Malley, O.S.A., dean of the College.

"Suppose we get a first semester freshman who has a 1.9 something, and his grades are only down in one area. The committee may say that that looks like an aberration. We wouldn't take any official action."

While the College of Engineering committee looks at only cumulative grade averages, the arts committee also considers those students who have had a low semester average.

"A good Q.P.A. with a bad semester will get us concerned," commented O'Malley. "We would want to know what's going on."

"Generally, we put people on probation the first time around, commented O'Malley. "Then the next time subject to dismissal with the right to appeal." The committee re-convenes to consider the written appeal.

If the appeal is granted and the student comes up again for academic underachievement the student is dismissed without the right to appeal, according to O'Malley.

After the fall semester 33 students were dropped by arts. The science division of the College of Arts and Sciences dropped 38 students. The College of Nursing dismissed 10, while Commerce and Finance dropped five and University College asked 11 to leave.

Trustees' Committee Discusses Visitation

By GARY R. DYER

On Jan. 31 Residence Life sponsored a presentation on the current visitation policy for the Board of Trustees' Committee on Student Life, at the request of Dr. Eugene Barr, a trustee and the chairman of the committee.

Two representatives from Residence Life, three students and three resident assistants addressed the committee, giving different perspectives on the current situation.

"It was not a place where decisions would be made," said Dr. Richard Neville, vice president for student life. "I arranged for staff and students to come in and make a presentation about the student perception of the current visitation policy, the difficulties it has, as well as the advantages."

The committee meets three or four times each year, and is the Board of Trustees' medium of access to student issues.

Janice F. Mauk and Tara A. Austin from Residence Life presented the results of the recent Residence Life survey to the Board.

Then three students chosen at random — Sarah Belson, Tom Schopper and Maria Fozzio — gave some of the effects of the current policy, including low morale and the difficulty in finding places for male and female students to study together.

Resident assistants Pamela Zurkowski, Ford Trojanowski and Dorrie Brzenk spoke next.

"We gave issues that are concerned with the visitation policy here, approaching it from a staff viewpoint, because we're the people who have to enforce the policy," said Zurkowski.

"We told them that we do enforce visitation as it is," said Zurkowzki, "so they couldn't say, 'Why change it? It isn't being enforced now.' "

"We were invited to do this Friday," Zurkowski explained. "We got together then and talked about what we wanted to do."

"It was a really dynamite presentation," commented Patrick Leahy, student body president and ex officio member of the committee. "It showed an overwhelming need for a change in visitation.

"In the last survey from Residence Life 84 percent of the students said that one of the big needs around here is a change in visitation," Leahy explained.

Dr. Richard Neville, vice president for student life.

"The three o'clock in the afternoon boundary is a hindrance to many students who would like to go and study with someone of the opposite sex," Leahy said. "Most people are out of bed and showered and have gone to one or two classes by twelve o'clock. So I thought, as well as the people on the committee, that twelve o'clock would be a reasonable hour.

"And that goes with later into the night, too," Leahy continued. "Eleven o'clock — the library's open until twelve; don't you think visitation should be until twelve o'clock?"

The members of the committee are Barr, Dr. Jasper Chen See, the Rev. David Duffy, O.S.A., and the Rev. William Krupa, O.S.A., from the Board of Trustees; Kathryn D. Bolger, assistant professor of nursing, and Daniel Regan, assistant professor of philosophy, representing the faculty; the Rev. John Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, and Neville; Robert J. Arrix and Richard Naclerio from the University's Development Council; and Mary Beth Bogan and Leahy from the student body.

"I hope that sometime down the road visitation will be changed," Leahy said.

"In the foreseeable future there will not be an open visitation policy at Villanova," Neville commented last week. In a co-ed dorm you cannot control male visitors coming in to see male students. "There will not be open visitation, mainly for security reasons."

"Visitation is a problem everywhere, but I know schools that are worse off than we are," said one resident assistant. "I think everybody would like an extension of visitation policy."

"I know there are times when I find the current visitation policy inconvenient," said the resident assistant. "Many times I have my girlfriend over and it's suddenly a little past eleven and we want to study together. I'm an employee of Residence Life and I enforce the rules, but there are some things I think should be changed, based on what I see going on."

There was no intervisitation at Villanova from the introduction of female residence halls in 1968 until 1975.

How Fire Awareness Works Elsewhere

By JAMES H. DELORENZO

"A concerted effort by the students and administration" in fire awareness would be one improvement the University could make, according to a Villanova employee.

"I would prefer to see students get more involved in fire prevention," said Ed Meagher, Maintenance department supervisor.

One local college that does involve its students in such a program is Bryn Mawr College.

"The resident assistants in each dormitory also serve as fire captains for that hall," explained Vince DeCerchio, Bryn Mawr's director of security. "Faculty members are also selected in each administrative and classroom building as responsible for the fire safety of that building.

"It's their responsibility to check the equipment monthly, to ensure it is functioning properly. They post evacuation plans, meet with occupants of the building and brief each one on their responsibility, and make sure everyone knows where the exits, fire extinguishers and alarms are," DeCerchio stated.

DeCerchio has been security director for four years, "and this program was in effect before I got here," he said.

DeCerchio meets frequently with his "fire wardens," and each submits a report directly to him each month. "We also try to schedule fire drills each month in every building, and have them twice a semester in the classroom and administration buildings, too."

Vandalism is a small problem for DeCerchio and Bryn Mawr. "Out of all residence halls, we may have three or four cases every few months."

"The system works well here," DeCerchio noted. "We try to improve on it constantly. It's a form of community education, a way to apprise the students and staff of our requirements."

DeCerchio "definitely recommends" Bryn Mawr's fire warden program. "All the faculty, staff and students here contribute," said DeCerchio.

Visitation Change Is Not the Answer

For most on-campus residents, any change in the current visitation policy would come as a sound move on the Administration's part. If the Jan. 31 meeting between the Board of Trustees' Committee on Student Life and several student representatives is any indication, University officials seem open to suggestions on this topic. However, any concessions which the Administration might eventually make will not resolve the more significant problem at hand.

The Jan. 31 presentation, sponsored by Villanova's Residence Life office, offered students a chance to express their concerns over the current policy. Most in attendance noted that the present visitation hours, especially the 3 p.m. to 11 p.m. weekday shift, are largely unacceptable to most on-campus students.

As Patrick Leahy, an ex-officio committee member pointed out to this paper, "In the last survey from Residence Life 84 percent of the students said that one of the big needs around here is a change in visitation."

According to a resident assistant not present at the presentation, "I'm an employee of Residence Life and I enforce the rules, but there are some things I think should be changed, based on what I see going on."

The Board's committee, of which several Trustees, faculty, administrators and students are members, listened to the presentations but did not make any final decisions, for that is not its role. What the committee might serve as is a pathway toward an eventual solution to the issue.

Yet, whatever the University finally concludes on visitation, no matter what hours they might tack on to the policy, they will not be solving the real matter here.

The question is simply one of trust — a trust supposedly imparted by adults to adults. But that does not appear to be happening at this University. The administration will not accept the idea of open visitation, nor, as we saw so clearly last week, will it consider a co-ed dorm option. These are the considerations which lie at the bottom of this situation, but they have been virtually ignored.

We thank the Board's committee and all others who are working towards a modification of the visitation hours. However, they should also realize that the answer is not as simple as changing a few hours here and there. That only touches the surface.

Laser's Misuse

Forget all that talk about a Star Wars scenario for the future. Thanks to the Pentagon, the galactic wars of tomorrow may well be staged right here on the soil of our very own earth, in just a few short years.

According to a Chicago Tribune report in the Inquirer a couple of weeks ago, the latest gem of our defense strategists is a laser weapon designed to inflict permanent blindness on enemy soldiers. The laser, affectionately called the C-CLAW (Close Combat Laser Assault Weapon), presently rests in the planning stages, but the Pentagon is contributing a reported $20 million toward its continued development.

The laser, mind you, does not kill; its sole purpose is to blind, and it does so by rupturing the ocular veins, thus causing a flooding of the entire eyeball with blood. As the Tribune article further noted, hundreds of enemy soldiers could be blinded in one spree, without them even being aware of an attack. It sure beats the ambush.

Apparently, several defense officials have already expressed their concerns over the new weapon. Some are morally opposed, while others fear a possible backfire of the device on U.S. troops during battle. Whatever the arguments, they have seemingly gone unheeded.

Lasers do not necessarily have to be used only as tools of destruction. "Similar laser beams . . . are commonly used under controlled conditions for eye surgery and other benign procedures," the Trib reported. In the latest instance, though, the results will be anything but kind. The Pentagon has made sure of that.

Letters to the Editor

Booing Doesn't Help Team

To the Editor:

Your "On Campus" question in the Feb. 3 issue of the Villanovan was a legitimate one, yet some of the responses disturbed me. It is these responses that I wish to comment on.

In no way does "a little booing" encourage a team's performance. In fact, it does quite the opposite. There is no need for a basketball team if the students do not rally behind it. Even if a team "mutates," as one student stated, they are still our team.

I personally feel fortunate to have seen the Wildcats perform so well over the past few years. And when they lose a game, I do not feel cheated. Every player has his off games, and it is not our right to boo them, but rather our responsibility to help them by cheering.

As president of the Wildcat Basketball Club, I feel extremely embarrassed by those students in the club who stooped down to such a level. Although I cannot control the actions of over 1400 members, it is partly my job to try and fire up the students and thus aid in motivating our Wildcats in a positive fashion. Please let it be known that an apology letter was sent to Coach Massimino and the Wildcats on behalf of the Basketball Club.

One final note: the recent issue of Eastern Basketball magazine carried an editorial referring to "the idiot who threw a banana peel on the floor at the Palestra in Philadelphia last season as Georgetown's Pat Ewing was being introduced" as just some of the "irrational abuse hometown fans heap on visitors." The editorial is bad and unnecessary press for Villanova. The Wildcats have already beaten Georgetown at the Capital Center on Jan. 12. I am confident they can do it again next Wednesday at the Spectrum. The win will have more meaning if our fans contribute in a positive way.

My officers and I have planned a great deal for this game, and we are prepared to keep things under control. We are also prepared to celebrate a fine victory for Villanova.

Chang

To the Editor:

I strongly object to the decision reached by the Dean's Advisory Committee to reject Chang. Dr. Chang is a personal friend of mine and I feel his credentials are more than adequate proof of his competency to fulfill the responsibilities of the position for which he was being considered.

As chairman of Give Opportunities to Obsolete Kamikaze Soldiers (GOOKS), I feel Dr. Chang's outstanding military record speaks for itself. As the pilot of several successful kamikaze missions during World War II, Dr. Chang is held in the highest esteem by his countrymen, though a small majority of detractors question his dedication to his cause.

I sincerely hope Fr. Stack and his advisory committee will reconsider Dr. Chang's record and ap-

Coach Massimino and the Villanova Basketball Team:

On behalf of the Wildcat Basketball Club, I would like to formally apologize for the outrageous behavior of certain individuals sitting in the student section at the Providence-Villanova game on Tuesday evening.

It was unfortunate that some members of the club and the band took such rude action toward the Wildcats. The incident was an embarrassment to me and in no way does it reflect the opinion of over 1400 members of the Basketball Club. We are supporting the team one hundred percent, accepting the losses as well as the wins. I only wish I could have silenced those individuals before it was received at courtside.

The fact that the Wildcats came back to win in the second half is proof that our team is built on true sportsmanship, playing the game as best they can. It makes the Basketball Club and myself proud to know you are doing your best under any circumstances.

Again, please accept my apologies and congratulations on a well deserved win. We will be with you ALL THE WAY in Connecticut.

Respectfully yours,

Memories Live After 20 Years

As everyone knows by now, this week marked the twentieth anniversary of The Beatles' arrival in the United States. To commemorate the occasion, radio stations have been playing Beatles' songs all week, with such stations as WYSP playing all their songs A-Z; Life magazine featured them on its cover; just about every major newspaper in the country has run some sort of story on them; and their movies have been playing in theatres and on TV.

Why such a big fuss over a band which has not made a record together since 1969? The answer is obvious; The Beatles re-shaped the way we thought, how we looked and how we approached life.

Their immense popularity put them in the public's eye. There were the appearances on "The Ed Sullivan Show," the many press conferences and the screaming fans who followed them wherever they went. The difference between The Beatles and other bands was the way they acted in the spotlight.

The Beatles were virtually the first band to bring politics and social issues into their songs. They were the first musicians to publicly offer their views on the state of the world, and many people listened, regardless of whether or not they agreed.

"Nowhere Man" and "Eleanor Rigby" told stories of people who were out of touch with life and reality. "Taxman" looked at the greed of tax collectors.

Then in 1967, "Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band" came out, and the music industry was never the same. Albums became more important than singles, album covers became expensive works of art and more care and time went into recording sessions.

"Sgt. Pepper" was — and still is — a landmark album, not only for the aforementioned reasons, but also because of the drug messages it contained. The Beatles advocated the legalization of marijuana; a thriving row of pot plants is on the cover of "Sgt. Pepper." The song "A Day in the Life" was banned by many radio stations because of its implied drug messages.

The Beatles introduced us to long hair and also gave us the courage to be non-conformists. They influenced many other bands, who in turn were at the forefront of the peace and anti-government movements of the late 1960s. Many musicians today credit The Beatles for getting them interested in music.

John Lennon used to wonder whatever happened to "the 12-year-old kids who used to stand at the front of the stage and watch us the whole night" when The Beatles played at the Cavern Club and other small places in their early days.

One hundred years from now, the music of many popular artists of today will be forgotten, and music students will read about rock and roll much the same way we learn about classical music: only a few artist/composers will be mentioned, and only a handful of songs will be played. One thing is certain, though: the lives and music of John Lennon, Paul McCartney, George Harrison, and Ringo Starr will be included, not only in music textbooks, but also in history textbooks.

Cost for Snow Removal

By MICHAEL D. MANNO

University administrators this week clarified the costs and procedures in dealing with heavy snow. Thomas Trucks, director of maintenance, said, "We've spent in the area of $50,000 to $55,000 so far this year."

"The snow removal budget depends on how much snow we think we are going to have," Trucks said. "Once I know this, I work a figure into the total budget for grounds maintenance. This year the budget for snow removal is between $50,000 and $75,000.

"Villanova ground crews clear all campus roads and walkways, but the law school, FieldHouse, and main parking lots are contracted to outside firms because we don't have enough equipment to do the job. About $20,000 has been spent this year to bring outside firms in for snow removal," said Trucks.

"In the event that snow begins to fall after ground crews have gone home, we do have a call-in system," Trucks explained. "We usually wait until one to one-and-a-half inches are on the ground before we call people in."

According to the Rev. Lawrence Gallen, O.S.A., vice president for academic affairs, "Two of the main considerations when deciding whether or not to close school are the conditions of the parking lots and the roads leading to Villanova.

Snow removal around campus.

"There is no maximum [number of school days which can be cancelled]," explained Gallen. "We try not to close school at all. Last year, when school was cancelled for two days, one of them was made up on a reading day at the end of the semester."

Gallen and the Rev. Patrick J. Rice, O.S.A., vice president for administration, jointly decide on closing the full-time undergraduate colleges, while the deans of University College, the School of Law and the Graduate School decide whether their individual schools will be in session.

Special Olympics Chairman Named

By AMELIA McGOVERN

On Feb. 2 the office of Student Activities announced its choice of junior Silvan Lutkewitte as chairman of the Special Olympics Committee for 1984.

Special Olympics, a weekend of events for handicapped children, will be held at Villanova, Oct. 19-21, 1984.

"This involves more than one weekend," Lutkewitte explained. "We are starting right now on Special Olympics for next year. We're looking for sponsors to put up the money. We have to rent hotel rooms and plan meals, etc."

The Special Olympic weekend will open with a Hawaiian luau on Friday night. On Saturday Villanova will host the Special Olympics Pennsylvania Soccer Tournament, and on Sunday there will be a marathon.

"I am excited about this. Before this time I've been involved in self-centered activities, the kind of thing to write on my resume, but with Special Olympics, so many people benefit," Lutkewitte commented. Lutkewitte is the managing editor of the Belle Air Yearbook and a member of the Inter-Fraternity Council.

"Right now I am accepting applications for the positions of vice chairpersons — there are two of these — and 14 games committee people," Lutkewitte said. "The quality of the applications I receive will determine the quality of the entire program." He is accepting applications until Feb. 17.

"Each chairperson will be in charge of seven games committees. There is a lot of responsibility. We need good people."

"I am very excited. On that Sunday, Oct. 21, when we put those kids back on the bus, we will see the culmination of a year's worth of work. It is a worthwhile cause with benefits for all involved."

Lutkewitte concluded, "the reward the kids receive is negligible compared to the reward those who work on Special Olympics committee get."

"The reward the kids receive is negligible compared to the reward those who work on Special Olympics get."

Black History Month Celebration Begins

By BANITA S. WILSON

Black History Month, a cultural celebration commemorating past and present achievements in Black history, began on Feb. 1. For years this celebration had been condensed into one week, but in the last fifteen to twenty years it has been expanded to include an entire month.

The Black Cultural Society (B C S) of Villanova has a full calendar of events planned in the observance of Black History Month. The theme for the annual awards luncheon held for the formal recognition of those outstanding black Villanova students and alumni is "Progress Through Political Awareness."

According to Kevin Murphy, moderator for the B S C, "Progress through political awareness is basically the theme for the entire year. This theme is accentuated by the candidacy of the Rev. Jesse Jackson for the presidency, and also by the successful mayoral elections of Harold Washington in Chicago and W. Wilson Goode in Philadelphia." He also cited accomplishments by Villanova alumnus, the Honorable Robert N.C. Nix, Pennsylvania State Supreme Court chief justice.

Among the events the B C S has scheduled are two dialogues addressing issues on the interactions between blacks and whites in everyday social encounters: a cultural film entitled "Black History: Lost, Stolen, Strangled," and a talent showcase of Black Cultural Society members and friends cabled Fun Night, an evening of entertainment and fun.

Other events include Black American Imagery, and an art exhibition on black perspectives, which will be opening tonight in the Connelly Center art gallery. Also scheduled is a "soul food" dinner, boasting such delicacies as fried chicken, corn-on-the-cob, potato salad and corn bread, in the resident dining halls.

The festivities concerning Black History Month are not only happening here at Villanova, but locally and all across the nation. Local radio stations in cooperation with various sponsors are using promotional time to highlight little known facts in black achievements. Cultural and historical events are also being held by many museums, churches, and social organizations throughout Philadelphia and the surrounding area.

Moderator Kevin Murphy summarized the feelings of many black Americans at this time by saying, "What we want to do is to introduce a high level of achieving blacks in America and to show our individuality and culture to the Villanova community."

"We want to . . . show our individuality and culture to the Villanova community."

Rank and Tenure Explained

the people being evaluated.

"The AAUP agrees with this procedure," said Betz.

The next speaker, Knight, centered his remarks on tenure, "the greatest moment in an individual's career. When denied tenure, an individual seems to lose years and years of hard work. He may be unable to continue in his chosen field."

Betz pointed out that Knight stressed tenure, but at Villanova promotion is a more important issue because it affects more people. Betz estimated that at least 80-85 percent of the full-time faculty is tenured at Villanova. He said he regretted not explaining Villanova's situation beforehand to Knight.

Knight mentioned that "the perspective now is that it is far more difficult today to obtain tenure than it was 10 years ago. That is not true. There is a heightened sense of competition that makes it seem this way."

Gallen was the last to speak. He praised the Rank and Tenure Committee. "It is a strong-willed committee. They do their homework. They are to be trusted."

He continued, "The committee submits a statement of reasons for their decisions and this gives me a sense of the committee's ideas. I add my own remarks at the end. My comments can have an influence on the president."

Gallen said, "Some departments are good with recommendations, they explain their reasons. Some departments are not good because all their recommendations are good. In brief, we are a good, hard working, serious committee, we have to be, we are dealing with professional lives."

During the question and answer period, one faculty member pointed out to the panel and the faculty present that since 1977 the president has been appointing faculty to the Rank and Tenure Committee. She stressed that the faculty, as a whole, is unaware of this fact.

Gallen verified this and pointed out that since this policy of the president appointing members of the committee has been in effect, the president has never appointed a member for whom the faculty did not vote.

No one present clarified why the policy was changed in the first place.

Reilly concluded, "my firm conviction is that the biggest problem with both rank and tenure is that there is half done work by deans and colleagues in making recommendations. Sometimes they are simply fraudulent. The Rank and Tenure Committee can only work with what it gets."

The Rev. Lawrence Gallen, ex officio chairman of the Rank and Tenure Committee.

University Sponsors Special Award

Each year, the University sponsors the Mentzer Memorial Award, which is intended to honor one student who, from documented sources, seems to have contributed most to expanding opportunities for the underprivileged.

The Villanovan invites students to nominate those of their fellow students whom they know to have volunteered time and energy on a regular basis to such efforts as social action programs, orphanage programs and the like.

The purpose of the Mentzer Award is to give recognition to that individual whose generosity is matched by his anonymity. Nominations must be confined to Villanova students, and it is requested that some particulars about the individuals be given so that documentation of their efforts can be obtained. No interviews of candidates are conducted.

As to tangible benefits, the award exists in the form of a cash stipend, and individual and University mounted memorial plaques. In addition, the award is a source of reference credential of which the nominees can be rightly proud.

Nominations can be made to the Villanovan or to either Dr. James Murphy or Dr. Patrick Nolan of the English department.

Society Hosts Black/White Dialogue

By CHARLENE PARDOE

Imagine yourself being a part of a group of which you and some of your friends consist of less than two percent. There would probably be some advantages, some fear and some disadvantages. As the cliche goes, one should "dare to be different," yet when you are living in a country where your population is a minority, this would probably challenge the route one would take.

A way to remedy the situation, however, is by joining an organization where you can discuss your beliefs and ideas with others that are similar to yours. Such was the reason behind many of Villanova's clubs, such as the pre-law society, the ski club, the accounting society and the Black Cultural Society.

In order for all the students to "get to know one another better," however, the Black Cultural Society is going to host its second annual open discussion between black and white student on Feb. 14, from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. in the West Lounge of Dougherty.

"The 'Black and White Dialogue'," noted Pam Kinsey, vice president of the organization, "is designed for black and white students to get to know one another better." The format was created to promote a minimum of awkwardness. "At the beginning, we are going to take questions written on a piece of paper and then draw some from a hat. These questions will then be directed to a black student, if the question deals with something he experiences, or vice-versa, if the topic deals with a white student," Kinsey added.

Dr. Teresa Nance, assistant professor of communication arts and last year's adviser for the society, noted that it is "really a time so students can get together and collectively identify with each other."

Being part of Black History Month, in fact, the discussion sums up much of what the 29 days are about. Added Nance, "Part of Black History Month is to share those things that we know with the rest of the Villanova community, whether it's through music, art or discussion. My approach to it is that it's a good learning experience for everybody."

Last year's talk turned out successfully, noted both Nance and Kinsey. "Last year's went really well," said Kinsey. "Once it got started, there was a lot of participation between the people. I learned a lot about myself, too," she said. "I realized that I was just as unaware of some things that other black students felt as the white students were."

"What we are trying to do is show that we're individuals, and to be recognized as both an individual and a black individual," Kinsey said. "There are a lot of stereotypes we make about people, but some of them are wrong, and much of this, I think, is because of the fears in all of us.

Pam Kinsey, vice-president of the Black Cultural Society.

Many of these come about through fear of not knowing something, so instead of taking the step to get to know others, we just don't become involved," said Kinsey.

"A lot of people may be fearful and may have been turned off by the dialogue, but then again, that is caused by fear. Hopefully, though, this year's will be successful," she said.

Commenting on the society's success this far, Nance said that for the past four years it has been pretty strong. "This year is the year of our fourth annual banquet, and the resurrection seemed to come about when that first started," she said.

"Much of the idea for the dialogue came about two years ago from the students," commented Nance. "Some of them had roommates whom they got along really well with, but there were times when a question came up that they wanted to ask, but were not sure how to phrase it.

"What we're trying to do, then," she noted, "is to let people talk about issues that concern them as a person."

Seniors Celebrate 100 Days

By SUZANNE BRUSTMAN

Her left hand was stamped "Priority."

Her right hand was stamped "Air Mail." The green hospital-type I.D. bracelet on her right wrist was cleverly marked "100 Days 'Til Graduation." Her proof-of-21 and valid senior I.D. had been checked by four persons, including one police officer, and her ticket to the event had been checked for authenticity by one person and collected by another. She was cold, wet from waiting in line in the rain, semi-drunk from the pre-party she'd been to and annoyed at the minor interrogation she'd just walked through, but she was inside! She was, after all, merely a senior, and this was the 100 Days Party.

She searched the Covered Wagon Inn for a place to put her coat and purse. Upon discovering a full and unsupervised coat room, she, like many, hid her things in a corner. At this point, a much deserved drink was felt to be in order. Fortunately, lines and prices at the cash bars were reasonable. Alcohol was actually more easily attained than a much coveted table near the dance floor.

While socializing with friends, some dressed in punk and some dressed to kill, our token senior found herself swayed by the dance music. A dance partner and a trusted place to leave her drink were her new priorities. Most of her friends, drinks in hands, shared her eagerness to dance. "Wanna dance?" was often heard mutually in conversations. Hand-in-hand with her new dance partner, (so as not to be separated), she found her way to the dance floor and the first available space.

THE VILLANOVA UNION

PRESENTS

100 DAYS 'TIL GRADUATION

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1983
9:00pm - 1:00 am

$2.00

Valid Villanova Senior ID AND Proof of 21 REQUIRED....Open to Villanova University Seniors ONLY.

She joined the crowds who filled the floor to capacity and crooned out the words when the songs "Shout," "Fill Me Up, Buttercup," "Paradise By the Dashboard Light" and anything by Michael Jackson were played. She was bumped into, stepped on, knocked down and had her drink spilled on her, but she kept dancing.

As a diehard dancer, however, she and many others became frustrated with the DJs by the evening's end. Frequent skips in songs had become the norm, as had the repetition of current hits. Singers Michael Jackson, Cyndi Lauper and Jeffrey Osborne had received the most play time, while the slower songs had been few and far between. Our senior and her friends were particularly annoyed when, at 1 a.m., the last song was unannounced, a tactic which met general disfavor at 1:05 a.m. as the lights were turned on and the event was declared officially over.

For the 900-or-so hot, tired, and sweaty seniors who had attended, however, the party was not necessarily over. In the true senior spirit of things, plans were made to continue the countdown to graduation outside the doors of the Covered Wagon Inn. Some, while searching for coats, purses, roommates and friends, relished the thought of "after-parties." Others stayed and moved into the smaller bar of the restaurant. Still others talked of going to good ole Kelly's for last rounds.

Our token senior and her friends discussed their plans and their reactions to the event. En route to their cars, stepping over large puddles and crushed beer cans that had been emptied earlier while in the long entrance line, they agreed that the event had been enjoyable. Despite the constant I.D. checks ("May I see your bracelet, please?"), blunders by the D.J.s, an overcrowded dance floor and the usual long lines for the restrooms, the Class of 1984 had thrived.

Contestants Battle It Out For "Mr. Villanova"

By KORY SPRAUER

The room was filling rapidly as the students on a long line stretching to Campus Confections quickly took their seats to witness the traditional Mr. Villanova Contest, held at 8 p.m. this past Wednesday in the Villanova Room.

The gala occasion began with a greeting by another tradition, master of ceremonies, Jim Kaczynski. The six contestants participating were introduced in the following order: Erick Brunson, sponsored by the Black Cultural Society; James Lane, sponsored by the first floor of Austin Hall; Phil Villari, sponsored by the Kappa Alpha Theta sorority; Dennis Gruenke, sponsored by the 5-B Stanford Hall; Mitchell Harris of 1-B Stanford Hall; and last, but not least, Greg Noone, sponsored by the Sheehan and Sullivan Hall Councils.

The first event of this annual contest was the ever-popular swim suit competition, which proved a variety of physiques, unfortunately none of them good. Michael Jackson's "Billie Jean" was played while the guys showed their suits. Phil was set for the beach with a bottle of Coppertone in hand. But did he "leave" anything behind? James, better known as "Sslane," was dressed in a get-up similar to something Popeye might wear. Which way to Muscle Beach? This same question could be asked of Mitchell, who was something out of a dream; a nightmare.

In the second category, the contestants were judged on their talent. Erick's entertaining comedy act included imitations of Michael Jackson and Stevie Wonder. "Sslane" played guitar and sang, as did Mitchell a little later on. Jane Fonda never looked as good as Phil did in his pink leotard and matching tights. All I can say is it took a lot of heart to follow Jane's workout.

"Super Freak" was a wise choice of music for Dennis' display of "talent," for he truly appeared to be one. At this point, I felt the giant hook from "The Gong Show" was extremely necessary. Greg's comedy act was lacking at first, but much to my surprise, he redeemed himself near the end with humorous spoofs about Mr. Rogers and Bat Man.

The final chance the participants had to prove themselves worthy of the crown was in the interview category. My opinion of the responses to the questions is that they didn't help any of the contestants, but hurt most of them.

All in all, the contest was entertaining and highlighted by a rendition of "Memories" sung by Miss Villanova of 1983, Banita Wilson, which she received a standing ovation for.

Mitchell Harris' superb performance earned him the title of "Mr. Villanova of 1984." The contestant chosen as the first runner up was Erick Brunson, and the second runner up was Greg Noone.

The charge of $.25 at the door was well spent, and will be donated to the charity of Mitchell's choice, multiple sclerosis. When asked what his feelings were shortly after being crowned, Mitchell stated, "I feel I have just received the highest honor Villanova could offer me. Thank you."

Banita Wilson, last year's Miss Villanova, crowns Mitchell Harris, Mr. V.U. '84.

Summer Trip to Italy Offered

For the 13th consecutive year, Villanova is sponsoring a month-long trip and study program along with Rosemont College to Italy. For the month of June, students will live in the town of Siena and take courses in history, art history, Italian language and literature and studio art. Some of the cities to be visited will include Florence, Orvieto Assisi and some of the hilltop towns of Tuscany. There will be one day spent in Venice and two in Rome, where additional lectures and gallery tours will be conducted.

Dr. George Radan, chairman of the department of art and art history, is both an art historian and archaeologist. He will be teaching a course on art history in the Renaissance. Other faculty members from Villanova will include the Rev. Richard Cannuli, O.S.A. and the Rev. Thomas Johnston, O.S.A., both of whom will be teaching the studio art courses. Both are assistant professors in the university's art and art history department.

Those who will be teaching from Rosemont are: Dr. Richard Donagher, an associate professor of history and this year's director of the program, and Dr. Leda Gianuzzi-Jaworski, an assistant professor of Italian and the chairman of Italian studies. Donagher will be instructing a history course, and Gianuzzi-Jaworski will teach courses in Italian language and literature.

Donagher noted that students often feel excitement at "living and studying in Tuscany, where one is constantly confronted with the visual evidence of the epoch transition from the Middle Ages to the Renaissance.

"The larger cities, such as Florence and Siena," Donagher noted, "are repositories for some of the greatest treasures in the development of western civilization."

The program is open to college students, high school students, and adults, either for credit or just for fun. Up to six semester credits are offered for the month of study. In past years, participants came from a wide variety of colleges and academic backgrounds.

Courses being offered this year are: history of Italian cities; art history; Italian (basic conversational); Dante (in Italian or in translation) and studio art. The Renaissance is a focal point for the course work, but living and studying in Italy adds to the total experience. It gives one a special opportunity to absorb many of Italy's facets, including the warmth of its people.

All faculty members have had extensive study and travel throughout Europe and each has previously served as director for the program.

The fee will be $1467, without airfare. Airfare is additional at a group rate. The cost, however, includes all meals in Siena, all transfers and transportation in Italy, all hotels and tuition (for up to six credits). A continental breakfast will be provided on all trips outside of Siena.

For further information, contact Donagher by writing to the Division of Humanities, Rosemont College, Rosemont, Pa. 19010; or call 527-0200.

Union's Leisure Courses Still Have a few Openings

The leisure committee of the Villanova Union extends an invitation to the community to take advantage of the mini courses and seminars offered this spring. These courses are offered in an attempt to create varied learning opportunities where people can get together to share and learn from one another. Courses offered this year range from lifesaving to creative photography to the Tai Chi movement.

To register, go to the North Lounge of Dougherty Hall or the Connelly Center today from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Today is the last day to register.

Sign up is on a first come, first serve basis. You can sign up a friend, but get their money and address first.

There is a $1 registration fee for all students and staff members, and a $2 fee for all those not affiliated with the University.

Nightclub's Music Pulsates

By JOE ALESSANDRINE

Villanova students have characteristically spent their free time in area "watering holes" to release the tension of their academic lives.

Kelly's, Smokey Joe's and more recently, Pagano's, have enjoyed a thriving business because of Villanova people. But lately, more sophisticated, extravagant yet affordable night spots have been frequented by an increasing number of V.U. students, as well as those from other area colleges.

One such club is Pulsations, located on Route 1 in Glen Mills. "Tres chic" is one phrase to describe its aura. As you pass through the large glass doors and enter the mirror-lined corridor, a feeling of excitement pervades the scene. Along the aisle where the $5 cover charge is paid, there is a bar for those too impatient to withstand the customary long entrance lines.

In the middle of the club is a spacious dance floor. Above it are chandeliers with a spectacular light system, and beyond it is a Broadway-style stage, draped with a red curtain. Also situated around the room are speakers that offer excellent sound distribution. That sound is produced by a top-notch disc jockey who "mixes" current funk, old disco and even rock. The DJ teams up with the house band, complete with a horn section, in a "mix" that begins the band's set.

Pulsations, a new hot spot for Villanovans.

A short time later, a scene from the dinner theatre's production of "Pizazz" is enacted. Its troupe of dancers consists of both males and females dressed scantily and brightly.

And just when you think you've seen it all, a large spaceship appears from nowhere and hovers over the crowd. It lands in the center of the dance floor, and from it appears a robot outfitted with blinking lights and looking a bit like E.T.

The diversity of people who patronize Pulsations range from college students (of drinking age) to jet set adults, to those in their sixties. Owner Leon Altemose is solely interested in showing all an enjoyable and memorable time.

When last call rolls around at 2 a.m., the sense of fulfillment is felt in both spirit and wallet.

Most V.U. people who have been to Pulsations will tell you the same thing: "Don't miss it." You have to experience Pulsations yourself to truly appreciate its style and class.

Move over, Kelly's!

VU Students Aided by Alumni VALUE Program

By PAUL DONVITO

If you've been up all night writing an economics paper, and at sunrise you find yourself asking, "Why am I doing this to myself?" you might find your answer in VALUE (short for Villanova Alumni Lending Undergraduates Experience) program. This program, instituted last September by the career development office, offers a chance for Villanova students to spend one-half day with an alumnus at his place of employment. These visits can provide first-hand career information to students, in order that they might better utilize the education they are now receiving.

Charlie Guida, assistant to the alumni director, center, looks on as an alumnus, at left, helps a student.

The main objective of the VALUE program is to assist students in the clarification of career goals. The program is open to second semester freshmen, sophomores and juniors. Through VALUE they are able to explore career skills related to their major, receive current career information and assess the working environment.

Thus far the program has involved 25 students, but it has room for many more. Over 200 alumni have pledged support so far by offering to sponsor students as hosts.

Whereas the career development office serves to match up interested students and alumni in their field of study or major, the VALUE program offers one a chance to go to the company. It gives the student a chance to observe the day-to-day activities and responsibilities of a particular job rather than just hearing about it. The alumni also gain from the program because it provides a medium by which they can retain contact with their alma mater.

Students wishing to be involved in the program must first attend a general meeting to discuss the objectives, responsibilities and format of the program. Prior to matching the student with the alumnus, though, there is an interview with each candidate to determine if the program is appropriate for him. Those who fit are then matched with alumni volunteers. After this point, however, all further arrangements must be made by the student.

Each student may visit up to three companies per academic year. Following each visit, participants attend a luncheon sponsored by the Alumni Association at the Philadelphia Racquet Club.

Reaction to the program thus far has been strongly positive. Noted a sophomore majoring in chemical engineering, "I felt I gained a candid and objective insight into the law profession. It was very informative." Other participants reacted similarly to the information they gained.

Alumni, too, have expressed positive feedback. They also remember when their learning back at Villanova helped them.

The VALUE program, although initiated only last semester, will undoubtedly provide long-term guidance to students unsure of their life's ambition. The clarification of career goals in fact, will put into perspective the seemingly endless load of work we must face now.

DID YOU KNOW . . .

• Consumers don't always have to accept the standard equipment radios that often "come with the car," according to the Custom Automotive Sound Association (CASA), a non-profit trade association. CASA works to persuade car makers to offer new cars with optional standard equipment radios. Many new cars buyers want to choose their own radio or stereo equipment, and should be able to get credit for the standard equipment they didn't choose and don't want.

The association wants new car buyers to be aware of radio delete options and will provide this information about them on many new car models. For additional information, write CASA at: 2101 L St. NW, Washington, D.C. 20037.

• Remember your rights as they pertain to mail ordering. 1) If a product you didn't order comes in the mail, it is illegal to pressure you to return it or pay for it. Be sure, however, that it's not part of a merchandise series you or a family member ordered. 2) If you feel you receive too much or too little advertising mail, the Direct Mail/Marketing Association will ask to have your name removed from (or added to) the lists of their members. To have this done, contact them at: the Direct Mail/Marketing Association, 6 East 43rd Street, New York, N.Y. 10017, ATTENTION: Mail Preference Service.

• The Magnuson-Moss Act of 1975 requires that warranties be available for you to read before you make a purchase — however, they do not have to be written. Many warranties do not cover consequential damages either. For example, if your freezer breaks and the food in it spoils, the company will not pay for the food you lost. It is important to realize the difference and variety of protection offered by written warranties, so you should compare warranties before making purchases.

• Although written warranties are not required, there is another type of warranty that is. It is called an "implied" warranty, and is created and found in all state laws. Almost every purchase you make is covered by an implied warranty. The most common type of implied warranty is called a "warranty of merchantibility."

• If your purchase does not come with a written warranty, it is still covered by implied warranties unless the product is marked "as is," or the seller otherwise indicates in writing that no warranty is given. Remember: before you buy, read the warranty. If problems arise that are not covered by the written warranty, you should investigate the protection given by your implied warranty. If you cannot get satisfaction from the retailer or manufacturer, contact the Consumer Affairs Research Board.

• The Consumer Federation of America will be holding its annual meeting on Feb. 16 to 17 at the Hilton Hotel in Washington, D.C. Among the topics to be discussed are: the future of the Federal Trade Commission, banking deregulation and the public interest, the aftermath of phone divestiture, to build or not to build the $640 billion electric utility question and legislative options for food safety. All students are invited, and anyone interested should contact the Consumer Affairs Research Board located in Room 331, Bartley.

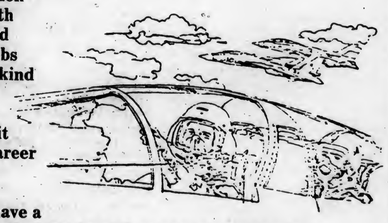
The Navy Needs Your Head In The Clouds.

The Navy needs people in the sky who can think fast. Pilots to fly the world's most sophisticated aircraft and flight officers to control the complicated weapons and navigation systems onboard. Both jobs require advanced training. And both jobs reward you with the kind of management responsibility and leadership authority it takes to make your career take off.



To qualify you must have a BA or BS, be no more than 28, be able to pass aptitude and physical examinations, qualify for security clearance and be a U.S. citizen.

Your base pay is above $30,000 after only four years. On top of that, you'll receive an outstanding benefits package: 30 days paid vacation earned each year, medical and dental care, low-cost life insurance and tax-free allowances.

If you've got a good head on your shoulders and high hopes for the future, find out more about becoming a member of the Naval Aviation Team.

Vasey Musical 'Rings' Out Loud

By NICK ANASTASIO

"Whisper Rings," an original musical adapted from the writings of Lewis Carroll by Terry Guerin and Claude White, premiered at Vasey Theatre last Friday. The production, which borrows its structure from "Godspell," features a cast of 13 performers playing various roles and characters, and is directed by Guerin.

Like "Godspell," which Guerin also directed, "Whisper Rings" has no plot, only one stage set, has all the characters on stage at all times, and no actor is limited to one role. Indeed, the program lists them alphabetically under "Ensemble," showing that no one cast member stars more than the others. "Whisper Rings" also resembles "Godspell" in that its songs mark transitions from one theme to another.

The musical runs as a life cycle: the characters make their entrance by "being born" (actually, they enter through a trap door on the floor of the stage, which is covered by a "Spider web" mat), learn about rules and regulations, later learn about love, then grow old and reminisce at the end, before "dying" (exiting through the same trap door).

Carroll's favorite themes of childhood innocence, fantasy and the supernatural, and the inevitability of aging are all brought out. From "Sylvie and Bruno Completed" and "Phantasmagerie" come everything one needs to know about fairies. "Rules and Regulations," a poem about growing up, is preceded by an etiquette lesson in which children mock adult behavior. (Interestingly, "Rules and Regulations" has been arranged as a rap duet.) "Solitude" and "The Boor's Aria" depict reflections of an elderly person.

White has done a brilliant job of arranging Carrol's poems into songs. The mood of each poem is conveyed by the style of music chosen: the rap in "Rules and Regulations" is bright, while "Solitude" and "So Long" (an original song by white based on Carroll's "Letter to a Child-friend") are transformed into dark, somber ballads. Executed by pianist Michael Acquero Mignogna, drummer Jeff Babkin, and bassist guitarist Dan Boehmcke, the music is the highlight of the show.

Cast members Dana Amendola, David Bonanno, Lisa Colautti, Christine Conforti, Paul Guerin, Shari Hartline, Bobbi Kotula, Ricardo Martin, Harry McFadden, Daria Newenhous, Kathleen Warner, Fran Whalen, and H. German Wilson, did most of the choreography themselves, which on the whole, was well done. However, the opening number, "The Trysting," was plodding and drawn out. The singing was strong throughout, with Bonanno and Hartline turning in the most impressive performances.

"Whisper Rings" was not without flaws, however. There was no intermission, and the show started to drag until right before the end, when "So Long" and "Solitude" revived the audience. Also, some of the transitions between scenes did not flow smoothly.

Still, these flaws are not enough to prevent "Whisper Rings" from being a good musical that can be enjoyed by children of all ages. Lewis Carroll would have wanted it that way.

"Whisper Rings" will run tonight, Saturday, and Tuesday through Saturday, (Feb. 10, 11, 14-18). Show time is 8 p.m. Tickets cost $7.00 tonight and Saturday, $6.00 Tuesday through Thursday, and $7.00 again Feb. 17 and 18.

Pacino's Film Is Unscarred

By JOSEPH McALEE

Al Pacino plays Tony Montana, a Cuban immigrant who hits it big in the Florida drug trade in the remake of Howard Hawks classic, "Scarface."

The story follows Montana from his humble beginning as one of the boat people to his untimely end as a drug kingpin. He rises quickly through the ranks of the underworld using his natural street smarts and an unnatural amount of brutality. Just as Montana reaches the height of his career, his life begins to deteriorate. He becomes addicted to cocaine, is indicted for income tax evasion and faces a stiff jail sentence. Montana's fatal mistake occurs when he double crosses his South American partners, who then put a contract out on him. Alone, deserted by his wife and friends, high, nearly to the point of unconsciousness, Tony Montana's meteoric rise to fame and fortune is brutally ended in a spectacular gun battle.

Pacino is excellent as Montana, the poor immigrant turned drug czar. His performance is a superb study of the effects that wealth and power can have on the wrong individual. He is, at first, a shrewd, sharp hustler having to fight for every dollar he makes. Later, as the money rolls in, Montana's personality begins to degenerate.

"Scarface" is directed by Brian DePalma, who also directed such box office hits as "Dressed To Kill," "Blowout" and "Carrie." DePalma does an excellent job, particularly with regard to his handling of the scenes dealing with the business end of the drug trade (the deals, the exchanges, the excessive use of violence in many of his films and "Scarface" is no exception. Although the film is extremely violent, the use of that violence is justified. The real drug kingdom of South Florida is incredibly more depraved than any movie could ever possibly be. (In fact, this movie is not as violent as "Friday the 13th" or "Halloween.") In "Scarface" the real brutality is implied in every scene. The threat of death, torture and madness walk hand in hand with the promise of unimaginable wealth.

DePalma has been criticized for

"Scarface" is an excellent film on several levels. It is a penetrating look at the multi-million dollar business of the brutal drug industry. It is the story of a man's slow but sure slide toward insanity. Finally, it is a serious indictment on any society which would allow such a business to operate.

One Music Lover To Another

By NICK ANASTASIO

Paul Strowe appeared at the Connelly Center on Tuesday. He performed two shows, one during the lunch hour and one that night. Accompanied by his acoustic guitars (one six-string and one twelve-string), he played such songs as "Behind Blue Eyes," "Amy," "American Pie," "The Boxer," "Ventura Highway," and "Take it Easy."

A native of Fairport, New York, Strowe has been performing as a solo act for three and a half years. He started out in bars, but has been playing the college circuit for the last two years, with only occasional appearances in bars. This year, he hopes to "hit a ton of colleges." He plays mostly in the upstate New York area but has played as far west as California, as far south as Florida, and is no stranger to Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio, New York City, and New England. Villanova was the first stop on an eight-day swing that took him to New York City, Albany, Potsdam, Massachusetts and Rochester.

Strowe travels from city to city in his van. He bought the van only two months ago, but already has put 5,000 miles on it. He usually drives 30,000 miles a year. "I call my wife every other day, see how she and the kids are doing," he said. "The 'kids' are animals; I don't believe in having children if I am on the road. I'd have to be there all the time, which I'm not."

Strowe first started playing guitar 20 years ago, but gave it up after about two years. After an eight year lay-off, he took up the guitar again— this time seriously. "I've probably been in 15 bands," he said.

The most notable of these bands was the Todd Hobin Band. Strowe joined them when their singer, Todd Hobin, became ill. For four months, they were known as Hobin's Heroes, playing an almost entirely different set. When Hobin recovered, he rejoined and Strowe resumed his solo career.

"I don't know where I got the guts to play in front of people. The first time you play (in public), when you finish a song you don't know if anyone's going to clap.

"What I like is what I play. I've been lucky in that what I like other people like, too."

What type of music does Paul Strowe like?

"There's a lot of stuff I like," he said "Lynyrd Skynyrd,38 Special, Yes, The Who, and a lot from the late '50s and early '60s."

As for the future, Strowe said "You give yourself certain imaginary goals. For the next five years, I'll be doing this (playing colleges) and stuff like this, then see what happens. With colleges, I can play the same music day after day, but in front of different people.

"I probably will work with bands again. The perfect thing would be to play in a band one night a week, like Saturdays, and play solo three or four nights a week. But that's unlikely."

"You can't have a democracy in a band. It doesn't work. If I could, I'd pay each member a certain amount each week — say $300 — whether we played or not. But they would have to play what I wanted, how I wanted it."

"I worked with a trio over the summer. We did three shows and a couple of TV spots, but I didn't enjoy it. I didn't like the manager. He didn't know music. He saw a reggae band one night, then came back and asked us to play some reggae. He wanted us to record an album, but the producer he wanted us to work with worked with Maynard Ferguson, so we would have sounded more like somebody else than ourselves. After our third show, I told him I was quitting."

Strowe has recorded a single on Aries Records, an independent record company. The record features two original compositions, "Dreamer" and "It Already Happened Twice" (which he performed during the lunch hour show). On the record, he is backed up by some members of the Todd Hobin Band. The record is getting some airplay in Rochester and Syracuse.

"I don't consider myself as a person who 'does songs.' It's work," said Strowe. "I like to play solo. I get to show what I can do."

Anyone who has seen Paul Strowe in concert knows he can do a fine

Robert's Album Is a Hazard

By GARY R. DYER

"Wing of Fire," Robert Hazard's new album, is an aesthetic disappointment and a commercial blunder.

Hazard and his five-man band, supplemented by several extra musicians, have recorded this album in Los Angeles with producer David Kershenbaum, who has worked with Joe Jackson and Graham Parker. Hazard wrote and arranged all ten of the songs on the record, so it can be assumed that he bears the responsibility for the direction his music has taken.

Hazard has chosen to build his first album around a concept of romantic frustration, low-key and melodramatic. This is in itself a bold gamble: in theory, a performer's first album should include what is simply his best material or he will never make a second album.

The gamble doesn't pay off. Hazard's most loyal fans will probably walk around in a daze after hearing this self-indulgent collection of songs.

The music on the album is uneven: some is very good, if eccentrically-interpreted. "Hard Hearted" is a great song, both mysterious and nasty in its live performance, built around a thunderous bass riff. Unfortunately, this version suggests that Hazard got a good deal on synthesizers. The rhythm is homogenized into a sort of techno-pop reggae. It's still a striking piece of music, and far and away the best rock cut on the record, but the arrangement dulls its edge. At least it has good drum effects.

"Hard Hearted" is paradigmatic of the whole album: the best Hazard has to offer is diluted or lost, while his worst tendencies are given free reign.

Hazard has included some numbers which seem to exist only to use all sorts of neat studio effects. "Interplanetary Private Eye," "Cool Life," and "Melt Down" are embarrassing. "Melt Down" has possibly the most inane opening line of any song this reviewer has ever heard: "We're flying much too high,/madmen of the new sci-fi."

Another batch of tunes is given to misty-eyed romanticism. These songs tend to revolve around the "mysterious woman" theme. "Arms of Love" is a fine song with a Caribbean flavor, but here it is burdened with a hokey synthesizer intro and string ensemble suffocating the chorus. "Undercover Lover" is a pretty tune with lyrics that use both the private-eye and mysterious woman archtypes. The chorus goes: "Take me under cover/ be my secret lover/ take me through the night." Enough said.

The material on this album is weak. Hazard does not include some of the crowd-pleasers from his repertoire, such as "Be My Girl" and "Land of Ice." They would liven things up but I guess they just didn't fit into his plan.

The arrangements and production on this album are not very good. David Kershenbaum puts so much echo on Hazard's voice that he seems to be singing from the bottom of a well, or from the back of J.C. Dobb's. Songs go on too long, have gratuitous synthesizer doodling, and seem to lack that good rhythm guitar which always helps Hazard's performances. Hazard's arrangements have always been too keyboard heavy, but some pieces on this album are nothing but bass, drums, synthesizers, and Hazard's tormented howls.

This album could have been better without the peculiar song selection. Essentially, this record is not a group of bad songs as much as a boring collection of songs of mixed quality. Listening to the whole second side of this album is a difficult task: even "Arms of Love" is too full, drawn-out, and downbeat to rescue you from sleep.

The sedative effect of Hazard's album will have a sad effect: no sales, except maybe from diehard fans in the Philadelphia area. Despite his ridiculous affectations stolen from David Bowie and Bruce Springsteen, Hazard has some talent as a songwriter and an arranger. This album could kill his career. RCA probably won't hang on to an unprofitable singer, no matter how much he thrills the crowds at the Ripley. A person thrilled by his concerts will play this album once or twice before condemning it to ignominy.

Even "Hard Hearted," the only song here which could catch someone's ear over the airwaves, sounds more like a pastiche of Duran Duran than a "song from the streets of Philadelphia," as Hazard used to call it in mumbled introductions in his concerts.

Hazard seems to have lost himself in the world of the studio. Regular keyboardist Jerry Weindel and additional synthesizer-players Kae Williams Jr. and Gary Chang could have recorded most of the songs themselves and then just invited Hazard in to dub his declamatory vocals.

Hitchcock's 'Vertigo' Is Re-released

By JAYNE M. STUART

Alfred Hitchcock. What does that name represent? The ultimate in directing is certainly one idea his name is often associated with.

Many of his fans were surprised and delighted by the re-release of five of his rarest films this year. These films' rights were bought by Hitchcock when they were originally released to increase their value to his estate. When he died, the movie companies clamored for the rights to the films, and consequently his children made out like bandits.

"Vertigo" stars Jimmy Stewart and Kim Novak in an intricate and surprising thriller. The terror sometimes associated with Hitchcock's name is missing, yet the mystery is there.

Stewart plays a retired police detective who has quit the force because of his vertigo, fear of heights. Now he spends his free time "just wandering."

As in most Hitchcock films, the audience must pay close attention to detail. Inevitably, there are things that slip the mind, perhaps thankfully, because they add to the puzzles' elusiveness.

If you are bothered by old-fashioned sets and fake backdrops, "Vertigo" is not the film for you. However, if you revel in old-time movies — the outdated costumes, the blatant fakes — then sit back and enjoy.

Hitchcock was a superb director. He was known for his attention to detail and his radical and inventive ideas. The most famous scene from "Vertigo" involves a chase up a long and winding staircase. As Stewart runs up the staircase, he glances over the edge. The next shot was one reason the movie was such a memorable one.

Hitchcock positions the camera such that the audience is staring down the stairwell, and then he pulls the camera up toward the audience. The effect is marvelous, something akin to a 3-D movie, with the audiences' stomach bottoming out. They even get dizzy right along with Stewart.

The basic plot is that an old college friend of Scotti's (Stewart) believes his wife to be going a bit mad. He feels she is being obsessed by a great grandmother whom she never met. He hires Scotti to tail her to discover what she does all day, so as to help him piece together the puzzle.

At first skeptical, but with a lack of anything better to do, Scotti accepts the offer. Novak plays Madelaine, who is the friend's wife. She leads him throughout a seemingly crazy pattern. Scotti saves Madelaine's life and that's when the trouble begins.

The inevitable happens: the star falls in love with the beautiful, blond leading lady.

Yes, Hitchcock's film has a certain predictable quality, yet one should never be caught off-guard. What is ordinary and sensible can suddenly change into that which is extraordinary and bizarre.

The most wonderful quality of Hitchcock's directing is that he never loses his acute sense for reality. Compared to today's production, visually speaking, his is far from reality. This in and of itself is part of the charm of the movie; it leaves just enough to your imagination.

Stewart and Novak do a fine job and what a shock it is to see such a young Stewart. He falls right into place and plays a convincing part, as does Novak.

One thing to remember: Hitchcock always appeared in his films, someplace. He is not too hard to spot in this one. Good luck.

Martin Is A 'Lonely Guy'

By MIKE MATHIS

We first knew him as "the small guy." Soon afterward he became "a wild and crazy guy." We next came to know him as "King Tut." Now Steve Martin, Hollywood's resident funny guy, is the star of a new film based on a Neil Simon screenplay called "The Lonely Guy."

Martin plays Larry Hubbard, a man with more happiness than he can handle: a successful job, a large, roomy apartment, and an attractive woman. What more could a guy ask for?

Unfortunately, Larry has a very typical problem . . . he's a lonely guy. He loses his job, his apartment, and his girlfriend. He soon comes to gripe with his problem and spends the entire movie trying to release himself from the doldrums of loneliness. He meets up with Warren (played by Charles Grodin), an "experienced lonely guy," and together they set out to make life more tolerable. As both Larry and Warren know all too well, you know that you're a lonely guy when you accumulate a collection of potted ferns, play chess with a robot that beats and insults you, and your house parties are jammed with cardboard cutouts of famous people, courtesy of the friendly neighborhood lonely guy store.

Hubbard eventually writes a best selling book about lonely-guy-dom and its problems. The book's theme is loosely based on Bruce Jay Friedman's self-help book entitled "The Lonely Guy's Book of Life," which was adapted in part by Neil Simon for the motion picture's subsequent screenplay.

Charles Grodin's portrayal of Warren appears stalwart throughout the picture. As "the experienced lonely guy," one can unmistakably sympathize with the lifestyle that Warren leads. He also comes through in helping Hubbard cope with his lonely life, despite his own contemplations with suicide.

However, the film contains more flaws than successes. Brief appearances by Merv Griffin, Dr. Joyce Brothers, and Steve Lawrence add little to the film's plot and fail to enhance the aura of the picture. Judith Ivey, who portrays Hubbard's girlfriend, is another character who also holds up her end of the sagging script very well. Her understanding of Hubbard's plight sheds a glimmer of light in an otherwise dark film.

The most disheartening factor of the film is Martin himself. We have obviously seen Larry Hubbard before in a film whose plot is practically identical to another Steve Martin movie made a few years ago. Those who remember "The Jerk" can parallel the character structures of both Larry Hubbard and Nevin Johnson, complete with loneliness, despondency, and an eventual rise to wealth and stardom. After awhile, the cheap shots get stagnate, as they have had a tendency to do in Martin's last two films. If Martin continues to create films similar to his last two films, his career, despite help from screenwriters such as Neil Simon and Carl Reiner, is doomed for a drastic downfall in the 1980s. Hopefully, we will be graced once again by the same man who once made people laugh at funny, original jokes.

Football Poem

To the Editor:

Once upon a time, football was played on this block, then came a stupid decision which left us in dry dock.
It's been three years since a game has been played but it is my last year, and a career has to be made.

I can't go to the next game as an undergrad, but I still remember that one good year I had.
I'll be back in the parking lot come next fall, even if our squad doesn't win one at all.

That hasty decision a couple of springs ago
could have been avoided if they only let us know.
Money could have been raised to save the team, but Fr. Driscoll and his trustees wanted to cancel the parking lot gleem.

The games seemed to be the one thing that drew us together through win or loss, good and bad weather, but let's not beat a dead horse, it's all in the past

I just hope that this time, Villa nova football will last!

'Star 80' is a Success

By DEAN C. BALSAMINI

When this writer first heard that a movie was being made about the life of Playboy centerfold Dorothy Stratten, the first reaction was that the film would be nothing more than another exploitation film of the Harlequin romance variety. Also, the fact that Mariel Hemingway was going to play Stratten added fuel to a fire that said this was going to be a trashy movie. But as the saying goes, never judge a book (in the case, movie), by its cover.

"Star 80," directed and written by Bob Fosse, is an interesting study of one man's determination to be someone, no matter what the price may be. Most people, including this writer, thought that "Star 80," would be about Stratten, the Playboy model who was viciously shot to death by her husband, Paul Snider. But Fosse found Snider's story more interesting and complex than Stratten's, and therefore the film revolves around him rather than her.

Snider is a man who throughout his life was a shill and a gambler, always finding ways to make a buck. Whether it be building workbenches, pimping women or smooth talking nightclub owners, Snider had a knack for getting people to engage in his schemes. In the case of Stratten, Snider found a girl who he felt was a marketable commodity, his ticket to the bigtime.

Eric Roberts' portrayal of Snider steals this movie with a performance that is deserving of an Academy Award, Roberts, who beat out Richard Gere for the part, conveys Snider's paranoid, seedy character so well that it is scary.

As the film opens, Snider has already taken a shotgun and blown off the face of Stratten in his apartment. The bloody Snider is delirious, spewing forth obscenities towards "all of you bastards who made me do this."

From here the film is told in flashback form, putting together pices of a puzzle that was never meant to fit. Snider originally meets Stratten at a fast food chain where she is working the register, and sweettalks her into going out with him, and from here, this bizarre relationship is born.

Stratten, who was a sweet, naive girl from Vancouver, is transformed by Snider into every man's fantasy, when he coaxes the 20-year-old into sending nude photos to Playboy in hopes of becoming a centerfold.

While Snider often seems polite, it is nothing more than a transparent attempt to get people to see things his way. In one particular scene of interest, Snider presents to Stratten's mother a consent form that will enable him to take Dorothy out to L.A. for her centerfold test. In typical fashion, Snider tells Stratten's mother that "if she signs, Dorothy can make us a lot of money. If not, then the whole thing is off." Mrs. Stratten decides not to sign the consent, which enrages Snider, who will forge the consent form, and with that, signs the 20-year-old's death certificate.

As the film develops, we see that the Snider-Stratten relationship was nothing more than that of a pimp and his hooker. Snider was a parasite who in a Svengali-like way manipulated the young girl into believing he loved her.

When Snder finally gets his chance to mingle with "Hef (Hugh Hefner) and other beautiful people," he is snubbed and ridiculed. No one has any interest in this tacky sh yster who dresses as if he were going bowling; it's Dorothy who is the center of attention.

Fosse's directing is excellent, as he focuses on presenting the story impartially, as it allegedly happened.

Mariel Hemingway is admirable as the ill-fated Playmate, but even with her much talked about breast implants, she still fails to convey the sensuality that Stratten had. Cliff Robertson (Hefner) and Carroll Baker (Mrs. Stratten) also give fine performances.

"Star 80" is one of this year's best movies that one appreciates even more knowing how bad it could have been. Hats off to Fosse and especially Eric Roberts, for his intense betrayal of a man obsessed with fame and fortune.

Eurythmics Transcend The Usual Trends

By BOB SMITH

The Eurythmics are considered by many to be just another one of many synthesizer bands that has hit it big in the last few years. The hit was "Sweet Dreams (Are Made Of This)," the highly successful single drawn from the album of the same name. On their latest release, entitled, "Touch," the Eurythmics manage to refute that assumption by breaking new ground in the synth/pop field.

The Eurythmics have always been known for innovation. After the release of their 1980 debut "In The Garden," the Eurythmics became embroiled in a lawsuit that cost them their recording contract and nearly all of their earnings. They responded by turning a small attic into a slapdash recording studio. It was in this attic that they recorded the "Sweet Dreams" album. This was quite a feat, especially when one takes into consideration the fact that most bands spend thousands of dollars recording a single album and still don't manage to capture the clarity of sound that characterizes the "Sweet Dreams" LP. Following this success, Dave Stewart and Annie Lennox, the two multitalented musicians who write and compose all of the band's material, built a more accommodious studio, in which "Touch" was recorded.

"Touch" is much more than a demonstration of the latest in electronic gadgetry. It explores the avant-garde possibilities put forth by such mid-Seventies surrealists such as Roxy Music and Brian Eno. By fusing the elements of fantasy and lush imagery inherent in the work of these artists with the synth-technopop sound of the Eighties, "Touch" brings these two branches of experimental music into a viable whole. For this, "Touch" is one of the most important releases to appear in some time.

While the synthesizers still represent the dominant instrumental voice on the record, the band avoids the temptation of falling back on them. Rather, they mange to show a good deal of imagination throughout. Horn and string arrangements add depth to this music, while more standard rock instrumentation adds spark to the songs. While no single recurrent theme is emphasized, the songs project various images.

"Here Comes The Rain Again" is an exercise in sensuality, with gorgeous string arrangements that accent the lyric. "Regrets" has an icy, detached feel, but manages to convey its message in an effective manner. On the other hand, "Right By Your Side" is a warm lively song. Lennox's almost-wild vocal is set ahead of a backdrop of dissonant, almost abstract horns. The result is an exotic song that is as danceable as any Michael Jackson or Kool And The Gang single.

All in all, "Touch" is a wonderfully colorful work that transcends the trendiness of synth-pop while managing to explore that genre's full possibilities.

The Spirit of Greeks shines through.

Villanova Greeks Get 'Zeta Psied'

The thirty-four brothers of the Alpha Omega Colony of Zeta Psi were officially pledged in on Jan. 19, 1984. After functioning as an interest group since the beginning of the school year, the "Zetes" along with the help of Dr. Richard Neville, vice president of Student Life, worked to get the freeze on fraternities lifted. During this process the members of the interest group heard presentations from five national fraternities, who wished to join the Villanova Community.

After a long, drawn-out process the group finally chose Zeta Psi. President Jim Hughes then presented the fraternity to the IFC in mid-December, and Zeta Psi was approved to become the thirteenth fraternity on the Villanova campus.

The new colony is planning to be a social and service fraternity. They look forward to meeting with the other fraternities and sororities to become an important figure in Greek Life at Villanova.

Zeta Psi is in the process of rushing its first pledge class. Although inexperienced at this process, the turn out for rush was beyond their highest expectations. Through the strong efforts of Joe Croasdale (rush chairman) and the rush committee, they are quickly making Zeta Psi a competitive fraternity at Villanova. Together with the original thirty-four pledges, the new pledges will be initiated during the first weekend in May.

Zeta Psi was founded at New York University in 1847 and became the eleventh national Greek lettered fraternity. It was the first fraternity to establish a chapter on the Pacific Coast at Cal-Berkeley in 1870. The "Zetes" were the first fraternity to achieve international status, when in 1879 a chapter was formed at the University of Toronto. Currently, there are fifty-two chapters and one colony that make up Zeta Psi.

The current officers for the Alpha Omega Colony are as follows:

President: Jim Hughes
Vice President: Tom Bennett
Secretary: Jerry Meis
Treasurer: Mark LeFever
Historian: Mark Melillo
Corresponding Secretary: Mike Corbo
Sergeant-at-Arms: John Balsis

Within the past week Dr. Athinaios, a Villanova statistics teacher, officially became the "Zete's" faculty advisor. He is of Greek origin and will not only help us learn about the fraternity system, but will also help us learn about the Greek culture.

Pikes Peak

As is the case with many of life's challenges, only through hard work and determination can goals be reached. In this spirit the Theta Chi chapter of the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity was chartered at Villanova on Jan. 28, 1984. In so doing, they beeame the 175th chapter of the prestigious national fraternity, which boasts 128,000 members.

Pi Kappa Alpha at Villanova grew out of the local Delta Pi Epsilon fraternity. Delta Pi Epsilon was founded as a business majors' honor society in 1915 and later became a full-fledged fraternity in 1925. The Theta Chi chapter can trace their roots further back than any Greek institution at Villanova. Renowned for their social and athletic reputation, Delta Pi Epsilon existed until 1982. Then-president Anthony Peter Ciesko contacted Pi Kappa Alpha, and on July 15, 1982 Delta Pi Epsilon became a colony of Pi Kappa Alpha.

The colony set a list of 40 objectives which they would accomplish before becoming a chapter. In carrying out these objectives, the colony members improved both their reputation on campus and their understanding of what fraternity really means.

Under the able leadership of former-colony president John Fitzpatrick, goals were achieved. The colony's social, academic, and service activities increased and met with considerable success. When "Fitz" turned over the reigns of leadership to his successor John Galperin, the stage was set for the installation and initiation of Theta Chi chapter.

Galperin, aided by his vice president Michael Saulino and the other officers and brothers of the colony finished making last minute arrangements to assure that the installation would be a festive and memorable event. Finally their work and dedication was rewarded. On Jan. 28, National President Joseph Turner, Jr., Regional President Larry Lunsford, and Director of Expansion Allen Groves came to Villanova to conduct the ritual installation and initiation of the chapter's 40 members. The tradition of the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity founded at the University of Virginia in 1968 and that of the Delta Pi Epsilon fraternity are now merged and Villanova's oldest, and newest fraternity looks on toward new pikes peaks.

TheRushProcess

The second Panhellenic rush on Villanova's campus was completed last week. It was the most successful in the school's history. Over 200 young women of the Villanova community registered for the formal rush, and 118 went on to pledge.

The Panhellenic Association, which is comprised of representatives from each sorority, is responsible for governing all rush activities. Through a series of parties, it enables each rushee to become acquainted with each sorority, and each sorority, in turn, to meet all prospective members. In addition, the Panhellenic Association sets guidelines for sororities to follow in their rush programs. This provides for uniformity and objectivity throughout the process. The purpose of this system is to allow each rushee to choose which sorority is best for her, from among all the possible choices.

The rush process begins with registration. The first function involved is an informational meeting, where rush procedures and rules are explained. Each rushee is assigned to a panhellenic rush counselor, who would assist her during the rush program.

The first night of parties entails a visit to each of the six sororities on Villanova's campus. The parties later in the week are invitational and allow rushees the opportunity to spend more time with those sororities in which they are most interested.

At the end of the week, invitations to membership (or "bids") were extended by the sororities after being matched with the rushee's preference. Invitations are extended on the basis of mutual selection. When preferences of the rushee and sorority are matched, a bid is extended. During the rush process, some women withdraw for various reasons.

Each sorority was limited to the number of bids which they could extend, this number is known as quota. It is based on the number of rushees which accept invitations back to the second night of parties. This rush, quota was 30.

Both Alpha Chi Omega and Delta Delta Delta took quota. Kappa Kappa Gamma and Tau Kappa Delta took 25 and 19 pledges, respectively. Kappa Alpha Theta extended 14 invitations to membership.

This year's Panhellenic Rush Chairman was Niki Elaides of Tau Kappa Delta who deserves much credit for the success of the program. Villanova's rush program is currently being evaluated and considered for several awards by the Northeast Panhellenic Conference.

This Spring's rush was not only a success for all the sororities, but was also a fun experience for everyone involved. Congratulations to all of the sororities for a job well done, and best wishes to all the new pledges.

Greek Week Is Coming: Beware

Graduate into the fast lane.

We're looking for college students and graduates who want to fly, want to be leaders, want more responsibility at an early age than most men receive in a lifetime. The career you'd be applying for is a Marine Corps Officer. To qualify, you'll have to be in top physical condition—flying a rocket at supersonic speeds isn't a job for the faint at heart. You'll have to measure up to our demanding standards of academic achievement—there's no room for the slow of mind. And if you measure up, we'll offer you challenge, travel opportunity, good benefits and a salary commensurate with most corporate starting salaries. We can offer tuition assistance in the NROTC, Platoon Leaders Class (PLC), even a chance to join the Marine Reserve while you're still in college. Drop by your college placement center and set up an appointment with your Marine Corps Officer Selection Officer.

Wildcats Scalp Redmen In Final Seconds

By RODGER VAN ALLEN

Basketball games are won and lost on the foul line, but are they ever tied?

Fortunately for Villanova's men's basketball team, they are not. St. John's Bill Wennington missed the second of two foul shots with no time remaining as the Wildcats narrowly defeated the Redmen by 64-63.

St. John's Chris Mullin, who led all scorers with 25, threw up a jumper with two seconds left that bounced around the rim and into a crowd of players. In the struggle for the rebound, Wennington was fouled by Harold Pressley at the buzzer. Rollie Massimino then left the court with several players but had to be called back because the official had ruled that the foul was committed before the horn had sounded. Massimino was not convinced, but after a brief debate, Wennington went to the line alone to try and tie the game. Wennington, a below average foul shooter, made the first, but the second rolled in and out to give Villanova the win.

The game, however, was by no means handed to them.

Pressley also contributed 13. Both Pressley and Ed Pinckney controlled the boards with eight rebounds apiece. The Cats also had five blocked shots.

The game was close throughout the first half as well. The lead exchanged hands over a dozen times, but St. John's had controlled the tempo and led at the half 34-32. The Cats' defense suffered with the loss of Pinckney and Pressley, who sat out the last five minutes of the first half due to foul trouble. Mullin, despite Villanova's half court trap and changing defenses, had 15 first half points.

Villanova was then hampered in the second half by turnovers until the Cats came alive with about ten minutes left on a Pinckney lay-up. That put Nova on top, 49-48. Dwayne McClain, who had been scoreless in the first half, threw in a few to add nine second half points.

Villanova's biggest lead of the game came at 1:13 on two of Dobbs' free throws. Wennington's basket with 22 seconds left brought St. John's to within two at 64-62. Pressley was then fouled and missed the front end of a one and one. The Redmen got the ball up to Mullin who then fired up his jumper.

Villanova, together with the win against Syracuse, is now 11-8 overall winning eight out of the last nine games. They have also won six straight games in the Big East.

Head Coach Rollie Massimino

"Anytime you can get a win up here against a team like St. John's and a coach like Louie, it has to be a great one."

Massimino was quoted as saying: "Anytime you can get a win up here against a team like St. John's and a coach like Louie (Carnesecca), it has to be a great one."

The win denied Carnesecca the right to become the all-time winningest coach at St. John's.

Frank "Happy" Dobbs led the scoring for Villanova again, as he went 6-12 from the floor and a perfect 4-4 from the line. Harold

Men Run At Jadwin

By PAUL MACCHIA

The Villanova men's track team competed last Sunday in the 13th Annual Princeton Indoor Relays at the Jadwin Gymnasium in Princeton, N.J. The Cats kept the entries small with two relay teams and one open event.

Martin Booker, hurdler and quarter-miler, was entered in one event rather than the usual three. Booker placed fourth in the 55-meter hurdles with a time of 7.43, finishing behind Jack Pierce of Morgan State and Tommie Novake and Barry McClain, both from Seton Hall.

In the two-mile relay, the Cats finished fourth in a time of 7:46.13, behind Army, Rutgers, and Iona. Freshman Steve Gallagher (1:58.5), Brian O'Keefe (1:54.9), Tony O'Reilly (1.59.9) and Sean O'Neill (1:52.9) composed the team.

The Wildcats once again took first place in the event they are most noted for - the distance medley relay. Kevin Davis (1:54.6), Chip Jenkins (49.7), John Keyworth (2:58.9) and Marcus O'Sullivan put their talents together along with smooth baton passing to edge Dartmouth 9:49.20 to 9:49.73.

This weekend the Cats will be splitting the team between two meets, the Vitales Olympic Invitational at the Meadowlands and the Husker Invitational in Lincoln, Nebraska.

Skaters Split Pair on Ice

Huston Sparks Icecats

By TOM KOLON

This weekend, the Villanova ice hockey team split a pair of games to bring its overall record to 6-12-2 in what has been a rollercoaster season.

On Saturday, the Icecats hosted Upsala in a Division III matchup and wound up on the short end of a 5-2 verdict. In a game fraught with penalties and questionable officiating, Upsala jumped out to an early lead. By the end of the first period, Upsala had skated to a 3-1 edge. The lone Nova score was tallied by defenseman Jamie Huston, assisted by Frank Segreto and Steve Thorley.

Upsala added another goal at the end of the second period and slipped in yet one more to start the third. Villanova was finally able to answer back midway through the final period as freshman Brian O'Connor dumped one in on a pass from Bob Giordano. The loss left Nova with still only one victory in Division III competition.

The Icecats traveled to the Penn rink on Sunday to meet West Chester University. This time the squad seemed to have the right magic as they were able to draw first blood.

Rookie Glenn Smith blasted a slapshot on a pass from Paul Critchley for a 1-0 lead on a power play. West Chester then bounced back to tie it up at the end of one period.

While the Cats were shorthanded in the second period, Huston passed to Segreto as he was breaking away from the defense. Bearing down one-on-one with the goalie, Segreto made all the right moves and gave Villanova a lead which they never relinquished.

The 2-1 victory raised the hopes of the team as they approach the MACAC playoffs. Coach Skip Probst commented that they've had "... good goaltending and defense. But we just haven't been able to put the puck in the net. We never took advantage of all the opportunities we had for rebounds against West Chester."

There were numerous game this season that Villanova let sli away in the final three minutes Had they been able to snatch victory from the jaws of defea they might be sporting a 7-6 recor in Division III. Stating that th team has remained close with majority of its competitors, Probs is looking forward to a more exp rienced squad next year and som recruits that could be real ey catchers.

Women Beat Temple

By LAURA FORTUNATO

The Villanova women's swimming team defeated Temple University, 75-64. The women won nine events; six of the events included both first and second place finishes. The 200-meter freestyle first place was won by Anne Murphy, 1:59.0, and second place by Lynn Nelson in a time 2:01.1. Beth Metzger won the 50-meter backstroke in 29.21, with Sue Adams clocking a 31.0 and a second place. Metzger then teamed up with Genny Mulderig in the 200-meter backstroke, winning with a time of 2:13.8, with Mulderig clocking in at 2:15.9. Again Metzger placed first in the 50-meter butterfly in 27.6, with second place going by Anne Murphy.

Junior Genny Mulderig

Mulderig won the 200-meter individual medley in 2:19.5, with Lynn Nelson's second-place finish at 2:20.1. McFadden and Nelson dominated the 500-meter freestyle, with respective times of 5:05.9 and 5:24.10. McFadden also won the 1000-meter freestyle 10:14.5, and Lori Bukaty won the one-M optional diving.

To date Lisa McFadden has tallied an outstanding record of 26 wins, and is on a 19-event winning streak. Winning three events at Temple, Beth Metzger has totaled 16 wins. Outstanding freshman Anne Murphy has tallied an impressive record of 11 winning events.

The women are 7-3 as they enter the final few weeks of their season. They will travel to Pittsburgh for the Big East Swimming Championships Feb. 15 through the 19th.

Swimmers Remain Hot

By JUDY ROGERS

The Villanova men's swim team is sporting a record of 10-3 with regular season coming to a close this week. The Cats had two wins in the past week, beating Temple 57-56 and St. John's 74-38.

On Feb. 1, at Temple, Villanova came from behind to win a tough meet that was literally a race to the finish. Villanova sophomore swimmer John Gargula, admitted, "A lot of people on our team didn't expect them to be so tough."

That misconception may have been fostered by the fact that Temple didn't enter anyone in the first event, the Medley Relay, which gave Villanova an easy first place. For the rest of the meet, the two teams were neck and neck, until the Wildcat freestyle relay team of Gargula, Matt McKean, Keith Donahue and Jack Hallahan took first place in the last event to give Villanova the win. Temple was using only eight to nine swimmers, but "they used their swimmers very well," noted Wildcat Pete Maloney. "This meet woke us up; we were lucky to get out of there with a win."

The meet at home against St. John's on Feb. 4 was a whole different story. This time "we thought it would be a tough meet, but it wasn't. We needed that," said Gargula. The meet gave Villanova a chance to switch their lineup around in preparation for the Big East.

Until the Big East Tournament in mid-February, the Cats will taper their workouts. "We'll go from swimming long distances to short, letting everybody heal. We'll work on detail things."

Puzzle Answer

On the sidelines

By MARY AGNES MATYSZEWSKI

Thanks, Mom and Dad

As Valentine's Day draws near, people's thoughts turn to loved ones and people we hold most dear. Included among these categories we would have to consider Mom and Dad. And, for the many of us who have participated in athletic activities, our parents take on an even greater role. For it was they who encouraged us when we first began to pursue the sports. No matter what event it was, they sat on the sidelines and rooted us on.

They picked us up from our many practices and many a night sat in the dark, cold car because the coach decided to keep us an extra half-hour to work on wind-sprints. When our teams did poorly and we were a disheartened and dejected lot, Mom and Dad were right there with a hug and a kiss and words of encouragement. And they really felt for us. They suffered along with us the pain of losing the state championship by one goal or being eliminated from the playoffs because of a missed basket. But besides the comfort and concern, our parents offered us some valuable advice. Some of the more important lessons they taught us were not to dwell on our losses. Rather, we should learn from our mistakes and apply this knowledge to our next contest. More importantly, Mom and Dad taught us that one loss won't make or break us for life and that as long as we had tried our best that was all anyone could ask of us.

Even better than the lessons and the comfort, Mom and Dad were also there to share the victories, as well. They yelled until they were hoarse to root us on to the state championship and they were very proud when we broke the school records. I remember them standing in the bitter November cold as my field hockey team won the Housatonic Title and how proud they were when I broke the most goals scored during the season record. They came to all my gymnastic meets, they cheered at my ski races, supported me through track and swimming, celebrated with me when our softball team became town champs, and joined in the crusade to get our girls' basketball team started. Through whatever sport I pursued, Mom and Dad were right there to share the laurels and photograph the trophies.

So when now, as thoughts turn to love, I'd like to thank you, Mom and Dad, for all the love and support that you have shown through the years. Thank you for your patience and persistence through all the practices, your shoulder to lean on when times got tough, your hugs for the loser and your hugs for the winner, your joy for our victories, your hosting of the parties, your car pools to the games, your team dinners and just your plain being there to share in my activities and interests. For this I thank you and I love you.

Good Luck to all the participants in tonight's

DIRECTORY LISTS SUMMER JOBS

BARNSTABLE, Mass.— The seaside resort areas of Cape Cod, Massachusetts and the off-shore islands of Nantucket and Martha's Vineyard are experiencing a growing problem in finding enough college workers to adequately service a rapidly expanding tourist industry.

This summer Cape Cod and the Islands will be offering over 55,000 good paying jobs to college students and teachers. Many of these jobs require little or no prior experience.

Because it is impossible to fill these jobs with local residents, most of whom make up the year 'round work force, it is necessary to draw from other geographic areas to satisfy this seasonal need.

Jobs for Students and Teachers

The Cape Cod Summer Job Bureau gathers all pertinent facts on available summer employment and publishes this information in a concise Job Directory which is available to college students and teachers by February 1st each year.

Names and addresses of individual seasonal employers are listed in separate job categories from bartenders to yacht crews.

The Job Bureau is a service agency, and therefore charges no fees to employers or employees.

An easy-to-use job application form, which is now familiar to the local employer, is included with the Directory along with important tips on how to land a good summer job.

Housing Information Included

This year the Job Directory has a section devoted to seasonal housing which lists addresses of people who lease rooms, efficiencies, cottages, apartments, and group rentals.

A useful reference map of the area is included as is a summary of educational opportunities for college credit, and cultural classes in the arts.

For a copy of the 1984 Directory send $3 (includes 1st Class Postage & handling) to: Cape Cod Summer Job Bureau, Box 594, Barnstable, MA 02630.

McClain & Cats Squeeze Orange

By MICHAEL F. IRONS

Thank God for Dwayne McClain. For the second straight Sunday, McClain has scored a basket with only three seconds remaining to give Villanova a victory, this time over the Orangemen of Syracuse. He hit a 12-foot jump shot to break a 75-75 tie and put Syracuse (11-8) in a second place tie in the Big East with a 7-2 record.

The win marked the first time this year that the Cats have won while allowing over 70 points in a game.

McClain opened the game the same way he ended it: with a short outside jumper. This started a quick 6-0 Nova spurt to take an early lead. The Cats continually beat the Syracuse press all day to get an easy hoop or pick up a foul. The Orangemen pressed for almost the whole game but only got two five-second calls for their trouble.

Good ball movement by Nova to find the open man burned the Syracuse zone time and time again.

Meanwhile, Villanova played extremely rough defense and forced Syracuse to take its only option: the outside jump shot.

After Wendell Alexis came off the bench to hit three from the outside to make it 22-15 VU, Syracuse's sensational freshman Dwayne "the Pearl" Washington caught on fire. Washington hit three hoops after a Harold Pressley basket to make the score 24-23 VU.

The rest of the first half was marked by both teams trading hoops, capped by a fantastic Ed Pinckney jam. Villanova took the lead into the locker room on a three-point play by Pinckney, which made the score 39-38 at the half.

The Orangemen took the lead to open the second half on an Andre Hawkins' bank shot from the right. Villanova then ran off seven unanswered points to open a 46-40 lead three minutes into the period. However, Alexis and Washington brought Syracuse right back as they did whenever the Cats tried to break the game open.

After referee Pete Pavia had to leave because of a knee injury, Washington brought the Orangemen to within one, 52-51. Once again, Nova tried to shake off the persistent visitors with a 9-2 run sparked by a great Pinckney inside move for a three-point play. After one of the many official timeouts, which Syracuse needed to reorganize, Dwayne McClain took a nice feed from Pressley for the layup to boost the score to 61-53 with 11 minutes left.

During the next 11 minutes, Washington would score 12 points, including ten in a row to set up the last second heroics by McClain. While Washington was putting on his show, Villanova missed three front ends of one and ones in the dying minutes of the game. It was Greg Monroe who tied the game at 75 with :52 seconds to go, followed by a Nova time out. But McClain got the ball on the left side, fired up and hit nothing but net.

Washington finished with 27 points, followed by Alexis with 21 for the Orangemen. Villanova was led by a well-balanced attack, as all five starters scored in double figures. McClain led the Cats with 18, followed by Pinckney (16 points, six rebounds and a season high of four rejects), and Gary McClain (14), who tied his season high of ten assists.

"The key to the game was our defense; the kids played great and showed a lot of character," praised Coach Massimino after the game. "They deserve a tremendous amount of credit to battle back from 3-7 to where we are now at 11-8; the season could end now and I would be satisfied."

Women Make Orange Juice

By BOB HELLER

Women's basketball is very much alive and well at Villanova. Last weekend the Wildcats overcame a 12-point deficit in the second half and rallied to beat the Orangewomen of Syracuse in overtime, 77-72, for their 15th victory against just five losses.

The Wildcats entered this Big East Conference game with a league record of 3-2. Both teams exchanged baskets in the first few minutes of play with Syracuse having the slight advantage. The Wildcats continued to put pressure on the Orange forcing them to turn over the ball. The Cats capitalized on Orange mistakes to take a five-point lead with nine minutes left in the first half.

This lead was short-lived, however, as the Wildcats had some defensive lapses and mental errors, enabling Syracuse to come back and take seven-point lead, 34-27 as the first half came to a close.

After an explosive halftime talk, coach Harry Perretta's Wildcats cut Syracuse's lead in half before the Orangewomen opened up the lead again. The Wildcats were trailing by as many as 13 points halfway through the second half, prompting a Wildcat timeout.

During the timeout, Perretta decided to go with Shelly (Pennefeather) and a man-to-man defense. The team did not try to get it all back at once. Nancy Bernhardt tied the score with about three minutes left.

"We felt that after Nancy tied the score, we had a chance to win in regulation," commented assistant coach Andy McGovern.

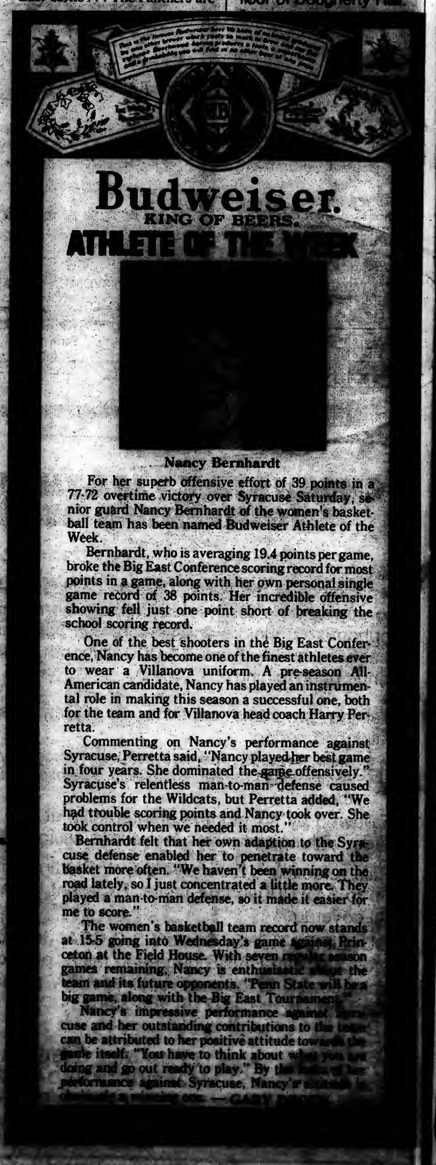
Villanova then took a four-point lead but Syracuse had enough life in them to tie the game at 62-62 and send it into overtime.

"If we continue to play well, we have a shot at finishing high in the Big East standings."

Villanova jumped out to a quick 68-64 lead in the overtime. With a stoppage of play, Perretta put in his offensive unit. The Wildcats promptly scored as Nova's Lynn Tighe promptly stole the Syracuse inbounds pass and took the ball to the hoop giving the Wildcats a 72-64 lead. Villanova continued to play well and went on to win 77-72 upping their conference record to 4-2.

The Wildcats' leading scorer was Nancy Bernhardt with 39 points. This was one point short of the school record of 40, held by Lisa Ortlip. "Nancy had one of the finest games of her career," commented McGovern. Bernhardt's 17 free throws set both a school and Big East conference record.

"It was a great comeback. We played a proud, good Syracuse team," stated McGovern. "If we continue to play well, we have a shot at finishing high in the Big East standing and at winning the title in the Big East Tournament.



Nancy Bernhardt

For her superb offensive effort of 39 points in a 77-72 overtime victory over Syracuse Saturday, senior guard Nancy Bernhardt of the women's basketball team has been named Budweiser Athlete of the Week.

Bernhardt, who is averaging 19.4 points per game, broke the Big East Conference scoring record for most points in a game, along with her own personal single game record of 38 points. Her incredible offensive showing fell just one point short of breaking the school scoring record.

One of the best shooters in the Big East Conference, Nancy has become one of the finest athletes ever to wear a Villanova uniform. A pre-season All-American candidate, Nancy has played an instrumental role in making this season a successful one, both for the team and for Villanova head coach Harry Perretta.

Commenting on Nancy's performance against Syracuse, Perretta said, "Nancy played her best game in four years. She dominated the game offensively." Syracuse's relentless man-to-man defense caused problems for the Wildcats, but Perretta added, "We had trouble scoring points and Nancy took over. She took control when we needed it most."

Bernhardt felt that her own adaption to the Syracuse defense enabled her to penetrate toward the basket more often. "We haven't been winning on the road lately, so I just concentrated a little more. They played a man-to-man defense, so it made it easier for me to score."

The women's basketball team record now stands at 15-5 going into Wednesday's game against Princeton at the Field House. With seven regular season games remaining, Nancy is enthusiastic about the team and its future opponents. "Penn State will be a big game, along with the Big East Tournament."

Nancy's impressive performance against Syracuse and her outstanding contributions to the team can be attributed to her positive attitude towards the game itself. "You have to think about what you are doing and go out ready to play." By the [illegible] her performance against Syracuse, Nancy's attitude is [illegible]

Students Arrested in Police Raid

By ROBERT M. JORDAN

Approximately 30 Villanova students were arrested for underage drinking during a raid on the Sugartown Mews apartment complex on Feb. 24.

According to the Tredyffrin Township Police Department, several Sugartown Mews tenants had telephoned the police to complain about the loud music and noise coming from "I" building. Upon arriving, the police found that several parties were taking place within the building and on the grounds.

Partygoers who could not prove that they were of legal drinking age were rounded up, arrested and charged. The lessees of the apartments where liquor was served were also arrested and charged along with the participants.

A student who attended one of the parties, and who requested anonymity, said that the police were well-organized in their 10:30 p.m. raid. "Uniformed policemen had surrounded the building and blocked all the exits so no one could get out.

"Plainclothes Liquor Control Board (LCB) men checked the ages of the people as they left the parties. At the party I was attending, there were 100 people in the apartment."

The student added that out of the several parties going on, two were "rush" parties. One was for the Alpha Chi Omega sorority and the other for the Zeta Psi fraternity.

Lt. Brown of the Tredyffrin Police Department said the incident was not a raid because the students knew it was coming. "We had been there earlier acting on several noise complains but we were ignored. When I saw the magnitude of the situation, I called in plainclothes and uniformed policemen. The LCB was not involved."

The fact that 98 people were counted in one apartment alone disturbed the police because of the fire and safety hazards. Brown said that "I" building was the main problem, although parties were going on in both "I" and "R," the two student buildings. The lieutenant said, "I appreciated the cooperation of the nice young people at R building."

Betty Lou Spector, manager of the complex at Sugartown and Avon Roads in Devon, felt that this year was going smoothly until the incident. She revealed that the 75 student apartments in the two student buildings are predominantly rented by Villanova students.

Spector sent a letter to all of the student residents at Sugartown Mews expressing her displeasure over the episode. "I realize there are two sides to every story, but . . . I cannot and will not have this adverse publicity."

The fact that some of the parties made their guests pay for admittance was noted for further reference. "May I also bring to your attention that charging for entry to a party is illegal and creates an uncontrollable situation," the letter said.

Spector said that another prob-

Committee Named to Select Coach

By JOSEPH MARUSAK

University President John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., has announced the formation of a three-man screening committee to select a head football coach at Villanova.

The committee, comprised of Athletic Director Theodore A. Aceto, trustee Arthur J. Kania and former Philadelphia Eagles' general manager Jim Murray, is expected to reach a decision on the coaching position by the end of May.

The three members, all Villanova alumni, will work in conjunction with Driscoll and the Board of Trustees' Committee on Athletics in making the final selection.

At the same time, Driscoll released a timetable for the program. He said that the team will play abbreviated schedules in both 1985 and 1986, with a full NCAA Division I-AA schedule following in 1987.

"Our initial thrust would be 1985," said Aceto, the screening committee chairman. "It would be a phase-in-type schedule where we might only play, let's say, five or six Division III teams and, the following year, play maybe six or seven games. Then we would build up to 10, and that would be the maximum games we would play."

"We feel that we can be reasonably competitive from the word 'go,'" said Kania, "but that it will still be several years before we have the program where it should be."

According to Aceto, the head coach selecting process has already started. The newly-formed committee, he said, began advertising the position March 14 in certain national publications and has set a March 28 deadline for applications.

"We're allowing two weeks for people to apply, and then we will be interviewing in April," Aceto explained.

"We can do some interviewing now, however. We've had 72 applicants who have applied without the job being posted. The screening committee can review these and maybe come up with a number of people to interview there to start the process. And then we will do the same thing when the next batch comes in on March 28."

Aceto commented that, by its very nature, the head coach job description should immediately eliminate a number of applicants.

"The job profile does that," he said. "If you look at the profile that's out there, you'll see they're asking for someone with collegiate experience . . . A third of the applications which have come in are from high school coaches with no such background.

"I would think the key is someone who has experience on the I-AA level and generally has experience in recruiting student-athletes based on need. That would cut it down even more."

Selecting a head coach, however, is just one of several assignments facing the University as the football implementation process gets underway.

For instance, scheduling opponents presents problems of its own, Aceto indicated. Most colleges normally make scheduling

Prof Did Research for CIA

By LEONARD J. LA BARTH

Political science professor Dr. Justin Green worked for the Central Intelligence Agency in 1983 as a consultant, participating in a study of political stability in the Philippines.

In a recently published article in The Progressive magazine, it was reported that Green was hired through the New York-based consulting agency of Booz, Allen & Hamilton, Inc., to research intensification of the political crisis of the Marcos regime and to aid in identifying U.S. policy options in the strife-torn country. Green, who sent questionnaires to fellow scholars seeking information about the Philippines, reportedly did not reveal to them that he was in the CIA's employ.

In 1982, the CIA hired Booz, Allen & Hamilton, Inc., to contact a number of prominent Philippine specialists. In February 1983, Green allegedly began distributing questionnaires to fellow scholars. In none of the requests for information did Green mention his CIA ties, according to the article.

Mark Berman, director of marketing communications for the consulting firm, would not confirm Green's employment with the company, but indirectly admitted that the CIA had hired the firm.

"Our policy is not to reveal the nature of customer-client relationships. It doesn't matter if it's the CIA or RCA; it is a firm policy that we do not violate," said Berman.

In an initial interview, a CIA representative confirmed the agency's use of professors' expertise in the Philippines, but explained that it was a common practice.

Dr. Justin Green of the political science department.

"It's not unusual for the CIA to tap into information available on campuses," said Dale Peterson of the CIA's Public Affairs and Information Department. "There are close relationships between the CIA and many campuses, dealing with a variety of topics.

"The CIA is like a university," said Peterson. "We have more Ph.D.'s than any other government agency. We are like a scholarly community."

Peterson said that the CIA usually deals directly with the universities and their professors. When asked why the CIA used a consulting firm in this case, Peterson confessed ignorance and said he would check into it.

In a subsequent interview, Peterson would not confirm the CIA's relationship with Booz, Allen & Hamilton, Inc., nor the CIA's use of Green.

"We prefer not to comment on any of this," said Peterson.

Green himself refused to comment or grant an interview on the article, only stating that The Progressive was wrong and his quotes were "taken out of context."

Dance Tribute

A tribute concert will be held at 8:15 p.m. tomorrow at Swarthmore College for Patricia Boyer, one of the founders of the Philadelphia Dance Alliance, who suffered a cerebral aneurism in February 1983.

The concert is being sponsored by Swarthmore's dance program and will feature friends, students, music and dance faculty of Boyer's. In conjunction with this, a fund will be started which will go toward her continued financial support.

The performance is being held in Clothier Memorial Hall and will be followed by a reception.

Black Cultural Society

The Black Cultural Society would like to extend its appreciation to all Villanovans who supported our 4th Annual Awards Luncheon, the Fun Night Show, the Black and White Dialogue and the other Black History Activities.

The next event scheduled is a party to be held on March 16 in the West Lounge of Dougherty, from 8 p.m. to 1 a.m. Come support us!!

Austin Council President Resigns

By GARY R. DYER

Andrew Wozniak has resigned from his position as Austin Hall House Council President on the request of East Area Coordinator Barbara McGraw and Assistant Director of Residence Life John Eccles.

"He was asked to resign from the position," said McGraw, "and that was because of the problems that occurred at the Feb. 18 party, where people were let into the party without tickets. It's the responsibility of the House Council President to abide by the guidelines set up."

"If tickets are sold in advance, and people who don't have tickets are let into a party, then he hasn't lived up to those responsibilities," McGraw explained.

Wozniak declined to comment to the Villanovan on the matter.

Vice President Liam Sweeney assumes the vacant position.

"It was a decision we made regarding leadership," commented Christopher Janosik, director of Residence Life. "In general, we don't discuss these things in public. It's better that way, when it's between us, who put the organizations and the organizations we monitor."

The Rev. John Stack, O.S.A., dean of students.

Residence Life did not receive any complaint from the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, who had stated to the Villanovan that the incident at the Feb. 18 party would affect Austin's chances of getting permission to have other parties.

"We wouldn't expect [a complaint from the Dean's office]," said Janosik. "Our advisors should be aware of what's happening with their groups."

Stack said that he had not made any formal complaint to the Residence Life office. "If a person were moderating a party and the Hall Council was causing problems he could report back to Residence Life. I didn't do that."

"Certainly Residence Life heard about it," Stack commented. "I think the word just got around that I was upset.

"I don't know what all their reasons were for asking him to step down," Stack said. "I would not have asked him to resign just as a result of that party.

"It's difficult enough when there are people who are trying to sneak into these things," Stack explained, "but when the people running it are the ones letting it happen, then we're back in the position where we won't have those kinds of events.

"I wouldn't close the door on Austin parties just because one person was not acting responsibly," Stack said. "It won't stop Austin from having parties in the future, but we're certainly going to expect more cooperation or there won't be any more.

"You need a staff person to be present at a party, and they couldn't get someone, so I agreed," Stack explained. "I don't mind putting the time in, but when they had asked me to be at the door and then the guy who asked me to do that is taking people around to the back door, you can understand me getting a little upset."

Stack said that the only direct action he could have taken would have been to close the party, have the organizers give back the people's money, forcing Austin to absorb the loss. "But the party itself was going well. There was no problem with people at the party. It was only maybe five or six kids that Andy took around the back way.

Green's Work for CIA

In the article, Green reportedly wrote to one colleague, "I don't feel guilty taking CIA money to further a legitimate scholarly endeavor." Subsequently, Green supposedly expressed a change of heart, writing, "There is a snake in the garden of Eden and I think we must exorcise it."

Green said that everything he did was open and that only those understanding political risk analysis could comprehend the work.

Green's work in fulfillment of contract No. 82F769400 is titled "Analysis of Political Instability In The Philippines: Measures, Assessments, and Applications." This completed report submitted to the consulting firm numbers several hundred pages in which Green is listed as one of two principal investigators.

The analysis is to be regarded as a "window on the present," according to the authors, who write in the report that they have addressed the question "what . . . if" and document the potential volatility of alternative futures in the Philippines.

The analysis includes assessments of the various factions vying for power in the country. The study reports that the assumption that the Filippino government is in disarray because of the assassination of opposition leader Benigno Aquino is unwarranted.

One of the questionnaires Green supposedly distributed to a fellow professor read, "I am asking for scholarly help where you feel you can help as a fellow scholar . . . by answering the following question, you will be providing information on the NPA that we have not been able to find elsewhere."

Green further attempted to elicit information on the country by arranging a special panel at a conference last year. A number of prominent experts on the Philippines were invited. Again, Green reportedly did not reveal his part in the CIA-backed research. The panel did not materialize and Green's work was revealed, whereupon he acknowledged his role.

The Rev. John P. O'Malley, O.S.A., dean of the college of Arts and Sciences, said he was aware of Green's work "from the beginning."

"Dr. Green notified me of the CIA offer and kept me apprised both before and during his work," said O'Malley. "It is necessary that all faculty tell the various deans of their outside work."

The Faculty Handbook includes guidelines for outside professional work by any of Villanova's faculty: "The University reserves the right . . . to limit the outside professional activities of any faculty member when these, in judgment of the University, interfere with the proper performance of his full-time duties at the University."

O'Malley would not comment on the article or the accusations that Green did not tell his fellow scholars of his work, but did speculate on why Green possibly did not.

"It's possible that he did not want to bias his work," said O'Malley. "If you tell people that you're doing it for the CIA, bells go off.

"Universities are in a marketplace," continued O'Malley. "Private universities are supported by individuals who want the faculty and students to make an impact on the world. This means encouraging more and more research for the faculty to make them more aware of what's going on out there."

Recent Philippine History

Eighteen years of power wielded by Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos have resulted in a country torn by political strife, scrambling for survival — broke. The United States has supported Marcos completely since martial law was declared in 1972. Because of this relationship, the regime has been referred to as a "U.S.-Marcos dictatorship."

In 1983, the country's economy took a sharp nose dive and the government took several measures: the peso was devalued for a second time and a moratorium was declared on debt repayment to other nations. The Central Bank's foreign exchange went from $2 billion to $400 million in ten weeks. Low monetary returns from the coconut, sugar and copper exports, coupled with high oil prices, led to a downhill economic slide. With a national foreign debt of $24 million, the Philippines appeared a nation in serious trouble in 1983.

In August, Benigno Aquino, Marco's main political rival, was assassinated at the Manila airport as he returned from political exile. In June, Aquino had appeared before the House Subcommittee on Asia-Pacific affairs and announced he would return to the Philippines "to press for two-man negotiations with Marcos for a return to constitutional democracy" before it was too late. Aquino's murder, rumored to be ordered by Marcos, has led to an even greater opposition to the Marcos government

Reaction to New Biscayne Name

By JOSEPH MARUSAK

Several University officials, including President John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., have expressed displeasure with Biscayne College's decision to change its name to St. Thomas of Villanova University Feb. 1, and some are reportedly trying to reverse that very move by the Miami, Fla., school.

Simultaneously, several of these officials have rebuked a Feb. 24 Villanovan editorial claim that, as a result of the name switch, "the alumni and students of Villanova University, the one founded in 1842, have been given the shaft by the Augustinian order."

"I was not in favor of the move," Driscoll said in a March 1 interview. "There will be some confusion in the mind of the public because of the similarity . . . We can object on the basis of misuse of the name."

Driscoll, a St. Thomas of Villanova Board of Trustee member, said "there's a chance" that a name re-change could occur, as discussions on the matter have already taken place. "There will be more meetings in the future," he remarked, without indicating exactly who was involved in the dialogue.

As those talks take place, others at this University continue to react against the name change. On Feb. 27, the Executive Committee of the Villanova Chapter of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) passed a motion which read:

"In view of the recently proposed name change of Biscayne College, the Executive Committee of the Villanova Chapter of the American Association of University Professors strongly urges the Chairman and Board of Trustees of Villanova University (Pa.) to pursue whatever action will produce the change necessary to safeguard and protect the heritage, tradition and unique identity that was developed at Villanova University (Pa.) in the last one hundred forty-two years.

"Preventing confusion rather than creating it strikes us as the obligation of responsible academic communities."

Dr. Sterling F. Delano, an assistant professor of English at this university, also disagrees with the Biscayne move. Delano, who taught at the Miami school in Spring 1980 as a humanities exchange professor, said "It is certainly outrageous. It's clearly an attempt to exploit our heritage and tradition by the president and Board of Trustees [of St. Tho-commitments years in advance, and for such schools to accommodate another opponent on so short a notice is not easily accomplished.

"The most difficult thing to put together in formulating this program is scheduling," said Aceto. "The key is who's available to play. It's the toughest challenge we'll have."

The situation could be alleviated if Villanova were to join a conference, according to Kania. "I don't think scheduling will be a problem if we do decide to enter one. We [the Committee on Athletics] have pretty much concluded that the preference would be to compete in a conference."

A decision on whether Villanova will eventually enter a league, such as the Colonial or Yankee conference, "will probably be reached within the next few months," Kania said. It would probably occur around the time of the head coach selection.

In the more immediate future, Villanova — through Aceto — will petition the NCAA by letter for Division I-AA status for the football program.

For a school to be recognized as a Division I-AA member, it must play more than half of its season's games against Division I-AA teams, according to Aceto.

"We're going to be asking for a waiver . . . that maybe the first year I might not be able to get enough I-AA teams. By 1987, though, we should be fully there," he said.

Student-athletes in the program will receive financial aid based on need, according to Driscoll's March 1 announcement.

Pool Permanently Closed

The Field House pool.

The Field House pool was permanently closed the week before spring break as a result of "construction complications," according to Villanova's director of construction, William Clause.

The closing followed a meeting held the previous week among Clause, Athletic Director Dr. Theodore A. Aceto, Women's Athletic Coordinator Mary Ann Steenrod and Director of Intramurals Ed Geisz.

With the pool's closing, construction can now begin on the locker rooms planned for the site where the pool is now located. The new natatorium, to be built simultaneously, will be connected to the existing field house through this locker room facility, according to those present at the meeting.

They also indicated that the expected completion date for the two projects is December of this year.

Until then, all those previously using the field house pool will have to switch to St. Mary's facility, according to Aceto.

Correction

In the Feb. 24 issue's front-page story, "Rank and Tenure Clarified," there was an error in listing the members of the Administrative Rank and Tenure Committee. That body consists of the vice president for Academic Affairs, the six academic deans, and six faculty members who serve at the pleasure of President John M. Driscoll, O.S.A.

The Right Moves

Finally, we're getting somewhere with football.

University President John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., announced on March 1 the formation of a special screening committee to select a head football coach at Villanova. The committee, whose members include Athletic Director Dr. Theodore A. Aceto, trustee Arthur J. Kania and former Eagles' general manager Jim Murray, is now nationally advertising the position and is expected to reach a decision by the end of May.

To some, though, it has appeared that although progress is now being made, the University has been moving too slowly on this issue. For instance, the Board of Trustees' Committee on Athletics — responsible for working out the plans for the program's reinstatement — was formed back on Dec. 13, 1983, the very day that football got a second chance. And it took nearly two and a half months for that Committee to take its first step with the formation of the screening committee.

In addition, the football timetable recently established by the Committee on Athletics might seem unduly long for those concerned about plans for the program. The team will not actually start performing until 1985, and even then, the opponents will be of Division III caliber. Indeed, a full NCAA Division I-AA schedule will not find its way here until 1987. Can interest be so long sustained, one might ask?

However, there are certainly two sides to the argument. And the other way of viewing all this is to see the seemingly slow treading rather as a method of building a solid program.

We can be relatively sure, for example, that by May's end Villanova will have a top-flight coach at the program's helm. As Aceto explained, "I would think the key is someone who has experience on the I-AA level and generally has experience in recruiting student-athletes based on need." Furthermore, the screening committee, by so advertising across the country, will have a large — and most likely experienced — pool from which to choose.

Also, by being brought along so gradually, the football program should be quite competitive by 1987. As Aceto pointed out, the coach will begin recruiting in 1984. That gives him more than adequate time to build a team capable of challenging the top divisional squads.

In short, what now seems like a long wait should, in the end, prove most beneficial to the program.

Now that the implementation process has begun, one issue besides the head coach selecting process requires immediate attention — the possibility of conference play.

As Driscoll also indicated in his announcement, Villanova will compete initially as an independent. But the best way to solidify the program would be for the school to enter a conference.

Right now, according to Aceto, scheduling presents a significant problem for the football decision makers. Yet, as Kania noted, that could be alleviated if the school were to join such a league. Already, a couple have surfaced, but it is the Colonial League that would prove most advantageous to Villanova's revamped football program.

The group was formed in September 1983 among six Eastern colleges, all held in high academic regard: Bucknell, Colgate, Holy Cross, Lafayette, Lehigh and William and Mary. All the schools compete on the Division I-AA level and four give partial or full scholarships to athletes based on need — exactly what Villanova has set out to do.

We also like the way the schools in the group are thinking. As Lehigh President Peter Likins said in the New York Times back in September, "We are more than creating a football league. We are making a statement about intercollegiate football. The statement is that we believe the student-athlete should be representative of the student body. This means our athletes must measure up academically."

Villanova should join in that statement. By entering the Colonial League, it can only build a stronger program.

The Villanovan will print "Letters to the Editor" received prior to the deadline, Tuesday at 5 p.m. All letters must be signed, although the editors will withhold a name upon request. Because of limited space, not all letters can be printed.

Letters to the Editor

Thanks for the Legal Help

To the Editor:

There comes a time when one feels the need to express a public thank you to a person. There are also times when one likes to offer helpful advice to his fellow Villanovans. This is one of those times.

The person to whom I am referring is Dr. Sebastian Rainone, and the service that he offers to Villanova students is free legal advice.

On Dec. 27, after vacating the house that my roommates and I rented this past fall semester, we received a check for our security deposit from our former landlord. To be brief, he later stopped payment on the check and demanded we repair things in the house that he had previously agreed were not in need of repair. At this time we consulted Dr. Rainone and his advice was to take our landlord to small claims court.

Dr. Rainone helped us to prepare for the hearing by explaining strategies to use, how to use them, how to conduct ourselves, etc. The end result was that our Feb. 23 court date saw Judge Nicholas Sellars rule in our favor, hence ordering our landlord to restore our $450.

Very simply put, we owe our victory to Dr. Rainone. Without his help, we feel that we would not have acted correctly in court and we may not have won our case.

To anyone who has a problem with a landlord or any kind of legal hassle, please consult Dr. Rainone. His office is in the ground floor of Sheehan Hall, and he's there to help us.

Once again, Dr. Rainone, we couldn't have fought through all of the legal "trash" without you and on behalf of my roommates Tom Kolon, John Dinneen and Ed DeMarco, a very sincere thank you for all of your help.

'Biscayne'

To the Editor:

In his editorial "Mistaken Identity" in the Feb. 24 issue, James H. DeLorenzo writes, "The alumni and students of Villanova University, the one founded in 1842, have been given the shaft by the Augustinian Order." The name change at Biscayne College, in Miami, was the work of the Board of Trustees, not the Augustinian Order. Of the twenty Board members, only six are Augustinians. As an Augustinian Board member who opposed the move strenuously, I

Thoughts on Villanova

* Isn't it 93 days and counting since Villanova announced the return of football?

* As a graduate of Villanova University of Pennsylvania, I hope, to paraphrase Jim DeLorenzo's 2/24 editorial, I never have to respond to the musical question, "Which Villanova?"

* Aren't the University pundits a bit remiss in seeking only a 6,400-seat capacity for the much-heralded new coliseum? VU averaged over 8,000 in non-Big Five games at the Palestra, 15 miles, several dollars and tough parking from the Main Line. The Wildcats also drew 16,333 customers to the Spectrum for Georgetown.

* The Radnor Township "fathers," you say? Appeal to their sense of memory of their own college days. Did they look forward to going to their respective schools' home games? Did they enjoy the big home crowds and home court/home field advantage? Did their schools have to haggle and hassle with regional authorities to accommodate big crowds? Or are they that selfish.

* A final note on the Newhouse: the original VU "New Field House," proposed in 1964-5, called for nearly 11,000 seats and was passed by the Board of Trustees before getting the thumb from the Augustinian Chapter House, then the last court of appeals. Instead, they expanded the library.

Such Ultra Big-Time names as Virginia Commonwealth, Middle Tennessee and, yes, friends, you know it-you love it, 'ol Northeastern, will still have bigger seating capacities if VU sticks to the 6,400 figure. Let common sense prevail here. People want to see Big East and Villanova basketball.

* Isn't somebody on campus a little irritated that The New York Times' excellent education writer, Edward B. Fiske, didn't include Villanova in his Selective Guide to Colleges and Universities? He managed to cull up such household words as Sewanee (How I Love Ya), Bard (Where Everyone Speaks in Shakespearean Sonnets), Dull-aware and Kaintucky.

And no, bringing football back wouldn't hurt the Phi Beta Kappa campus presence one Gaudeamus Igitur. Ask people at other NCAA I-AA schools like Lehigh, William & Mary or Colgate.

* I know we have a large Pittsburgh student contingent, but the 'Burgh's David Lawrence Convention Center hosted a big college fair March 6-8 for over 300 schools, not including a certain Catholic university from suburban Philadelphia. It's good PR to show up not just here, but all over the country.

* Hasn't Rollie Massimino proven once and for all that he is a master of X's and O's? Ask Eddie Sutton, Dean Smith (1983) . . . or any Big East coach this year.

* And didn't Dick Weiss pick the Cats to finish 15-12 . . . and finish in the middle of the Big East?

* Before conducting burial rites for Vilanova's post-season, consider this: a year ago, another ambitious school went into the second season with its lost column in double-digits. Right, "Coach V?"

For sure, absolutely.

* Does it irk some of you to hear Villanova referred to as "An Eastern School?" Lumping us right in there with Seton Hall, Rutgers, St. John's, C.W. Post, Delaware, etc. Well, it ain't. Villanova has over 4,000 alumni living throughout the Sunbelt, over 2,000 living in America's heartland, several hundred in the Northwest . . . heck, close to a thousand in Western Pennsylvania.

Why is it, then that the school is still a little top-heavy with students from Philadelphia, New Jersey and Long Island? Put them together and you get barely five percent of the nation's population. Correct me if I'm wrong, but aren't there 50 states out there? The nation's largest archdiocese — 2.5 million souls — is in Chicago, an area where we've only just begun.

You can't put a price tag on the experience of running into people from Kansas, Minnesota, Texas, Florida, California or Washington state. This is what makes schools like Duke, Notre Dame, some Ivy League schools or Georgetown a total educational experience. We aren't St. John's. Are we?

* Wouldn't Flushing (NY) Holy Cross forward Derrick Chievous look great in Wildcat Blue? Losing 6-9 Gary Voce of NY Tolentine to the Golden Dome, it turns out, may not be such a big deal. "He's been a real stiff this year," says one knowledgeable and true-blue New York Wildcat. "Digger will bury him on the end of the bench."

* Pitt's Roy Chipman is still turning cartwheels on request after beating out the Cats for Bridgeport (CT) Harding's Charlie Smith, but the acquisition of

New Security Director Named

By GARY R. DYER

Chief Rowan Kelly this week assumed his duties as the University's new director of Security. He succeeded Sgt. John Harrity, who had served as acting director of Security since the resignation of Captain Joseph Cunnane, who resigned Oct. 31, 1982.

Kelly served for 20 years with the New York City Police Department, and for two and a half years as director of Security at St. Joseph's University.

On the current state of Security, Kelly stated, "I prefer to get as much input as I can, be it good, bad or indifferent, and then to make up my own mind.

"Our facilities are not too functional at the present time," Kelly pointed out. "Any plans to move us to a larger place are not finalized. As it stands now, the officers have no place to change. They either come to work in their uniforms or bring them in their car trunks and change in the men's room.

"It doesn't give anyone a sense of belonging to work out of the trunk of a car," Kelly said. "Hopefully, that will be rectified in the near future."

Kelly sent out questionnaires to the more than fifty security officers before assuming the duties of his new position. "Our job is to protect life and property," Kelly explained. "This is a beginning to establishing some esprit de corps." The questionnaire asked officers about their morale and asked for suggestions. "If there are any ideas we use at a later date, they'll be given full credit."

Student Cited for Underage Drinking

A Villanova student was cited and charged with underage drinking in the early morning of March 1.

The student, 20 years of age, a junior, was in a Toyota pickup truck that pulled up to North Ithan gate at 2:40 a.m., according to Villanova Security. There were two other men and a woman in the vehicle. After they were denied entrance onto the campus, allegedly left the vehiucle and approached the Security officers.

Radnor police were summoned and he was issued a citation.

"Whatever the police do, we still have jurisdiction to take action against an individual," said Joseph Burke, judicial affairs officer. "Disorderly conduct is against the code of conduct, so that's where we would intervene. He's a Villanova student and it happened on Villanova property.

"I'll follow up on it by talking to the student who was involved."

lem with parties is the unbearable parking situations they create.

"People park wherever they feel like," she said, "and that night they blocked the access road in the back of the complex. Rescue vehicles wouldn't be able to get through."

A voluntary, in-house task force is being organized among the student residents to reduce the chances of future conflicts with the management and police.

Spector reiterated that she would not tolerate underage drinking and public disturbances. As to what she would do in the future regarding such problems, she said bluntly, "You are all aware of the difficulty with securing student housing. I find it hard to believe that many of you feel comfortable putting your housing in jeopardy."

Brown said that his police department "intends to enforce the laws to the absolute hilt." In the Supervisors Investigative Services department is acting with District Justice Armand Fiumara to enforce these, assessed the maximum fine of $300 plus court costs.

"They know the time," Brown said. "The next time there's a party like that, we're going to rent a bus and arrest the whole crowd!"

LCB Shuts Down Kelly's

Kelly's, the popular social gathering place of Villanova upperclassmen, was forced to shut down for five days by the Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board (LCB). "They were cited for serving minors," stated Felix Phau, Esq., attorney for the Pennsylvania LCB.

According to Phau, Kelly's has two prior citations, both in 1980. The first was for serving minors and the other for issuing worthless checks to liquor companies. Both penalties were fines; the first was $250 and the second $200.

Phau explained, "Some places, you suspend them and they get hurt. Some would prefer suspension; they can do renovations. Liquor Code Penalties are intended so that suspension be the harsher penalty."

Kelly's had no choice on being suspended, Phau revealed. "They appealed the suspension." Their appeal was turned down and they were forced to close down the five days.

Kelly's has since reopened.

Nominations Accepted For Lindback Awards

Seniors, juniors and sophomores in all undergraduate day colleges, as well as full-time faculty members of those colleges, will nominate candidates for the twenty-fourth annual Christian R. and Mary F. Lindback Foundation awards for distinguished teaching. Student voting for these nominations will be held on March 19 and March 20, from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. C&F students are asked to vote in the Bartley Hall cafeteria; engineering students will vote in the Dean's office, College of Engineering; arts and science students and nursing students will vote in the main lobby of Connelly Center. Any student unable to vote from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. on one of these two days may vote in Connelly Center on March 19, from 7 p.m. to 8 p.m. Faculty will vote by mail.

Voters will be invited to choose any three full-time faculty members who are not previous winners. The five candidates receiving the highest number of votes will be the official nominees for the Lindback awards. The president of the University will select two names from the list of five and designate them as winners of the 1984 Lindback awards, and present them with checks of $1000 each at commencement exercises in May. About fifteen other faculty members receiving the highest number of votes will be designated as honorable mention and their names will appear in a subsequent issue of the Villanovan.

The Lindback Foundation annually makes grants available to colleges in the Delaware Valley to encourage effective teaching on the undergraduate level. Previous winners of the award, not eligible for reselection by terms of the foundaton's regulations, are as follows:

Patrick J. Dougherty (finance) and John I. Gallen (civil engineering), 1961; William C.A. Henry (business law) and Henry L. Rofinot (history), 1962; William G. Driscoll (physics) and James J. Mitchell (English), 1963; Emil Amelotti (mathematics) and Joseph J. Hicks (electrical engineering), 1964; Thomas C. Linahan (mathematics) and Benedict A. Paparella (philosophy), 1965; Jose R. De La Vega (chemistry) and Joseph George Jr. (history), 1966.

Also, William O'Neill (business administration) and Robert E. Wilkinson (English), 1967; Joseph W. Ratigan (English) and Robert B. Whiting (mathematics), 1968; Frank H. Eby Jr. (business administration) and Ralph Koliner (civil engineering), 1969; Alvin A. Clay (accounting) and Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen (biology), 1970; Daniel T. Regan (philosphy) and John J. Tonkinson (business administration), 1971.

Also, Rev. Joseph J. Burns (education) and Robert W. Langran (political science), 1972; Aslam Abbasi (electrical engineering) and Gerald A. Dougherty (accounting), 1973; John A. McClain (biology) and William J. McNichol (civil engineering), 1974; Robert D. Lynch (civil engineering) and Edward V. McVassey (mechanical engineering), 1975; Lewis J. Mathers (civil engineering) and John A. Okolowski (physics), 1976; Robert P. Derstine (accounting) and Edward J. Mathis (economics), 1977; Angelo Armenti Jr. (physics) and Charles E. Zech (economics), 1978; Brian J. Jones (sociology) and Sebastian M. Rainone (business law), 1979; Nicholas M. Rorigione (business law) and Robert E. White (chemical engineering), 1980; James J. Clarke (economics) and Rita M. Ehrmann (mathematics), 1981; Fritz Nova (political science) and Bernard P. Prusak (religious studies), 1982; Jean M. Maurer (nursing) and Thomas F. Monahan (accounting), 1983.

No Debate

To the Editor:

This letter is to inform the Villanova community that another program has been dropped because it was offensive to one or two people..

As of last wee,k, it was decided to cut off funding to the Villanova Debate Program. This was done primarily because one person personally thought that the competitiveness of debate was wrong — to argue both the negative and affirmative sides of an issue. Since this person thought it was wrong, he used his power to kill the program.

It seems contradictory that a school which is striving to raise and maintain a high level of academic standards would drop a program like debate. Perhaps they are afraid that keeping such a program might lead to "debate mentality" and a lowering of academic standards.

Finally, it should be pointed out that during the weekend of Feb. 24-26, Villanova sent two teams to the pre-district tournament at Wesley College in West Virginia. Both of these teams made it to the semi-finals of their respective divisions and two of Villanova's speakers received individual speaker awards.

Master Key

To the Editor:

We are writing in response to a letter passed out to every Sheehan resident Feb. 27. The letter concerned the R.A.s' annoyance with opening too many room doors with their master key. What do they mean by "this has built to epidemic proportions?" Does this mean one a day? Ten a day? Fifty a month? Has this extra duty interfered with the R.A.s' social life? Or life in general?

In this notice the penalty in the future will be a "charge" for opening a door! Since it has built up to such "epidemic proportions," with the profits each R.A. can buy shares in Masterlock.

We as Sheehan Residents apologize for this great inconvenience, but we feel that this courtesy should become part of the R.A.s' "strict contract."

Easter Seal

To the Editor:

The residents of Good counsel Hall participated in the Easter Seal Volleyball Marathon on Feb. 25. Through our efforts we helped the Easter Seal Society provide such services as counseling and therapy while enabling them to keep their center operational.

We would like to thank everyone who supported our efforts through their contritutions. Our sincerest thanks go to the Villanova Union and the Student Government Association for their support. A very special thank you goes to Gene Alessandrini, president of St. Mary's, for his continual help and support.

Student Dies in Accident

By BETH CAPELLI

Villanova sophomore Steven Lill was killed in an automobile accident one mile from his home in Madison, N.J., on March 9.

Apparently Lill had been driving his father's car, a Datsun 280ZX, late last Friday night around 1:30 a.m. He was reportedly not traveling alone.

According to a close friend of Lill, the right front tire slid on a patch of ice, causing the car to spin out of control.

The driver's side of the car smashed into a tree, according to the friend, who also stated that Lill was killed instantly.

When asked to confirm information regarding the details of the accident, Madison police declined to reveal any evidence concerning the accident.

The passenger only suffered minor injuries, including a broken leg, according to the friend.

Lill, a second-semester sophomore, was originally a business major in the College of Commerce and Finance but had just recently switched to the College of Arts and Sciences.

His friends said that Lill, although quite shy, "was an extremely friendly person."

According to a close friend, Lill did not participate in any extracurricular activities while attending Villanova, although he said that "Steve was an excellent ice-hockey player in high school — one of the best."

A memorial service was planned for March 14, at 8 a.m. in Sullivan Hall's basement, the dorm where Lill had lived while at school.

The funeral service was March 14 at 10:30 a.m. in Madison.

IFC and Panhel Receive Awards

At the recent 1984 joint Northeast Interfraternity Conference and the Northeast Panhellenic Conference, held at the Philadelphia Marriott on March 1-4, the Villanova Interfraternity Council (IFC) and the Villanova Panhellenic Council both received prestigious awards.

The IFC received, for the second year in a row, the coveted Lunsford Award. This award recognizes overall excellence in IFC management. Villanova's IFC was chosen as the best (among those colleges and universities with IFCs that service between seven and 13 fraternities) in the Northeast. The annual award is a gavel plaque. The IFC that receives this award is selected by a panel of judges from the region who consider all that apply by way of an application resume.

The Villanova Panhel also received an award for excellence in leadership training programming. This award recognized the quality and quantity of leadership development programs that the Villanova Panhellenic Association presented throughout the past year. Such events as the Executive Board Retreat, the Chapter Leadership Training Day and the Wednesdays for Women were cited as examples of the Panhel's exemplary work. As with the IFC's award, this recognition was made by a panel of judges who reviewed all resume applications from throughout the Northeast.

Computer Fair Held

By GARY R. DYER

On Feb. 27 the Marketing Society sponsored a Mini-Computer Fair in the cafeteria of Bartley Hall, featuring computer equipment supplied by five companies.

"The whole idea was to give Villanova students - undergraduate and graduate - a good look at some computer resources," explained Thomas O'Mara, president of the Marketing Society. In addition to IBM and Digital Equipment Electronics, there were "retailers, who aren't representing any one company but have a wide range of different products."

O'Mara commented that the presentation was held in Bartley cafeteria so as to attract Commerce and Finance students.

The exhibition went from 10 a.m. to 7:30 p.m.

Villanova's Marketing Society hopes to become a member of the American Marketing Association, a national organization. "We now have about seventy members," O'Mara said. "We've been becoming more active, and we've instituted some new programs."

The Marketing Society has worked with the Career Development Center to help senior marketing majors learn about the job openings in their field. "We've sponsored a few wine and cheeses, a few formal lectures and we had these firms come in and explain what the jobs were like," O'Mara said.

"We in C and F are going to be faced with computers in our jobs," O'Mara said. "We are the computer age, and if we have a background in them, we'll have a little of the competitive edge."

The Marketing Society has several credit card drives for juniors and seniors each semester. "When you go to buy a car or something for which you'll try to borrow money — the bank will want to know your credit references," O'Mara explained. This way, through an intermediary, the College Credit Card Company, we set students up with cards, so when they've graduated, they'll have been using credit."

Biscayne

mas]. I can only say I'm entirely outraged."

St. Thomas of Villanova, of course, looks at the issue in an entirely different light. In a full-page Miami Herald advertisement following its Feb. 1 decision, the university listed three reasons for the change:

- "We are 'coming home' to our original name.
- "Before Biscayne College was established in North Dade in 1961, the Augustinians of Villanova, Pennsylvania operated the school for 14 years in Havana under the name, 'St. Thomas of Villanova University.' In April, 1961, the staff was forced to flee in the night from Castro's guns. At the direction of Archbishop Coleman Carroll the Augustinian order reestablished the school in Miami. We now come home symbolically to our roots.
- "We are reaffirming our relationship with our sister institutions throughout the world that carry the name of our Augustinian patron saint, St. Thomas of Villanova.

"We look North to Villanova University in Pennsylvania and to Europe and the centuries-old tradition of Augustinian higher learning. Through St. Thomas of Villanova University the torch of the Villanova tradition is carried to South Florida.

- "Most importantly, we are demonstrating our commitment to the developing international marketplace of South Florida.

"This August we will open our new law school, an occasion that allows us to move to university status . . ."

In a Feb. 2 Miami Herald article, St. Thomas of Villanova President Patrick O'Neill, O.S.A., said, "It's with a lot of emotion that we face this change, a lot of optimistic emotion." He was unavailable for comment this week.

The Herald article also said the decision to change the name was made by that university's Board of Trustees, a point which observers here have since made to the Villanovan following its Biscayne editorial.

"As an Augustinian Board member who opposed the move strenuously, I assure you the adoption of the name 'St. Thomas of Villanova University' was not the work of the Augustinian Order," said the Rev. Joseph A. Duffey, O.S.A., the prior provincial, in a letter to the editor this week.

"This was done over the objection of the Augustinians," said Villanova trustee Thomas F. Devine, Esq., who phoned the Villanovan on March 1 in reaction to the Feb. 24 editorial comment. "The Order has objected strenuously to this decision . . . I think you owe them an apology . . ."

'Nova Students Invade Lauderdale

By SUZANNE BRUSTMAN
CATHERINE GROODY
and KORY SPRAUER

Spring Break '84: Lauderdale, The Strip, The Button, Bloody Mary hour at The Elbo Room; security guards, passes and fire alarms at the Days Inn; "Hurricanes" and "Typhoons" at the Windjammer; Solarcaine, Alka Seltzer, Burger King and pizza . . . For the many Villanova students whose white bodies invaded Florida beaches last week, these are not merely words, but memories.

Depending upon their financial standing, Villanovans used various methods of transportation, including Winnebagos, planes, cars, buses, trains and hitchhiking in order to be a part of the spring break tradition. Hotels, motels and relatives' homes were filled to capacity, as were most parking lots. Fortunate students stayed right on The Strip, while others were several miles away.

"It is a joining together of college students . . .nothing but sun, fun, beers and peers. ."

A typical day in Ft. Lauderdale consisted of early arisal (perhaps even witnessing the sunrise), lots of suntan lotion, sunburns and happy hours with cheap warm beer and free mugs. Sun time often fell to second place in priorities, encouraging die-hards to enter the gates of Penrod's and cash in on twenty-five cent drafts for an early afternoon hour or two. Other alluring events, such as wet T-shirt contests at The Candy Store and "best buns" contests at Summers also attracted crowds off the beaches. Most sun gods and goddesses, however, took advantage of the 80 degree weather by devoting their days to tanning.

Airplanes continually circled the beaches advertising dinner specials and dance bars. The popular $10 dinner deals entitled one to a buffet meal, bar drinks and a T-shirt from the bar. Most people traveled to several bars each night, paying a hefty sum in cover charges but experiencing a variety of bands and music, including rock, disco and reggae.

By the end of each day, students were exhausted because of sun and over-indulgence. The walk or drive home was always eventful; one could expect several "proposals" of different varieties while struggling through the massive crowds. One was lucky if he made it back to his own room (alone) and knew how he got there.

The big event of the week for the Wildcats was the Monday's college competition at the infamous "Button." VU was matched against four other schools in a neck and neck battle for the coveted title of the day. St. Joe's, Rose-Hulman, Hobart and Boston College were outnumbered by the rowdy crowd of 'Novans who shook the walls with chants of "Nova! Nova!"

The overall score at the end of the first five events (foul shooting, chugging, wet willie, erotic banana eating and weirdest stunts), left VU and BC tied for first place, though Villanova had won all events but the foul shooting.

Achieving a perfect score in the final, the wet T-shirt contest, Nova captured the title for the third year in a row. In celebration of this, Villanovans took to the stage, while bartenders opened the taps and sprayed champagne over the already-completely-beer-soaked crowd.

Free admission and a free keg at the Windjammer, located on the second and third floors above the Button were awarded to each school that was victorious throughout the week. Colorful tropical drinks, unusual glasses and the open-aired rooftop location of this bar proved popular with people from 'Nova, who frequented it throughout the week.

With overcrowded sidewalks and long lines everywhere, those participating in the action knew this had been the place to be for spring break. While new friendships were made and some revitalized, Ft. Lauderdale is a memory, and indeed a must, for all in college. You've got to experience it for yourself. It is a joining together of college students from all over the country who just want to have a good time and forget about school for a week. It is a utopian environment of nothing but sun, fun, beers and peers (and an occasional sneer). It's probably the only time in your life when you can go a little crazy and just "blame it on Florida!"

Class Ventures to Ireland

By ARTHUR J. WEINKOFSKY

Anyone who enrolls in Dr. James Murphy's English 2460 is in for more than just another curricula filler. This course, titled "Ireland: Imagination and Sense of Place," is an experience that expands that academic and cultural background of those who take part in it. Approximately 21 Villanova students are taking this course for credit this semester, though it is not necessary for one to be enrolled in this course to travel with the group, and an additional 13 individuals toured Ireland.

The academic part of this experience takes place once a week and is usually on Sunday nights. Some of the authors covered are William Butler Yeats, James Joyce and Augusta Gregory. Noted Murphy, "The hope is that familiarity with the literature makes them [the students] more than average tourists, and that they will therefore have a historical attachment to Ireland."

The remainder of the course requirements are liberal, yet invitingly challenging. A 10 to 15 page paper on an Irish-related subject must be submitted and the several readings to be discussed on the Sunday evenings must be completed.

Murphy and his other clansmen packed all their clothing and book knowledge into their suitcases and headed off for Ireland over the spring break. Many of the reactions the students offered about Ireland were favorable. Noted Mary Grace Gordon, "Never before have I seen such beauty in one place!"

Others like Carolyn Ryan commented on "the warm and humble hospitality of the Irish villagers." Added Susan Parks, "A couple of times we got lost while we were in Dublin and Galway, but fortunately we met up with some nice Irishmen who not only led us to where we were going, but took us to a pub to meet their friends and share drinks." In Ireland, students learned their pubs are the social hub of activity. Instead of sitting at home and watching TV or listening to the radio, people go to the pubs and socialize. And there, you will find all walks of life; not drunks, but real down-to-earth and friendly people we should know as "Irish."

In some of the more incredible experiences they encountered, red berets on the tour bus on two occasions with their fingers on the triggers of submachine guns, as they searched the bus for bombs and searched the males for passport identification. As one student noted, "It was a pretty hairy experience." He also mentioned, though, as did others, that this action was only a flaw in their politics and not a reflection of the great people of Ireland and that this experience did not tarnish their opinions of Ireland in any way.

The students agreed that this course has been and will continue to be very enriching and satisfying for them, mainly for the fact that they have been to Ireland and have attained a sense of the world they read about in class. Marie Bouton reflected that she "really got a sense of the people, the folklore."

That point was discerned as well. The people of Ireland are extremely proud of their heritage. When asked if they would recommend this course to other students, a decided "yes" filled the room. Yet one student complained, "I wouldn't tell anyone else about it, just so I could get to be in next time and see the whole thing all over."

By the way, what did you do over spring break? Have any ideas for next year?

Sportscaster is Able to Learn from Students

(First in a two-part series.)

By JOE ALESSANDRINE

Villanova University's faculty is full of notable personalities. Don Tollefson, the sports director for WPVI's Channel 6, however, is probably one of the most well-known.

Tollefson has been teaching at V.U. for three years now. He has also taught at William Penn High School in North Philadelphia, and has lectured at other colleges.

At Villanova, Tollefson instructs a broadcast management course for mostly senior communication arts majors. Senior Len LaBarth says of the course, "It's fun, and very appropriate for seniors who plan to further themselves in television, just for the fact he's been in the field, and he talks about real situations that occur."

Don Tollefson

On teaching, Tollefson notes, "I love it. The beauties of teaching a properly-run class involve a two-way street: I'm able to take, as much as I give, if not more."

Tollefson believes that the insights from his students are most valuable and that he benefits from them since they have studied "the business" and understand it.

Over the past three years, Tollefson says he's seen a change in V.U. students as well as American students in general. "They're more concerned and motivated professionally," he notes.

Contrary to popular theory which states that students shouldn't be so interested in high paying professional careers and should be more concerned with receiving a good liberal arts education, Tollefson believes that the desire for a professional life and an education "aren't incompatible."

Public attitudes are important to him. At sporting events, Tollefson doesn't sit in the press box as do his peers — he sits with the fans. "This way, I'm able to talk with 10 or 15 new faces each time, instead of the same 35 people in the press box. I'm able to learn a lot from the folks."

Tollefson's approach to his public life and that of his personal life are similar. "I'm not all that different on the air as I am off the air," he says. "The difference is that the audience isn't able to see the substance of who I am, the complexity of Don Tollefson as an individual."

But those who work with him do see Tollefson as an individual. Channel 6's general manager, Larry Polleck, describes him as "exceptionally hard working. He's a real go-getter," Polleck adds.

Tollefson attended Stanford University. He temporarily dropped out to join a government sponsored commission called "The Newman Report on Higher Education." He later became editor/president of the school newspaper at Stanford, which has an annual budget of $500,000.

Before he was able to finish his junior year, the Associated Press offered him a job writing straight news stories. Tollefson saw this as an immediate opportunity to do what he always wanted. He enjoyed being "a writer for the masses" rather than for an "elitist" newspaper, since AP articles are used by newspapers worldwide.

After six months, ABC television hired Tollefson, and his career as a sportscaster took off. He

Club Hopes to Start Chapter

By STEVEN E. McCHESNEY

The Philadelphia chapter of Serra International, an organization of Catholic business and professional men, has proposed to establish a Villanova chapter of their organization. Serra International, composed of 450 individual "clubs," is one of the largest and most active components of laymen in the Catholic Church. The clubs have played an important role in sustaining membership to the Church's various clerical orders and in developing the bonds of Christian brotherhood among the 13,000 members.

The primary purpose of the club is to encourage vocations to the priesthood and religious life. There are many Catholics who may have a special call to devote their lives to a religious vocation, yet never discover this call because they never receive the proper encouragement, guidance or opportunity to discover. The programs and spirit of the club are designed to help these Christians discover this mysterious call and act on it.

The secondary purposes are to develop friendship among Catholic men, and, through their association, to expand their knowledge of the teachings of the Church and implement Christian principles in the community.

Each club meets twice a month at a luncheon, where a guest speaker will discuss a current issue facing the Catholic community. Fellow Serrans can meet and discuss past or future programs designed to promote the several purposes of the organization.

Serra Clubs have been established on several other campuses, such as St. Joseph's University in Philadelphia, and have made very positive and significant contributions to the entire community.

The organization feels some of its most important and active work should be on college campuses.

It is in college where young men and women can discover their position in the community and develop a sense of religious vocation. It is on the campus where the community leaders of the future are being trained, educated and developed to lead lives of success and happiness derived from their Christian values and morals.

By no means is this club just for those who think they have a vocation; most of its members are married family men. The club, rather, is for all Catholic men to learn about the modern Church, develop their faiths, learn about themselves, learn about their Catholic brothers and discover the possibilities of the religious life.

Many members of the Philadelphia chapter are graduates of Villanova and are anxious to develop the new chapter on campus. They will, in cooperation with administration and students, be able to set the paths for a successful and active campus chapter. The benefits to be derived from this program are limitless in terms of both individual and community, if all those interested give a serious effort in realizing the purposes.

More information will be available concerning meetings and initial programs within the next few weeks, after formal approval and indoctrination by the University administration.

By SUZANNE C. TOTON, Ed.D.

Lord, when did I see you hungry? In Ethiopia, for sure, but in Nicaragua, El Salvador, Honduras or Guatemala? Central America Week, March 18 to 25, will offer the opportunity to examine the extent and underlying causes of suffering in Central America, and will also provide an opportunity to do something about it.

Most people associate hunger with overpopulation, drought and crop failures. Rarely is it linked with war or foreign policies that promote war. Nicaragua and El Salvador serve as two good examples of how U.S. foreign policy is promoting war and hunger in those regions.

Nicaragua is the largest country in Central America. Yet it is only the size of Alabama. Its population is approximately 2.5 million, which is about the size of Iowa's. Most of its people are poor; the per capita income is approximately $720.

Through a successful popular revolution in 1979, the country overthrew Anastasio Somoza, one of the most corrupt and ruthless dictators of our day. Since that time, Nicaragua has been ruled by the Sandinistas. Under them, the country has made major gains in the areas of literacy, health care, employment and other social services. All of these were denied to the majority of Nicaraguans under the Somoza family dictatorship. Through a government-sponsored crusade, literacy has increased from 48 percent to 88 percent.

Health care has been another priority of the government. For the first time, thousands of people are receiving care in centers established throughout the country. So successful has Nicaragua been in meeting its health care needs that it was selected by the World Health Organization as one of five model countries in primary health care. The government has also taken major steps to address its unemployment problem by setting up job training centers and agricultural schools for men and women in need of skills.

Yet these and other gains of the revolution are being jeopardized by our foreign policy. Since President Reagan assumed office, our foreign policy toward Nicaragua can only be described as hostile. All foreign assistance to Nicaragua was cut off. The United States has blocked loans to Nicaragua from international lending agencies such as the International Monetary Fund and has put pressure on other countries to do the same. The Reagan administration has also stopped all sugar imports from Nicaragua. We were one of its largest customers.

In addition to this economic sabotage, the United States is funding a war to overthrow the Sandinistas. It is estimated that the U.S. government has spent $73 million to train and supply the contras, or counterrevolutionaries. Our reasons for attempting to destabilize Nicaragua have changed from time to time, with the administration now claiming that its purpose is to encourage negotiations with the counterrevolutionaries and promote democratic reform.

Meanwhile, 1,000 peasants have been killed in the fighting; 56,000 have been forced to flee their lands. Precious funds that were being used for development purposes must now be diverted for defense.

While the United States legitimates its actions in Nicaragua by criticizing its delay in holding elections and press censorship, the Reagan administration ironically supports El Salvador — a country in which there is no freedom of the press, no freedom of assembly, no functioning judicial system and no democratic institutions. El Salvador is the third largest recipient of U.S. aid in the world. In contrast with Nicaragua, we are supporting a government that has very little interest in improving the quality of life for the majority of its people. Its military is out of control, with death squads going unpunished for the atrocities they commit.

It is no secret that the unrest in El Salvador ultimately stems from the unequal distribution of land and wealth. The wealthiest two percent of the population control over half of El Salvador's farm land. That land, for the most part, is used to grow food, not for local consumption, but for export. Income per capita is $670, with half the population living on $10 per month. Seventy-three percent of El Salvador's children are severely undernourished. Fifty percent of the population is illiterate.

Yet attempts to address this inequality have been met repeatedly with cruel repression. In the past four years, the Salvadoran Catholic Church has documented 37,882 civilians murdered by official government forces and allied right-wing para-military groups.

Archbishop Oscar Romero, a victim of one of the death squads, the bishop of San Salvador, Arturo Rivera y Damas and the U.S. Catholic bishops have warned the Reagan administration that the U.S. military assistance significantly reduces the possibility of peace through dialogue and negotiations.

Despite their protests, the Reagan administration is calling for a five-fold increase in military assistance over the next two years. It is ultimately the poor in El Salvador, as in Nicaragua, who will pay the price of our foreign policy.

The week of March 18, Central America Week, offers the opportunity to learn more about Central America and to make our voices heard on U.S. foreign policy in that region. The week's events in Washington begin on March 19 at 8:30 a.m. with all-day training workshops on organizing skills and issues pertinent to work on Central America.

The workshops will be followed by an interfaith service at 7:30 p.m. to pray for peace in Central America. On March 20, students, teachers and dozens of national religious, human rights, peace and labor organizations will rally for peace on the steps of the Capitol and will meet with their legislators who will be debating military aid to Central America. From March 22 to 25 there will be local rallies, teach-ins, vigils, processions and worship services to educate and publicize the need for peace in Central America. For information on all of these events, contact Campus Ministry in St. Rita's Hall.

When one of the underlying causes of hunger in Central America is our foreign policy, our responsibility to feed the hungry must express itself in action to change that policy. The week of March 18 could make a difference in whether the poor of Central America continue to get more bullets or bread.

Dr. Toton is an assistant professor in the religious studies department.

BISCAYNE COLLEGE SCHOOL OF LAW
Miami, Florida

Biscayne, a new law school, is accepting applications for its first class to begin in August 1984.

The only Catholic law school in the Southeast, Biscayne is ideally located in suburban Miami on a 140 acre campus. The School will offer a three-year, full-time program, with small classes, modern computerized research facilities, and the opportunity for specialized study in a variety of areas, including international law.

The Biscayne College School of Law intends to seek ABA provisional approval as quickly as possible, which will be after the first year of teaching.

Karate Club Gets a Kick Out of Physical Fitness

By SHARON KELLY

At the end of the building in the gym, the members of this club practice an art which originated on a small island over 100 years ago. Most of these members are there to stay in shape, though some go on to compete. But all are members of Villanova's karate club, which meets on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 7 to 9 p.m. in St. Mary's gym.

Mark Riley splitting some cinder blocks — before . . .

The club began about 10 years ago and currently has 60 members, 12 of whom are women. There are five black belt instructors. Jim Toolan, a Villanova Law School graduate and second degree black belt, is the head instructor.

Mark Riley, the club's president, emphasizes that "our basic goal is to continue the traditions of Seibukan, while promoting physical fitness and self-defense, although the option of competing with the club is open to all members.

"Karate isn't just breaking boards or concrete blocks," he added. Most of the people in the club train outside of class, too," Riley said.

A tournament consists of two events, kata and fighting. Kata, which literally means "forms," is the expression of karate as an art. Each participant completes a set pattern of about 50 moves and is judged according to the technical accuracy of those moves.

The second event is the actual karate fight. It begins with the ceremonial bow, or "rae," by the participants to one another and to the referees. The bout lasts two minutes and scoring occurs with a controlled punch, kick close to the face or a solid hit to the body, each worth one point. There is limited contact, which means that hits to the face or groin are prohibited for all belt divisions, except the brown through black belts.

"We practice the Seibukan style," explained Riley, "but in a tournament, one can encounter other styles, such as Kung Fu, Tae Kwan Do or Go Ju, so one has to be mentally and physically prepared for anything."

Art Lovers Trip Sponsored

By KATHLEEN O'DONNELL

Most clubs on campus take trips of a recreational, rather than an academic, nature. Trips to New York, to the casinos, to the Big East and to Florida are usually popular, as was the Union's trip to Acapulco last week. But the French club is taking one of a more serious, or academic nature, by visiting a museum-combination-institution this month. They will be visiting The Barnes Foundation in Merion, an educational institution/museum founded by Philadelphian Albert C. Barnes.

Dr. Barnes received his M.D. from the University of Pennsylvania in 1892 and shortly thereafter discovered a new medicine called Argyrol. Argyrol is a trademark for a preparation similar to mild silver protein and is used as an antiseptic in infections of the mucous membranes.

Because this medicine is not so irritating to the membranes, and the need for such a medicine back then was world-wide, Barnes, after a few years of research, made a quick fortune. Much of what he earned was spent on an amazing collection of artistic works.

Barnes was a controversial figure because of his views on art. For unlike many others, he was very fond of 20th century art.

On Dec. 4, 1922, The Barnes Foundation was granted a charter as an educational institution. It was established by Barnes and financed mainly by him. Contrary to common belief, however, Barnes' goal in establishing the institution was not to teach how to create art, but rather how to appreciate art. These classes continue to this day.

After donating his private collection to the foundation, an art gallery was built and opened on March 19, 1925. This gallery is located on 300 Latches Lane, Merion Station.

Back then, however, only students were permitted into the gallery. Barnes insisted that certain rules be followed after he died. One of his rules was that none of the paintings in his collection could ever be loaned, sold or otherwise disposed of, except "if any picture passes into a state of actual decay . . ." Museum employees are not even permitted to change the positions of the paintings, although some are hung in the most curious of manners.

In 1961, after a court ruling, the Barnes collection was made available to the public, but it remains a difficult task to obtain a visit. The foundation must have your name and address in advance and then they set up an appointment.

The gallery today contains the largest collection of Matisse art work in the world, as well as hundreds of works of French impressionist painters, such as Manet, Degas, Monet, Gauguin and Toulouse-Lautrec. Also, there are pieces by Picasso from the Blue and Cubist periods, portraits by Modigliani and sculpture by Lipshitz, just to name a few.

Although the collection is mainly 20th century, it is not limited to this period, because it also contains works by such other great artists as Tintoretto, Giorgione, Bosch, Veronese, and El Greco. Many cultures are covered in the collection, too, such as Greek and Egyptian pottery, African masks and Chinese paintings.

Despite the medieval rules and oddities of the museum, it is a worthwhile collection of art.

If you are interested in joining the French club on their trip, leave your name, address and telephone number in the mailbox in St. Thomas, 314, and check for more information in the FYIs of the Villanovan.

Philly's South St. Satisfies

By ANDY MILLER

As most people know, there's a lot to do and see in Philadelphia. But if you're interested in being entertained, South Street is the place for you, because there is no place quite like it anywhere else in the city.

The famous night spot "Ripley's," can be found on South Street, and there are numerous bars and fine restaurants all along the street from about the 600 block down to Penn's Landing. South Street is more or less Philadelphia's answer to Greenwich Village, although that might be going a bit too far. South Street is also the home of the original "Pat's Cheese Steaks."

One of the most popular attractions on South Street is the punk shop "Zipperheads," on the 400 block. You can find a lot of very unique things there, including chains, spikes and collars. If that isn't your bag, there's plenty of everything else.

Many of the shirts and buttons have outrageous (not to mention X-rated) slogans and sayings. If you're a Three Stooges fan, the Zipperhead is must for you. There you can find an "I love Moe" teeshirt or numerous items with Curly on them.

"It's interesting because it is an unusual aspect of fashion," said Roseann, an employee of Zipperhead. "It's different."

Noted Janice, another employee, "It can be fun at times, but it's also a lot of hard work, although it's better than most jobs I've had."

Do you meet a lot of unusual people? "I've probably met more unusual people in my own life," Janice said. "The really unusual people don't generally shop here."

It's possible that some of them do their shopping a little further down the street at "Skins," another punk shop. "Skins" is just a bit more hard-core, and a bit more expensive."

Ripley's Music Hall is one of the most popular night clubs in Philadelphia, headlining the most popular local bands and many nationally known acts. Ripley's, located at 6087 South St., has special video nights, and, in upcoming weeks there will be video nights with the Rolling Stones and Michael Jackson. There are also dance parties almost every weekend, but a person must be over 21 to get in.

From South Street it is just a short walk to Penn's Landing, on the Delaware River. Penn's Landing is the sight of numerous cultural and historical landmarks, including the U.S.S. Olympia, a battleship from the Spanish-American War, and the Becuna, a submarine from World War II. There are also several restaurants on Penn's Landing, the most prominent being an old sailing ship that serves as a floating bar also. One of the best things about Penn's Landing, however, is that no matter what time of day or night you might be there, it is usually pretty safe.

Probably the best way to get to South Street is to take the train to 30th Street Station and then take a cab. If you drive, there is a good chance that you will have to park awfully far from where the night life is, but there is never a shortage of night life.

So if you're ever sitting looking for something to do or you just want to do something different, try Philly's South Street. No matter what your tastes, you will probably find something appealing.

Janice, an employee at the Zipperhead.

Tollefson

considered this an ultimate challenge in that television gave him the chance to really "reach" the bulk of the American mass audience.

It wasn't long after that he landed a position at WPVI. That was nearly a decade ago.

According to Tollefson, the most significant benefit of his present job is his opportunity to enrich the lives of his viewers. "At 11 o'clock, two million people have a chance to be affected by what I say," he notes. Tollefson used the example of covering a Special Olympics event, in which he mentions that volunteers are needed. If anyone responds, he feels he has performed a public service, which he considers to be his responsibility. "In our business, we're unelected elected officials," he said.

Did You Know . . .

The Federal Reserve Board has issued two proposals that will affect consumers' use of credit cards under Regulation Z (Truth-in-Lending) and debit cards under Regulation E (Electronic Fund Transfers).

The proposed amendment to Regulation Z would affect consumers mainly in the use of telephone credit cards. Approximately 47 million such cards have been issued in recent years, and many paper telephone cards are now being replaced by plastic cards, which look and work much like retail credit cards. Telephone companies have encouraged card use to cut costs, to reduce fraud and to give consumers easier access to telephone services. The major card issuers have given cards only on request and are following a policy of not imposing consumer liability for unauthorized charges.

With divestiture, however, companies may choose to reverse these policies and seek to place some liability on the cardholder for unauthorized calls. Changes in the telephone industry will expand the number of companies likely to issue cards and will increase consumer vulnerability.

Unsolicited cards increase the risk that a card may be stolen before it reaches the consumer. Since the consumer would not be expecting a card, the first sign of theft could arrive in the form of a bill. Unlike typical credit card use, there is no face-to-face contact when the card is used, no signature to compare and no secret personal identification number.

For these reasons and because of the many changes in the telephone industry, the board wants consumers to know that telephone credit cards fall under certain provisions of Regulation Z. These provisions would prohibit unsolicited issuance of credit cards and limit consumer liability for unauthorized card use to a maximum of $50. Also under consideration is the requirement that language outlining these liability rules must be disclosed with each new card issued and each card replaced.

The proposed amendment to Regulation E deals with debit cards. A debit card allows consumers to charge goods or services directly to their checking or other bank account. A new amendment to Regulation E would stop the sometimes-used two-step method of debiting your account. This method is as follows: 1) your sales slip is sent to the merchants bank and 2) the charge information is converted at the bank to electronic form for debiting to your account.

The proposed amendment would clarify that the fund transfers resulting from such two-step processing are subject to the same rules as one-step transactions. This rule is important because the number of debit cards has risen from approximately 600,000 in 1978 to 4.5 million at the end of 1982.

STUDENT GOVERNMENT ELECTIONS

Informational Meeting

March 20, 1984

Student Government Office, Dougherty Hall

To all interested students:

Elections for the 1984-85 Student Government will be held on April 5, 1984. Please note there will be an informational meeting for all prospective candidates on Tuesday, March 20, at 7:00 p.m. in the Student Government office, 204 Dougherty Hall. At this meeting all election rules and procedures will be discussed along with any questions that need be answered.

The Student Government of 1983-84 hopes that all concerned students make a concerted effort to work toward a stronger more united University. . .the first step is to get involved!

We urge all students that are seriously considering to be a part of the 1984-85 Student Government to attend this meeting.

The Beatles' Long, Winding Road

By LEONARD J. LaBARTH

Billed as the most complete discography ever amassed on the Beatles, The Long and Winding Road: A History of The Beatles on Record, is the latest release detailing the careers, collective and solo, of the Fab Four.

Written by self-confessed British Beatle-maniac and collector Neville Stannard, this book was originally released in Britain in 1982. The first American printing was issued last month by Avon books.

As Stannard writes in an introduction to the book, he had waited for many years for a book to be published that would tell him everything that he wanted to know about each Beatles' record and song. Originally compiled in 1973, Stannard's work was re-written once in 1977 and again changed in 1978. It was not until 1982 that the book was completed.

It is no exaggeration to say that this is an exhaustive piece of literature detailing the musical efforts of John Lennon, Paul McCartney, George Harrison and Ringo Starr. Long and Winding Road does not simply list the songs, but also includes the authorship, circumstances relating to the creation and recording, chart and sales figures, running time, catalogue number and release date of each song. Imagine reading a dictionary with nothing but Beatles' information listed; that's how complete this book is for the reader.

What is extremely appealing about Long and Winding Road is its main division into two parts: the British section (113 pages) and the American section (60 pages). The British section includes a chronological section. These two sections indicate the differences in the music industries of Britain and the United States. For example, in Britain, a Beatles' record was released every six months, even if it was only a collection of previously released material. Additionally, there are 15 appendices dealing with such subjects as cover versions of Beatles' songs by other artists, the "Paul is dead" story, unreleased recordings, bootlegs and the annual Christmas messages to their fans.

Here are some fun facts to digest:

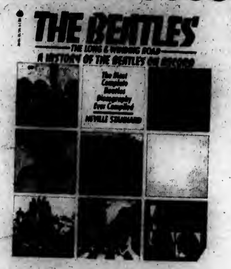
— There are 68 "famous faces" on the "Sgt. Pepper" album cover.

— George Harrison co-wrote "Badge," a million-seller for Cream, with Eric Clapton, and Clapton played the guitar solo on one of Harrison's best Beatle songs, "While My Guitar Gently Weeps."

— The "Paul is dead" story originally began as a college student's term paper.

— "Hey Jude" is the longest single recorded by The Beatles (seven minutes), and features one of the longest fade-outs ever recorded (four minutes).

Reading this discography history is thoroughly enjoyable because of the non-Beatle achievements listed in the book. Every artist who ever recorded a cover version of a Beatles' song or performed a song written by Lennon and McCartney is featured, with a capsule summary of the artist's success, the chart number of the Beatle-penned songs and the other top hits spawned by the artist.



It is no exaggeration to say that this is an exhaustive piece of literature.

For example, the song "Come Together," originally released on the "Abbey Road" album, was covered by Aerosmith on the "Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band" soundtrack album. As Stannard notes, "In 1978, Aerosmith's version of 'Come Together' entered the U.S. chart at No. 27 on Sept. 16, and stayed in the Top 30 for four weeks, reaching No. 20 for one week. An American five-piece band, Aerosmith was formed in the state of Massachusetts in 1970. By 1975, they had a million-selling album. . .."

Stannard obviously leaves no stone unturned in describing the far-reaching influences of the world's greatest band ever.

With so many people making a big deal of 1984 being the 20th anniversary of The Beatles' arrival in the United States, it is quite appropriate that a book of this dimension has been published here, this year.

The Long and Winding Road should stand as one of the best books ever written on The Beatles, along with Philip Norman's Shout: The Beatles in Their Generation and The Beatles: An Illustrated Record by Roy Carr and Tony Tyler. It is a Beatles reference guide that no Beatles fan, or music fan, should be without.

Moore and Kinski Team Up

By ED DeMARCO

"Unfaithfully Yours" marks the return of Dudley Moore's comic genius in this, his best role since "Arthur." Moore, who plays Claude Eastman, conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, once again portrays a man of wealth and taste, something which the viewing public has become quiet accustomed to. However, on this occasion there is a new twist; Eastman has entered middle age and is undergoing a mid-life crisis. To further complicate matters, he has just married a woman half his age, played by Nastassja Kinski.

The picture opens with Eastman returning to New York from an impressive stint as a guest conductor in London. Eastman is greeted by his entourage which includes his wife, his best friend and his wife and his Italian valet. The confusion that reigns here is the key element of the plot. Eastman's friend Norman Robbins, played by Albert Brooks, mistakenly has Kinski tailed by a private investigator while Eastman is abroad.

Later, the detective passes unpleasant information to Eastman regarding his wife's alleged infidelity. Eastman seeks counsel from his valet, played by Richard Libertini. Eastman concludes, from their conversation, that he must kill both his wife and his protege, Max Stern.

Director Howard Zieff uses foreshadowing to create a series of comic twists which succeed brilliantly, owing to Moore's special brand of humor and deadpan delivery. Murphy's Law also aids in the hijinks as everything that can go wrong does.

Kinski turns in a solid performance as Eastman's sensuous, naive young wife. However, the high points of the movie involve the interaction of Moore and Armand Assante, who plays Stern. Moore exudes jealousy and virtue, whereas Assante characterizes hedonism as he lives strictly for the pleasure of the moment.

"Unfaithfully Yours" is a commentary on the pressure jealousy exerts on marriage. As such, "Unfaithfully Yours" makes many valid points as it pokes fun at Claude Eastman, who has become insanely jealous due to his wife's reported infidelity. Although "Unfaithfully Yours" deals with a heavy topic, it is a fast-paced romantic comedy.

The Scorpions Can Sting

By TOM BARAN

The new release, "Love At First Sting," by the Scorpions is an album that will show, once and for all, that heavy metal bands are talented musicians. The recent heavy metal releases from Ozzy Ozbourne, Judas Priest, and Sammy Hagar and Neil Schon are all excellent albums, but this new one from the Scorpions is the best of the bunch.

In the past this heavy metal quintet from Germany has released some good albums. Their last release, "Blackout," brought them popularity in the United States. "Love At First Sting" has brought them more airplay in the United States and has led to the plans for a summer headlining tour.

The Scorpions have not sold out to popularity as their heavy metal counterpart Def Leppard did on its last release, but has produced an album that contains heavy metal that everyone can enjoy. From the song "Rock You Like A Hurricane" to "Still Loving You," the album is not only full of hot guitars, excellent vocals and powerful drumming, but also has lyrics with meaning and better guitar work than any bands have done in a long time.

A favorite on the album is the song "Coming Home." At first, the song sounds like the typical attempt of a heavy metal band to make sure their album contained at least one slower song. This idea is dispelled as soon as the song picks up and turns into, by far, the most powerful song on the album. Along with the always super vocals of Klaus Meine, this song highlights the highly talented drumming of Herman Barbell.

As on all the Scorpions' albums, Rudy Schenker, along with Matthias Jabs, prove that heavy metal is more than just screaming, distorted guitars as some people wrongly say. The guitar playing on this album contains the typical Scorpions sound, but does not become monotonous. The song "Bad Boys Running Wild" is a perfect example of this. The first couple of bars of music sound similar to the song "No One Like You" from the last Scorpions release. This changes as the song switches to a more simplex rhythm with a powerful guitar solo.

The Scorpions

The only weak point of the album is found in the lyrics. At first one does not pick it up, but after listening to the album a number of times one notices the lyrics were a bit repetitive. Songs such as "Crossfire" contain meaningful lyrics, but say the same things over and over throughout the song.

The Scorpions will be on tour this summer and if their show is similar to last year's when they opened for Rainbow, it should be a fantastic concert.

America Drills Good Oil

By BOB SMITH

After the recent international success of Men At Work, much attention has been given to the Australian music scene. Several major labels have taken interest in and signed bands that have garnered substantial followings in Australia in the hope of successfully exporting them to the United States. As a result, some exciting new Australian bands have records out in America.

One Aussie band which has received a good deal of attention by the music press is Midnight Oil. Already one of the top bands in Australia, Midnight Oil signed a contract with Columbia Records, one result of which was the American release of "10, 9, 8, 7, 6, 5, 4, 3, 2, 1." Actually the Oils fourth release, "10, 9, . . ." was the record that made them stars in their homeland.

Midnight Oil was formed in 1977 by drummer Rob Hirst and guitarist/keyboardist Jim Mongingie, who recruited the other members (Peter Gifford, bass; Martin Rotsey, guitar; Peter Garret, vocals). Over the course of six years, the band attracted a loyal following among Australia's clubgoers, releasing three albums during this period. "10, 9, . . ." first released in Australia in early 1983, and soon after as an import, was a big hit for the Oils. The result of this was their signing with Columbia for U.S. distribution.

Midnight Oil's musical style is not unlike that of The Who on their final record, "It's Hard;" guitar-oriented hard rock with various keyboards playing a strong, supportive role. At the same time, Midnight Oil has a knack for building songs around a stark frame, accentuating their lyrics with sudden unexpected bursts of heavy-metal guitar and drums, thus bringing their often disturbing messages home with an added urgency.

"10, 9, . . ." concerns itself with unrest and turmoil. The lyrics on this tune are, as on previous Oils albums, somewhat topical; for this reason, Midnight Oil has been compared at times to The Clash. They actually work in a vein similar to that of U2.

The main theme of "10, 9, . . ." is one of warning against complacency. While the lyrics do occasionally get political, most of the time the Oils manage to avoid the realm of overt protest music. The individual cuts each carry their own message.

"Outside World" carries with it a sense of impending doom, as do many of these songs. It is structured around a single bass-line, with savage drum attacks punctuating Garret's trance-like vocal delivery. "Short Memory" brings past wars and atrocities to the forefront, asking the listener if their repetition is close at hand, and challenging a response. "Power And The Passion," which can be described as the Oil's signature song, depicts strife and world problems, ending with a righteous surge of brass that is effective as any guitar jam could ever be.

Although radio has failed to acknowledge their presence, Midnight Oil has been the subject of a good deal of favorable press from the music media, which has begun to pay off for the band; several area record stores were sold out of their initial shipments of "10, 9, . . ." If this record catches on, we will be hearing more from this band in the near future.

Nostaglia Found in "T'N'T"

By MIKE MATHIS

The Valley Forge Music Fair, home of today's contemporary performers, hosted two evenings of nostalgia last weekend as an event billed "T 'N T," the Temptations and the Four Tops, came alive for four sold-out shows.

Both the Temptations and the Four Tops are entertainment institutions. They both hail from Detroit, the city which provided the Motown sound. They all referred to this, "their old home," in many dedications throughout the evening. Although many personnel changes in the Temptations (the Four Tops are all original members) have introduced members not from the "Motor City," the entire show was done in homage to Detroit, soul and partying 'til the morning light.

A revitalization of oldies shows and nostalgia prompted various radio stations to sponsor the four shows. WMGK and WIOQ sponsored the 7 p.m. and 11 p.m. shows on Friday evening respectively, and WFIL sponsored the early Saturday show.

Both groups teamed up at the beginning of the show in a medley of Temptations/Four Tops hits. Then the Four Tops took the stage alone and performed all of their best-loved songs. Their upbeat love songs, such as "Baby, I Need Your Loving," "I Can't Help Myself (Sugar Pie, Honey Bunch)," and "Reach Out, I'll Be There," featured lead singer Levi Stubbs' rough-hewn lead vocals and a virtual standing ovation accompanied the thunderous applause after each song. Their unique brand of contemporary soul was intensified by excellent choreography, which added much liveliness to the small revolving stage.

After more antics between the two groups, it was The Temptations' turn to bask in the spotlight. The Temptations were Motown's most successful male group of the 1960s and early 1970s. Their rough-edged leads, tight harmonies and earthy soul delivery absolutely stole the show from the Four Tops. They performed all their hits: the sultry "Ain't Too Proud to Beg," the chic "The Way You Do the Things You Do," the stinging "Papa Was a Rolling Stone," and the smooth "Get Ready." Yet the highlight of the set was when the group performed "My Girl," the 1965 Smokey Robinson ballad that has become their trademark.

A medley of songs were performed by both groups, including tributes to Sam Cooke, Teddy Pendergrast, Otis Redding and Jackie Wilson, the last of whom had perhaps the most profound influence on the entire Motown sound.

The evening was truly reminiscent of times past, happier times, the times of youth. Though most of the crowd was predominantly over thirty years of age, the younger fans in attendance well appreciated what made some of today's soul music the art form that it is.

Reminiscing a Lost Past in "Reuben, Reuben"

By MIKE NOONE

"Reuben, Reuben" is one of those borderline movies between art and entertainment. While it offers much more than many of the other Oscar nominee movies, "Reuben, Reuben" has been confined to exclusive engagements in New York and Philadelphia, rather than the wider distribution it deserves. Perhaps this is due to the fact that "Reuben, Reuben" is essentially a character study, with little action.

The main character is a Scottish poet named Gowan McGland, who is spending his late thirties in a New England college town, reciting and lecturing on poetry which he can no longer produce. The story is based in part on the life of Dylan Thomas, who wrote most of his poetry before the age of 20, and then spent many unproductive years in America.

British actor Tom Conti, best known for the PBS series "The Glittering Prizes," and the Broadway play, "Whose Life is it Anyway," brilliantly protrays the calculated breakdown and slothness in which McGland is trapped. Conti truly deserves the best actor award for which he has been nominated. Thanks to his Scottish background, Conti's accent is authentic as is his mysterious and enticing character which is so appealing to women.

McGland is almost a pathetic character. He spends his time womanizing, drinking, and stealing the tips in restaurants. He longs to write good poetry again, and yet he seems content with his estrangement as well as the eccentricity which allows him to bed as many of the towns' wives as he wishes. He is never depressed or apathetic, but rather he has patiently come to grips with the fact that his creative age has passed, and he patiently awaits the end. Suddenly he is thrust into a youthful passion, as he falls in love with a young college graduate. McGlade is once again struck with adolescent fantasy and energy.

At one point he even writes some of the poetry he had long thought impossible. The girl, Geneva, represents something more than just another sexual encounter, but in fact she encapsules all the youth and creativity he has lost. Ultimately, after a short, poignant affair, he realizes that he will never have that youth again.

After this point, the movie seems to fall apart. The screenplay has a dissatisfying end (a little too ironic) as well as some sluggish moments. However, the movie is saved by superb acting and intelligent dialogue not found in many other recent Hollywood projects.

Geneva is portrayed in a debut role by Kelly McGilis. She flawlessly portrays the girl with an overwhelming screen presence and depth, to complement her looks.

Of course, the high point of the film is Conti's performance. Perhaps his stage training has enabled him to give an absolutely convincing and humorous performance of a seemingly lost man. He seems to dwell in some distant place, which is recognized but not understood by most of the people surrounding him.

While not as easy to identify with, "Reuben, Reuben" offers more about reminiscing of a lost past than the successful "The Big Chill."

Harry and Son Disappoints

By KELLY O'NEILL

"Harry and Son" is a film which attempts to deal with the complexities of the relationship between a father and his son, a parent and his child. This universal theme was also dealt with in the highly recommended film, "Terms of Endearment," but in Harry and Son we find too many weaknesses to allow for its comparable success.

Robby Benson and Paul Newman in "Harry and Son."

There is a central miscasting in this film with Paul Newman as Harry, and Robby Benson as his son Howard. Harry drives a crane and steel ball for a demolition company. He has a poor heart and failing eyesight. Because of Paul Newman's natural vitality, it is difficult to see him on a dying trajectory. Howard works at a carwash while pursuing a career in writing. Robby Benson's over eager nature does not complement Howard's character which is seen by his father as selfish and lazy. Having been valedictorian of his class, his father expects much more from him, and the request to "get a real job" is one of Harry's common complaints.

One of the main failures in the film is the dissatisfaction Harry has for his son. It is apparent from the start that Harry is a sympathetic character. This makes the idea that he is dissappointed in his son less effective, and if there is any transition to be made here, it is difficult to pinpoint.

Howard is a likeable character who strives, again and again to prove the love he has for his father. In these situations, Harry's reluctance in accepting his son's love is doubted by the audience because, once again, Harry's sympathetic nature shines through.

Harry is a widower and he is mourning the loss of his wife throughout the entire film. This provides an opportunity for many touching scenes, but for some reason many ideas are left hanging and undeveloped.

Lilly, played by Joanne Woodward, is the somewhat eccentric best friend of Harry's deceased wife. She is a kind and fascinating character whose love for Harry would have made her an interesting additional storyline, if only developed earlier in the film.

Lilly's pregnant daughter, plays Howard's ex-girlfriend. Their relationship takes away from the main point of the story because of the way it is dealt with, and is basically unnecessary in the movie.

Overall, the film leaves us with an empty feeling. Although its intentions were quite good, the undeveloped themes prevent the film from accomplishing what it sets out to do.

Eighties' Style Duran Duran

By AMELIA McGOVERN

Duran Duran, the Grammy Award winning band, swept through the town on their U.S. tour on March 10 for the first of two Philadelphia concerts. They played a one and one half-hour set to a sold out crowd at So. Philly's Spectrum.

The band, made up of Simon Le Bon, Nick Rhodes, John Taylor, Roger Taylor and Andy Taylor (all three Taylors are unrelated), was in such demand that extra dates had to be added to the tour, including a second Spectrum date, March 18.

Duran Duran is the video band of the 80's. This is demonstrated by the two Grammys they were awarded this year, one for the Video Single of the Year, ("Hungry Like the Wolf/-Girls on Film") and the other for the Video Album of the Year ("Duran Duran").

McVie's Feature Album Sheds New Light

By BILL SANTOS

Are you tired of all those hard rock and heavy metal albums around? Then Christine McVie is for you. Keyboard player and vocalist with Fleetwood Mac, McVie has recorded her first solo album with the help of three other artists — Todd Sharp, guitar and vocals; George Hawkins, bass and vocals; and Steve Ferrone, drums and percussion.

McVie has the help of two fellow members of Fleetwood Mac, Lindsey Buckingham on guitar and vocals, and Mick Fleetwood on drums. Other guest artists include Eric Clapton, Ray Cooper, Eddy Quintela and Steve Winwood.

The album is titled "Christine McVie" and contains mostly soft rock songs similar to the Fleetwood Mac style; since the three Mac members play on various songs, the album holds that same quality. The main artists on the album, Sharp, Hawkins and Ferrone, along with McVie, formulate a sound that proves to be mellow but striking.

The majority of the songs are written by McVie and Sharp, but help from Billy Burnette, Steve Winwood, Danny Douma and Alan Pasqua is present.

"Got A Hold On Me" is the most popular song from the album, but not many of the other songs get much airplay. The best song proves to be "Love Will Show Us How," because of the flowing rhythm guitar and driving beat. "The Challenge," and "Ask Anybody" (co-written by Winwood and featuring Fleetwood on drums), keep the album moving.

"Who's Dreaming This Dream," "I'm The One" and "Keeping Secrets" are the only songs not written by McVie, even in part. They form a bloc that is different than the other songs in that they contain more guitar; this group of songs has a major influence by Sharp, the main guitarist. The album ends with a quiet piece, "The Smile I Live For" (the only song written solely by McVie). Featuring mostly keyboards from McVie, it proves a unique end to an already superb album.

The lyrics hold a certain romantic quality to them, not unlike Bryan Ferry's Roxy Music lyrics on "Avalon." McVie and Sharp both have the quality to write this type of music titled Romanticism. (McVie — "It took a life-time to find you/ And now I want you to stay/ Oh, I don't mind you can do anything/ You can love me night and day." Sharp — "Two a.m. and it's you on the telephone/ Cryin' in your sleep/ You figure since I got a shoulder and I live alone/ You can come to me.") Although Ferry is the ultimate lyricist, McVie and Sharp hold their own in the hard-to-crack world of Romanticism.

Christine McVie

The album is one of the best albums this reviewer has heard in a while. Each song has a certain uniqueness in its own right, but combined they form a masterpiece, one that will be up-and-coming this year and should be strong for next year's Grammy awards.

Yes in Concert Was a 'Trip'

By JOE BAUMGARDNER

We started in first U.S. tour in five years in front of a sold out audience at the Ohio Center on March in Columbus, Ohio. Philadelphia radio station WMMR ran a contest called "Flight 90125," in which 93 winners (and their guests) would be able to see this concert. A total of 144,946 post cards were sent in (one person alone sent 3,000). One of the 93 winners chosen was Villanova student Joe Baumgardner. Here is his account of the trip:

The group assembled at Philadelphia International Airport on a clear Thursday afternoon and boarded the plane, which took off at 5:05 p.m. amid loud cheering. Upon arriving at Port Columbus Airport, we boarded the waiting Greyhound buses and headed for the Ohio Center behind our police escort.

We arrived at the auditorium, which holds about 8,500 people, and found our 186 seats all together just off to the right of the stage. They were excellent seats from both visual and acoustical perspectives; a great improvement from the third level of the Spectrum.

The concert was supposed to be preceded by a series of vintage "Bugs Bunny and Road Runner" cartoons. However, technical difficulties prevented their showing.

At 8:40 p.m. the lights went down and a pre-recorded instrumental version of "Leave It" started playing. Yes then appeared coming up out of the center of the stage behind the drums, and started the show with "Leave It" from their latest album, "90125." Lead vocalist Jon Anderson, dressed in white pants and a white sweat shirt, sported a cordless microphone around his neck, which left his hands free to act out verses to certain songs. Guitarist Trevor Rabin, showing no effects of his back injury that postponed the start of the tour, was dressed all in black and sounded as if he had been with the group for many years. Anderson introduced drummer Alan White at the start of two songs from "90125": "Hold On" and "It Can Happen."

The stage was then lit up by a pyramid of lasers as the roaring crowd heard the first few notes of "Perpetual Change." This was followed by Anderson on acoustic guitar playing "All Good People." He then introduced Rabin and keyboardist Tony Kaye as they started a long instrumental that led into "Changes." Anderson then delighted the crowd by saying, "Do you remember us from the '70s? . . . We remember you. That's why we came back."

"And You and I," with Chris Squire on harmonica, preceded "Owner of a Lonely Heart," during which Anderson waved a Star Wars light saber over his head. Anderson then remarked, "Thank you for helping it make it to number one."

Other songs included "Long Distance Runaround," "Yes Songs," which featured Chris Squire's bass solo, "Our Song" and "Yours Is No Disgrace." Their final song was preceded by Anderson saying, "This song is the meaning of Yes music." Everyone knew it had to be "Starship Trooper." During this last song the word "Yes," "written" by lasers, appeared on a black curtain hanging from the ceiling.

The encore was, to no one's surprise, "Roundabout." The entire concert lasted for about two and a half hours.

Then there was the trip back to the airport and the flight home, which landed at 1:20 a.m. Friday morning.

Yes will appear at the Spectrum on April 30. The show sold out in one day.

Duran Duran's '80s Style

Pink Floyd. It was new, it was just happening. And we saw we could do a lot with it."

Rhodes started the band with friend John Taylor in 1978 in Birmingham, England, and in 1980 Duran Duran solidified to its current form.

Michael and Paul Berrows, the band's managers, planned to present the band as a package. The image came second only to the music. In 1980 they landed a contract with EMI Records.

Berrows considers Duran Duran the perfect group for the Eighties. "They put a great deal of care into the way they look. Their music is pure, escapist entertainment; you can dance to it, and you don't have to worry about hearing any songs about the world's problems. And they helped move music into the age of video."

If you are going to see Duran Duran on Sunday, expect to hear all of the hits you know from the radio: "Hungry Like the Wolf," "Rio," "Girls on Film," "Union of the Snake," and expect the whole Philly audience to join them in singing "New Moon on Monday." Expect an overabundance of cute high school girls wearing trendy clothes. Expect to see the band, if not from close seats on the floor, up close on a large video screen. (Expect the girls to scream when their favorite band members appear on the screen.) Expect an Eighties-style good time.

Puzzle Answer

Nick's Knacks

Radio Ga-Ga Lives

By NICK ANASTASIO

Van Halen's "Jump" has finally gotten its due. Despite being the Number One song in the nation for a few weeks, and despite selling over one million copies, and despite being the most requested song on WMMR (93.3 FM) for almost one month, "Jump" had been totally ignored by WKVU's Top 20 lists. Until last week, that is. WKVU finally received a copy of "Jump" to play on the air, and was thus able to include it on its Top 20, where it promptly debuted at Number One. The question that remains is why did it take so long for WKVU to get a copy of "Jump?" If Warner Brothers, the record company that distributes Van Halen's albums, does not do business with WKVU, then somebody on WKVU's staff could have brought it in (someone over there had to have the record in his/her private collection).

Speaking of WKVU, a recent survey in the New Music Report (and subsequently published by USA Today) of college radio stations disclosed the five albums that were getting the most airplay. The top five were The Pretenders' "Learning to Crawl," the Eurythmics' "Touch," Duran Duran's "Seven and the Ragged Tiger," John Lennon's and Yoko Ono's "Milk and Honey," and Yes' "90125." Apparently, WKVU was not one of the college stations surveyed, since only Duran Duran's and the Eurythmics' albums have been getting consistent airplay. The Pretenders have yet to crack the Top 20, Yes just made it, and Lennon's "Nobody Told Me" only made it to Number Seven.

However, WKVU is not in as bad a mess as WXTU (92.1 FM) is. WXTU used to be known as WIFI-92. During the 1970s, WIFI was one of Philadelphia's top radio stations, using a format similar to WCAU's: the Hot Hits, loud deejays, and gimmicky advertising format that teenagers love. WCAU's emergence as the top Top 40 station knocked WIFI for a loop, and the station's ratings plummeted.

In an attempt to reclaim lost listeners, WIFI became I-92, and changed to a new wave, "Rock of the '80s" format, playing mostly songs that only MTV viewers would recognize. Although popular with critics, this format didn't catch on, and was dropped after only a few months.

The station was sold and renamed WXTU, playing "urban contemporary" music. Less than nine months later, ratings haven't improved because WXTU switched last week to a country-western format. Philadelphia is not a country-western city, as WFIL and a few other radio stations have found out. WXTU will be lucky if it survives 1984.

Brief Previews of Upcoming 1984 Movies

A nine-year-old Vancouver schoolgirl has been chosen to play the pivotal role of Dorothy in Walt Disney Pictures' large-scale fantasy/adventure "Oz," it is announced by Richard Berger, president of Walt Disney Pictures, and producers Gary Kurtz and Paul Maslansky.

Fairuza Balk, an American-born Canadian immigrant, beat out hundreds of applicants for the starring role of Dorothy, the Kansas farm girl played by Judy Garland in the 1939 film classic, "The Wizard of Oz."

"Up the Creek," a zany and outrageous action comedy about college students competing in an annual whitewater river rafting race. Starring Tim Matheson and Stephen Furst — who previously teamed on the comedy "Animal House." "Up the Creek" was directed by Robert Butler from the screenplay by James Kouf. The film was produced by Michael Meltzer and Fred Baum.

"Beat Street," a contemporary musical about the street dancin' craze known as "break dancing," "rapping," "electric boogie" and "sci-fi street sounds" will be June's entry. "Beat Street" is produced by Harry Belafonte and David V. Picker, and was directed by Andy Davis from the screenplay by Steve Hager. Musical supervisor is Arthur Baker.

"Scandalous" is the saga of an unsuspecting tv reporter (played by Robert "Airplane" Hays) who becomes the victim of a farcical con game engineered by a seasoned and suave master-of-disguise (played by Sir John "Arthur" Gielgud) and his attractive accomplice (played by Pamela "Superman III" Stephenson).

John Irving's best-selling novel of the hilarious, heart-breaking and horrendous events in the daily life of the eccentric Berry clan, is now a major motion picture — "The Hotel New Hampshire," starring Jodie Foster, Nastassja Kinski, Rob Lowe, Beau Bridges and Paul McCrane. The film was directed by Tony Richardson (who won an Oscar for "Tom Jones") from his screenplay, which is based on Irving's novel. Neil Hartley is the producer, and the co-producers are Pieter Krooneburg and David J. Patterson.

The zany duo is back again, this time in an hilarious contemporary comedy of the updated classic —

Cheech and Chong's "The Corsican Brothers" starring . . . who else! . . Cheech & Chong. Produced by Peter MacGregor-Scott, the film was directed by Tommy Chong from the screenplay he wrote with Richard "Cheech" Marin.

The true story of Fletcher Christian and Captain Bligh and the events which occurred during the infamous Mutiny on the Bounty take on epic proportions in the Dino DeLaurentiis Production, "The Bounty." Starring are Mel Gibson ("The Year of Living Dangerously," "The Road Warrior," "Mad Max"), Anthony Hopkins ("Magic"), Sir Laurence Olivier and Daniel Day Lewis.

"The Bounty" was directed by New Zealand filmmaker Roger Donaldson (who received accolades for his "Smash Palace") from the screenplay by Robert Bolt.

Vasey Puts on Prize-Winning Play

By KAREN GOTTFRIED

"Buried Child," the 1979 Pulitzer Prize winner by Sam Shepard, is being performed at Vasey Theatre. Shepard's playwriting style is unique, as shown in his most popular work. Although the play seems to be depressing, it turns out to be strange, often eerily comic. This is due to the excellent performance by the actors under the direction of Lon Winston.

Shepard has an original use of language that is mixed with apparent realism. Symbolism is evident as the plot unfolds. The metaphors may seem somewhat confusing, but eventually the viewers are able to understand them.

Like much of Shepard's work, the central theme is the search for roots — the attempt to resurrect an identity from the ruins of the past. In the play, a young man returns to his family after a long absence — only to find that they do not recognize him. The confrontations which follow force the family to acknowledge the secrets they have long kept hidden.

Through the eyes of an outsider we are given the opportunity to be judgemental towards the family. The outsider is a young womanm, Shelly, portrayed by Donna Pharo Dykes, who accompanies the grandson Vince, played by Andrew F. Thain, into his past. The family has kept a scandalous secret hidden, one that rises to the surface at the end of the play. Through the theme of searching for roots, the ruins of the past are awakened.

The cast also includes RoseMary Gaffney as Halie, Mark Conti as Dodge, Joseph M. Orazi as Tilden, Joe Seefeldt as Bradley, and Dean Dougherty as Father Lewis. The cast consists of Villanova students and local actors.

Brothers clash in a scene from "Buried Child."

Once again, Professor Winston has demonstrated his exceptional ability not only as director but also as a set designer. The floor of the set is dirt, and on this is old, shabby furniture. "The set is barren because the people are barren," according to Professor Winston. To his credit he has also directed and designed the sets of "Josephine the Mouse Singer," "Death of a Salesman" and "Firebugs," all of which were performed at Villanova University.

"Buried Child" will have its last performances tonight and tomorrow at 8 p.m. at Vasey Theatre.

STAR TREK II THE WRATH OF KHAN

Women Lose in Semi's

By BOB HELLER

Villanova's women's basketball team concluded its 1983-84 season with the Big East Tournament at St. John's University March 1-4. The Wildcats advanced to the tournament semi-finals before being eliminated by host St. John's, 63-48, finishing their season with a 22-7 record.

St. John's opened up a six-point lead early in the game, while Villanova was having problems making a field goal. The Wildcats were only able to get within two points, 20-18, with just five minutes remaining in the first half. During the waning moments of the first half, St. John's increased their lead to seven, 32-25.

The second half was all St. John's as they outscored the Cats, 31-23, to advance to the conference finals with a 63-48 victory. The Wildcats were paced by senior Nancy Bernhardt and freshman Shelly Pennefather, with 14 and 12 points respectively. Leading St. John's was Barbara Rapp with 16 points.

In the Wildcats opening game of the tournament against the Georgetown Hoyas, Villanova ran up a 24-4 lead midway in the first half before finishing with a 69-59 victory.

Two Villanova team records were set in free throws made and free throw percentage for a season. The Cats made 451 an 598 free throws for an amazing 75.4 percent, third best in the country.

Nova placed three women in double figures, paced by Bernhardt's 18 points. Senior Andrea Burton added 14 while Pennefather dumped in 13 to help pace the Wildcats' scoring attack. Pennefather also pulled down 15 rebounds and blocked five shots, tying a school record for most blocked shots in a game.

The Villanova-Georgetown game also saw senior Nancy Bernhardt getting her 2000th career point, one of 40 women in the country to have achieved this honor. Bernhardt finished her career with 2,018 points, tops on the Villanova all-time scoring leaders.

The 1983-84 season also saw the Wildcats setting over 20 individual, team and class records, over half of them by Bernhardt alone.

Freshman Pennefather also set a class record for total points and points per game with 504 and 19.4 respectively. Her 504 points and 253 rebounds rank her 11th and 10th respectively among the all-time leaders in those categories at Villanova.

"We were very pleased with this season," commented assistant coach Andy McGovern. "We succeeded in winning 20 games and gaining a share of the Big Five and Big East regular season titles. We will miss the three graduating seniors but are looking forward to next season with the addition of our incoming freshmen."

Fight to the Finish

By N. JOHN CAVUTO

One of the few good things about March is that the NCAA tournament rolls in. This year's 53-team format is especially exciting since at least eight teams have a strong shot at the NCAA championship. The days of one team dominating college basketball, such as UCLA did in the 60s and early 70s are gone. Today, almost every game has the potential of being an upset. Just look at what North Carolina State did last year.

There is a changing of the guard taking place in college basketball. Missing the 53-team cutoff this year were such previous basketball powerhouses as UCLA, Notre Dame and Marquette. Where once the East was considered to be the weakest section of the country for college basketball, it now brags of being the best, having placed two teams, Georgetown and North Carolina, as No. 1 seeds in their regionals this year. And the once-dominant West has taken a complete nose dive. Not one western team earned a first round bye this year.

At NCAA tourney time, you can usually count on a few sure bets, like DePaul getting knocked out early, some unknown playing the role of giant-killers for several rounds, and a few disgruntled teams angered by not receiving a bid. Lamar has good reason to be angry, as they had to settle for the NIT despite sporting a 25-4 record. But you can't please all of the people all of the time.

This year, however, may be different in several respects. First, DePaul will not lose in the first round. Nor the second. But alas, they will not make the Final Four. Yes, Coach Ray Meyer will have to settle for a loss in his finale.

In the regionals, Georgetown should breeze through the West as they did in '82 and look to be the surest bet for the Final Four. In the Midwest, a slight upset goes to Houston winning the Regional, but look out for Memphis State.

In the Mideast, sorry guys, but Villanova will find it very rough to get past Maryland. Look for the Cats to be a strong contender again in '85. It will be very hard for anyone to beat Kentucky when they play on their home court, but Louisville, another Kentucky team, may just be the one to do it. Kentucky may have the strongest front court in the country, with twin towers Sam Bowie and Melvin Turpin, but they are much less effective when their outside shooting game is off, and Jim Masters has been highly erratic all year. Maryland follows up its ACC Championship with a berth to the Final Four.

Finally, in the East, North Carolina, with what many believe to be the strongest team in the country, will have the toughest road to the Final Four. This regional includes several teams that can upset North Carolina, including Temple, Arkansas and Auburn. There is a good chance for the Razorbacks to make it two in one season over North Carolina. However, give Dean Smith another trip to the Final Four.

Of the final four teams, Maryland is the one with the least talent. Georgetown will also be coming off an easy regional and will be geared for the game. Maryland just does not have the horses to compete with them.

In the other matchup, we find a different situation. Houston is a team with plenty of talent, but not a lot of coaching. Guy Lewis would be better as a playground supervisor, just handing his players out the balls and telling them to play. Coach Smith of North Carolina puts Lewis to shame.

So it looks like North Carolina and Georgetown will meet in the final one more time. Okay, so what else is new? Both Georgetown and North Carolina have the talent, the deep bench and the coaching to win it all. But North Carolina has the tougher road. And Georgetown has Pat Ewing. And doesn't it seem like the bad guys always win? People may ask, "What the hell's a Hoya?" To that, I say, "A national champion."

Strong Finish by Runners

Coming off its capturing of the Big East Championships, the Villanova women's track team headed for the Carrier Dome in Syracuse, N.Y., to compete in the NCAA Indoor Track Championships held on March 10 and 11.

Veronica McIntosh and Patty Bradley finished first and second respectively, in the 800-meter dash.

The Wildcats captured third in the nation in total team standings with 30 points, behind Nebraska and Tennessee, which had 58 and 48 points, respectively.

Leading the Wildcats once again were junior Veronic McIntosh and senior Patty Bradley. In the 800-meter dash, McIntosh placed first with a time of 3:06.82 while teammate Bradley placed second, a mere fourteen one-hundredths of a second later, with a time of 2:06.96. Both times proved to be not only winning ones, but significantly improved ones with each performer running several whole seconds faster.

Freshman Lauren Searby set one of three Villanova University records made at the meet. Her time of 4:23.72 gave her a fourth-place finish in the 1500-meter run. Meanwhile, in the 1600-meter relay, yet another Nova record was set by the relay team of Joanne Van Rensselaer, Bradley, Debbie Grant and McIntosh. They combined for a fifth place finish with a time of 3:42.17.

The 3200-meter relay was the event which saw the third Nova record set by the relay team of Kelly Toole, Colleen Gallagher, Joanne Kehs and Mary Ellen McGowan, who gave the Wildcats a third place showing with a time of 8:43.44.

For a program that has only been in Division I for two years, third in the nation promises bigger and better things in the future.

Head Coach Bob Shoudt commented: "There's no doubt that we're very pleased with our progress. To come so far in such a short time is just tremendous."

In a program where the coach is only part-time coach, third in the nation proves to be an even bigger accomplishment. "Schools such as Tennessee and Nebraska are maximum scholarship schools and that adds a handicap to us," commented Shoudt. "The first, second and third teams are always recognized as the track leaders and it's very exciting to gain such recognition."

Coach Shoudt was not left out of the awards either. Shoudt was voted Women's Track Coach of the Year by the NCAA women's track coaches. "It was a tremendous honor for me and a great feeling," added Shoudt.

Both Coach Shoudt and the entire women's track team are to be congratulated for such an outstanding season.

Big East

like they came in part of the deal for Manhattan — those things are old! Pitt and Providence are understandably plain, Seton Hall fans like to dress like the invisible man (Wouldn't you if your team was 1-5 lifetime in the tournament?)

Once at the games the fans display unique styles. Georgetown fans yell "Hoya Saxa" (Latin for "what rocks!"), Villanova fans throw streamers, St. John's fans throw punches and Seton Hall fans . . . they don't show up. (Would you if your team was 2-14 this season?)

In the crowd at any game there exists a variety of subcultures, readily identifiable groups.

The Purists — These are the ones that sit in the stands and tell coach Massimino (with over 200 career victories) to "go to a box and one."

White players in the crowd — they watch Dwayne McClain do an incredible alley-oop jam and copy it.

Black players in the crowd — they watch Dwayne McClain do an incredible alley-oop jam and copy it.

Basketball Prostitutes — These charity cases are a personal favorite. They get their name from their willingness to sell themselves for the sole purpose of getting on television. They will stop at nothing, dressing up like a clown, funny-nose glasses, a demeaning sign like "Get well, Dad" (When Dad isn't sick) or the current rage—painting the face.

If you find yourself included in these groups, don't fret and don't get angry, you have company about three days in cold New York.

Ruggers Head South

The Villanova ruggers started off the season with a tournament in Fort Lauderdale during the spring break. Although the matches do not count toward the official spring record, they were instrumental in helping the team tune up for the first opening game at George Mason University, in Virginia on March 17.

The Nova ruggers won the first match against East Carolina University, 12-10, despite falling victims to a burglary the evening before. The team continued the week, falling victims of a different sort, the Naval Academy, 14-4, one of three Villanova University records made at the meet. Her time of 4:23.72 gave her a fourth-place finish in the 1500-meter run. Meanwhile, in the 1600-meter relay, yet another Nova record was set by the relay team of Joanne Van Rensselaer, Bradley, Debbie Grant and McIntosh. Brian Fisher scored early in the second half of the E.C.U. game to put Villanova on the board with four points. Michael Scalzo kicked the conversion for two points to tie E.C.U. 6-6. Fisher scored again with twelve minutes left in the game to put Nova ahead. Scalzo topped it off by making the conversion kick of two points. E.C.U. scored with less than two minutes to go in the game, but they missed the conversion to tie the game, and Nova went on top 12-10.

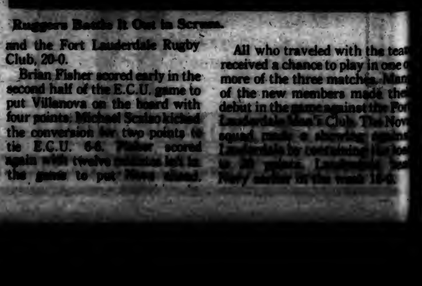
Navy, the No. 3 ranked team in the nation, a good fight team in the nation, a good fight but lost 14-4. Jamie Crawford passed off the ball to Scalzo who turned up the field to give Nova their only score of the game. The team spirit demonstrated on the field during the games united the players to rally for an enjoyable week.



Ruggers Battle It Out in Scrum.

All who traveled with the team received a chance to play in one or more of the three matches. Many of the new members made their debut in the game against the Fort Lauderdale Men's Club. The Nova squad made a showing against Lauderdale by containing the host up 28 points. Lauderdale beat Navy earlier in the week 18-6.

Redmen Tomahawked

By MIKE BRADY

As many coaches acknowledge, this is the time of the year when games are not merely won on talent, but rather on character. This character has been quite prevalent in the waning moments of the 1983-84 basketball season.

Junior Gary McLain is a prime example of the character that comprises the Villanova basketball program. McLain, an 83.7 percent free-throw shooter, sank seven of eight free-throws in overtime to help the Wildcats post an exciting 73-72 victory over St. Johns.

With the victory, Villanova finished the regular season with a record of 17-10 and a 12-4 conference mark which was good enough for a tie for second place with Syracuse.

The lead in the game changed hands 28 times, but it was McLain's free-throws in overtime that ultimately secured the victory.

With the score at 68-68, McLain was sent to the line on an intentional foul by St. John's guard Mark Jackson with 58 seconds remaining, and he netted both. He then preserved the lead by stealing the ball from Chris Mullin for his sixth steal of the game. Mullin, who finished with a game high of 28 points, reacted by committing his fifth personal foul and sending McLain to the line once again, where he made both ends of the one-and-one with 14 seconds remaining. With six seconds remaining, McLain put the game out of St. John's reach by making the first shot of yet another one-and-one.

Villanova is 4-1 in overtime games this season, with two of those victories coming against St. John's. St. John's sparked a comeback late in the second half which erased a seven-point Villanova lead and eventually forced the overtime. Trailing by one point at the half, 33-32, the Redmen went without a point for 5:12, which enabled Villanova to take a 55-48 lead with 8:07 left. At this point, the Redmen instituted a half court trap, causing three consecutive turnovers and enabling them to capture the lead at 56-55.

For the rest of the way, the two teams traded baskets until Mike Moses drove past McClain and dumped in a shot that sent the contest into overtime. Led by McLain, Dobbs and Pressley, Villanova had five players in double figures.

Women Face Long Road

By MICHELE NAPOLI

What happens when your team has no home games? Well, this is the question that women's softball coach Debbie McKee will be able to answer at the end of this year's season, for the VU team will not be playing at home this spring. "Fortunately, most of our games are close by," said McKee, "so maybe friends and fans will be able to come and support the team."

Supposedly, the women were to have a new field near the Field House. However, "due to the construction and the rain and the snow, we had to switch all home games away," commented Coordinator of Women's Athletics Mary Anne Steenrod. "We did this to ensure the girls not losing any games for this season. It is very unfortunate that it had to happen, but it is better than having to cancel games and have the team lose games because the field isn't ready."

According to Director of Athletics Dr. Theodore A. Aceto, "There is no grass on home plate and there is none in the outfield, so to play on the field would only ruin it for good."

The only solution then was to leave the field alone and to try to find another one for the team to have as its "homeground." However, these attempts were futile because the community did not have a nearby field that the softball team could use for the season.

Although she is a little disappointed, McKee remains optimistic about the team. "We're a pretty tough bunch and I think we can go up against the odds. We'll fight it together and hopefully pull the team even closer."

Head Coach Debbie McKee

McKee said she is counting on her seniors' leadership to help carry the team. She hopes that with the help of Ann Hannigan and Dona Hurley the team can pull through.

"I anticipate a winning season. We have a very talented group of kids and that is the key to our success. They are real competitors," McKee said.

Despite their not being able to have a home field, the team managed to receive the field across from the Field House as their practice field. McKee hopes to meet many people who will help support the team.

The team looks forward to having a new field next year that will be located just outside the field house. Said McKee, "It'll be fabulous. We'll be at the Field House and practically in the center of campus."

The new field will be an improvement for the team, especially compared to their past three years, when they have had three different fields, many of which were in out-of-the-way places.

Cats Open Season under the Sun

By JAMES H. DeLORENZO

ORLANDO, FLA. — Close, but no cigar.

Villanova's varsity baseball team came up short on its 10-day, nine-game visit here, as the Cats won one while losing eight in nine tough contests.

The Wildcat nine had traveled south in search of warm weather and a head start on some of their northern peers. In those respects, the trip was a success.

Opening the season at the University of Central Florida, Villanova drew first blood as they scored their first run in the first inning when junior outfielder Dan Mostardi singled home junior second baseman Jerry Holtz. UCF scored one in the second, but the Cats still led, 3-1. The chance for a Nova victory faded, however, when Central Florida scored three in the sixth and two in the eighth, to put the game out of reach.

Illinois State shut-out the Wildcats in a 1-0 heartbreaker the next day, a day on which sophomore southpaw Russell Gianforcaro hurled seven scoreless innings and allowed only seven hits.

Holtz was the star of the Western Kentucky game, batting three-for-four and driving home two runs with his first home run of the 1984 campaign, a 330-foot drive to right field. But Western Kentucky had scored six runs in the first inning, so everything from there was catch-up ball. The Cats came up short, 6-4.

Villanova's first victory was against an old foe, the St. Joseph's Hawks, 10-2, as senior lefthander Kevin Stevens picked up the win. Sophomore Steve Zolner, used primarily as a pitcher, made a rare plate appearance and collected four RBI's in one swing of the bat, as he swatted a grand-slam homer in the second inning of the contest. Senior Steve Fay also exhibited some power later in the game, as he slugged a solo blast in the sixth.

Third row: Assistant coach Phil Fidalgo, manager Jim DeLorenzo, Rick Faggioni, Bob Craskey, Chuck Bruno, John Corbin, Jerry Holtz, Sean Grady and Head Coach Larry Shane.

In a rematch with Central Florida, the Main Liners were less fortunate, as they were routed 14-1. It was the only bad game Villanova played down here, as UCF collected all of its runs in the last three innings.

Ithaca College gave Villanova one of the toughest losses in recent memory. The Cats never trailed, jumping ahead in the first inning, 2-0, on Holtz's second two-run homer of the trip, a 370-foot blast to right center. Villanova scored three more in the third, and one in the sixth, but Ithaca evened things up in the seventh inning with a six-run spurt.

With one swing of the stick, Ithaca took the game, when in the bottom of the ninth, on the first pitch, Ithaca rightfielder Tim Barone hit a home run, and the Cats were suddenly faced with a 7-6 loss.

Villanova's tough breaks continued unabated the next afternoon, when Rollins, who had come into the game at 8-2, escaped with a 7-6 win. Rollins' only two losses had come at the hands of the Minnesota Twins and the Pittsburgh Pirates. That's right, those Twins and Pirates. How you can see what a break that is now.

The Cats came close in a contest with Creighton, but as dice are by goes, close only counts with horseshoes and hand grenades. The game was decided early, as Villanova scored all four of its runs in the first three innings, and Creighton never scored after the second, but the two innings were all they needed to win, 5-4.

Villanova concluded its southern swing with a 10-5 loss to Stetson. Holtz hit his third homer of the season, but it wasn't enough to get the Cats a win.

The Wildcats left here with several promising signs. Holtz was well ahead of his 1983 home run pace, since he only hit two last season. The junior infielder exhibited some of the power he had in his rookie year, when he slugged nine homers and hit .352. After eight games in 1984, Holtz is hitting .379.

Also looking good is senior centerfielder John Corbin. Batting in the leadoff spot, Corbin drew seven walks in Flordia, and is hitting a strong .343.

On the mound, Gianforcaro has been impressive, pitching 12 consecutive innings of shut-out ball in starts against Central Florida and Illinois State. And Wildcat head coach Larry Shane has to be pleased with the early performance of Stevens, who picked up the lone win of the trip and pitched six strong innings against Creighton.

Nova came up short eight times down here, but was close to a win in each of the games. If they continue to play in the north as well as they did in Florida, the Wildcats should close the gap. Then it will be time to light those stogies.

Tracksters Compete

By PAUL MACCHIA

While most were getting ready for spring break, the Villanova men's track team was preparing for two meets, the IC4A Indoor Championships and the NCAA Indoor Championships.

On the weekend of March 3-4 the Cats competed in the IC4A meet at the Princeton University. The Cats' team placed fourth overall behind Penn State (62 points), George Mason (61 points), and Georgetown (56 points).

Martin Booker ran a personal best time in the 55-meter hurdles clocking in at 7.27, giving him third overall.

Jim Adams and Chip Jenkins both finished sixth in their respective events, the 400 and 500 meters. Adams clocked a 48.34, and Jenkins was timed in 1:05.8.

In the 800-meter run Kevin Davis and John Marshall picked up fifth and sixth places, running a close race as they were .01 apart in 1:52.64 and 1:52.65.

The following weekend the Cats traveled to the Carrier Dome in Syracuse to run the NCAA meet. The Cats pitched up four points to finish in a tie for 38th. Many of the teams gained the majority of their points in the field and jumping events.

Booker tied his personal best in the 55-meter hurdles in 7.27, yet placed eighth in the heats.

Big East Tourney Tough on Cats

By STEPHEN FALLON

Villanova 75
U. of Conn. 65

Syracuse 66
Villanova 65

All five starters scored in double figures Thursday as the Wildcats rolled to a 75-65 victory against Pittsburgh in the quarterfinals of the Big East Tournament in New York, but it was the defense that keyed the victory.

"We got down and played the tough defense in the second half. That made the difference," said Ed Pinckney.

The Wildcats appeared a little nervous at the outset and took a 27-26 lead into the locker room. But the Cats came out in the second half and stifled the Panthers with a variety of defensive looks. Villanova came up with 12 steals (a tournament-record-seven by Dwayne McClain), forced 22 Pitt turnovers and assumed control of the game at 49-37 with 9:40 remaining. Many of Villanova's second-half points came on layups following steals.

Another factor in the game was the second-half play of Ed Pinckney. "I thought Eddie, when we needed him down the stretch, played really well," said Coach Massimino. Pinckney had just four points at halftime but as the Wildcats began hitting their outside shots, things began to open up inside.

Pinckney began calling for the ball and once he got it, the overmatched Panther defense could do little but foul. Pinckney went to the line a staggering 15 times in the second half, converting on 13, as he tallied 17 points after the intermission.

The script was perfect. Villanova is trailing Syracuse 66-65 with 10 seconds remaining in the semi-finals of the Big East Tournament at Madison Square Garden. The Wildcats work the ball to Frank Dobbs, the senior who emerged as the leader of the team earlier in the year when disaster was impending. Dobbs takes the open 18-foot jumper and once again the Cats use last second pyrotechnics to snatch victory from the ignominious jaws of defeat.

"There have been some close ones down the stretch that we've won; they're either gonna go one way or the other."
Ed Pinckney

There is only one small problem. Someone forgot to tell the proverbial fickled finger of basketball fate, and Dobbs' jumper bounced off the back of the rim and the victory fell to Syracuse.

Such was the case last Friday in New York where the Wildcats came within a whisker against the Orangemen and an offensive juggernaut named Dwayne "Pearl" Washington. Washington, a first-team All Big East selection as a freshman, scored 30 points and handed out nine assists, making moves that Madison Square Garden hasn't seen since another "Pearl," named Monroe, ran the floor over 10 years ago.

Syracuse Coach Jim Boeheim said, "Villanova's a great defensive team, but no matter what defense they're in, it is very difficult for them to guard Dwayne Washington." Friday, Washington penetrated inside and swished from outside on his way to a career high, breaking his previous high of 28 set against Villanova in January.

Two of Washington's 30 points proved to be the game winners, a foul line jumper at the 1:15 mark. "When he [Gary McLain] stopped short, I stopped short and took the shot. If he had come up to challenge me, I would have tried to penetrate and take it to the basket," said Washington of the winning basket.

Despite Washington's stellar performance, the game was Villanova's to win. Following Washington's jumper the Wildcats got the ball and worked the clock down to :35 before calling time out. The Cats set up a play, but when the opportunity did not present itself, they called their final time out with 12 seconds left in the game.

With Ed Pinckney double-teamed inside, the ball went outside to Dobbs, but the jumper from just left of the foul line was too long. When Syracuse's Sean Kerins grabbed the rebound, the game was over.

"We had the shot that we wanted and we skipped the ball right across and it's just one of those things; it didn't go in," said Massimino.

"When it left my hand I thought the ball was going to go in, it just went off to the right," added Dobbs.

Villanova went into the locker room at halftime trailing 31-28 as a result of a frigid 37 shooting percentage and a 17-point clinic by Washington.

The Cats tied the score at 41-41, but again entered Washington, who hit three consecutive baskets as Syracuse went on to outscore Villanova, 18-9, to lead 59-50 with 7:50 remaining.

The Wildcats then embarked on the comeback trail with some deadly outside shooting by Dobbs and McLain. Dwayne McClain also provided clutch offense with eight of his 16 points in the final six minutes.

After the teams traded a couple of baskets, the Syracuse stall game began to go awry. The Cats ran off 10 straight points to take a 65-64 lead with 1:29 remaining. Syracuse then called a time out to set up Washington's game winner.

The Wildcats were 6-2 during the regular season on overtime games and contests decided by two points or less, so perhaps Pinckney, who led the Cats with 20 points, summed up the tough loss best: "There have been some close ones down the stretch that we've won; they're either gonna go one way or the other. Unfortunately today it went the other way."

I'M OPEN, I'M OPEN: Eddie Pinckney fights for position against Syracuse's Andre Hawkins.

Pinckney finished with 21, McClain scored 16, Harold Pressley and Gary McLain added 12 each and Frank Dobbs scored 11.

McLain also dished out 10 assists as the Cats remained the only team in the Big East never to lose in the opening round of the tournament.

Tournament Tidbits

By STEPHEN FALLON

DATELINE BIG EAST TOURNAMENT — So we lost. But how was it beyond that? Fine if you disregard the hotel shower built for Japanese jockeys (at least my toes are clean), my "press box" seat so high the games were just a rumor and a hamburger so cold I didn't even want to know, "Where's the beef?" And then there is the tournament finale (Georgetown 82, Syracuse 71), which proved not only that crime does pay, but it gets you a Georgetown diploma, or at least a striped shirt and a whistle.

It was fun, though. Honest. In watching the over 15 hours of basketball (no tan here) during the weekend it became apparent that the tournament not only pits team against team and player against player but fan against fan as well.

No Syracuse Orange fan worth his salt would dare venture into the hotel lobby without clothing fluorescent orange enough to light Times Square. Villanova fans are visible but unassuming in their support. B.C. folks opt for traditional hats and jackets. Georgetown likes "Hoya Power" pins (along with three-piece suits and optional duchesses). St. John's fans wear sweatshirts that look

Members of the Women's Track Team

Congratulations are in order for the women's track team after its outstanding performance this past week. In addition to winning the Big East and ECAC Championships beforehand, they went on to place third behind Nebraska and Tennessee in the Division I NCAA Indoor Track Championships last weekend in Syracuse, N.Y. For its efforts, the entire team has been named Budweiser Athlete of the Week.

It's interesting to know that the Cats had competed at the Division II level up until two years ago. Now, in their second year at the Division I level, they have quickly proven themselves as one of the best track teams in the country. Each one of Villanova's nine runners who ran in the Carrier Dome last weekend were named All-Americans. There, they displayed their extraordinary abilities among the nation's best runners.

Three new school records were set by the women's track team at the NCAA Indoor Track Championships. Lauren Searby was one of those to set a new mark at Villanova, placing fourth in the 1500-meter run with a time of 4:23.72. Two relay teams also set new records. Joanne Van Kensschaer, Debbie Grant, Veronica McIntosh and captain Patty Bradley combined for a time of 3:42.17 in the 1600-meter relay, taking fifth place. In the 3200-meter relay Kelly Toole, Colleen Gallagher, Joanne Kehs and Mary Ellen McGowan combined for a time of 8:43.44 and third place.

Also, in the 800-meter dash McIntosh finished first with a time of 2:06.82, with teammate Bradley right behind her, finishing second in a time of 2:06.96.

The success of the women's track team may also be attributed to the patience and guidance of coach Bob Shoudt. In his third year here at Villanova, Shoudt has been named "Coach of the Year" by the National Collegiate Athletic Association. For the few years that he has been at Villanova, Shoudt has made quite a big accomplishment through his personal coaching talents. Shoudt sums up the success of the team as a result of the women and the coaches working together: "Everyone did a super job. We feel that in a short period of two years we've become one of the top teams in the nation. All this came from real dedicated athletes and a dedicated coaching staff."

Senate Endorses Tuition Hike

By ROBERT M. JORDAN

The University Senate approved a budgetary resolution at its March 16 meeting which would raise overall student tuition costs by at least $500 next year.

Alvin Clay, chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, presented a report which mandated tuition increases to meet rising administrative costs and faculty salary increases in the 1984-1985 school year.

Clay revealed that the overall 8.7 percent tuition increase would raise next year's bill for Arts & Sciences and Commerce & Finance students from $5,370 to $5,840. Students in the Engineering or Nursing schools would pay $6,020 compared to the current price of $5,540. Law School costs would go from $5,770 to $6,290, a nine percent increase.

Dr. Justin Green led the debate against the tuition hike, asking, "What are the priorities of this university? This budget, like last year's, has the administrative budget going well up. It doesn't make sense to make Villanova into an administrative growth process over the educational process that it should be."

Dean Alvin Clay, chairman of Senate Budget Committee.

Administrative costs are slated to rise 14.5 percent, according to Green's figures, yet the University debt is down and income is up 12.3 percent this year.

When these figures were compared to the low rate of inflation, Gary Fenner, vice president for Financial Affairs, responded, "Our tuition increase doesn't compare to national inflation figures because of the great costs the university must absorb due to the technological revolution and student aid packages."

Tuition increases for local colleges were presented to be comparable with Villanova's price hike. According to Fenner's figures, La-Salle College's tuition is due to rise 10 percent, while St. Joseph's University, Bryn Mawr College and the University of Pennsylvania's costs will rise nine percent.

Dr. Justin Green

Fenner added that Villanova will pay out $36.9 million in staff salaries next year. A total of $8.3 million in benefits will go along with those salaries.

Summing up his opinions on the budget, Dr. Green said, "We've got to stop being rubber-stamp yes men. The faculty is frustrated, beside the students, over these ever-growing tuition increases."

Besides the 11.9 percent faculty salary increase, other reasons for the tuition hike include the increase in security staff, the $1.5 million tuition aid package and the jump in medical benefits for all University employees. Prices for parking lot permits would rise from $35 to $50 for students and $50 to $80 for faculty next year.

The motion to approve the budget, which would run from June 1, 1984, to May 31, 1985, passed by a vote of 25 to 4. Father Driscoll will now submit the budget for final approval at the next Board of Trustees meeting.

Groups: 'No More Competition'

By BRIAN D. WEBB

The Dean's Advisory Committee has accepted a plan to reduce competition among certain student organizations at Villanova.

"The main idea behind this change is to get rid of the competition among the major student groups," said Lucyna J. Gorski, director of Student Activities. "We want them to all feel that among the six of them, they should be pursuing the best program for the campus; not because they are whatever group they are . . . but because they want what is best for Villanova."

The Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, also saw problems with the old system. "There was just a little too much subtle competition, rather than cooperation. Each group was just a little too closed in within their own group and their own group's needs . . . The only things that people pushed were their own things."

Under the new system, each of the six major student organizations will send four representatives to form four separate committees. Each committee will have a specific function and a common goal.

The first of these committees, the Dean's Advisory Committee, will consist of the presidents of each of the six major student groups: the Villanova Union, the Resident Student Association, the Student Government, the Association of Commuting Students, the Interfraternity Council and the Panhellenic Council. Their function will be to advise Stack on the alcohol policy, academics and other major issues.

According to Gorski, the second committee will be known as the "facilitating committee." Each of the six major groups will send their vice presidents to comprise this committee. Their function will be to hear the various ideas contributed from the major groups and then report to their own groups to receive reaction. It is this "feedback" that Gorski believes will benefit all the student groups.

The third committee will be made up of the secretaries from each of the six groups. According to Gorski, "they will come out with one master calendar for the whole month . . . similar to the one the Union does now, but including all the organizations' events on it. This will allow more programs to happen at greater intervals, rather than at the same time over and over again.

The fourth committee will consist of the treasurers from each of the six organizations. They will serve as Gorski's budget committee. According to Gorski, these people will be responsible for "dividing and allocating all the money for all the organizations — not just themselves."

Gorski feels that by getting the groups to do programming together, they will not spend as much money. Gorski said, "This way, maybe they will plan just one dance that everybody will have some input on."

Stack is "not sure" that the new system will completely take care of the communication problems. Stack feels that competition between the groups "might" still exist.

Lucyna Gorski, director of Student Activities.

Students Sentenced

By AMELIA McGOVERN

Judge Armand A. Pomante, Villanova alumnus, of the district court 15-1-02 of Chester County, held a meeting on March 15 with several Villanova students arrested at the Sugartown Mews police raid on Feb. 24.

The 30 arrested students were sent citations to their school addresses, according to the Villanova students at the meeting.

They were given 10 days to pay the fine (maximum of $348.50). The students had to call the judge's office to find out the exact amount of their fines, according to Carla Maladotti, supervisor of the judge's office.

Maladotti said that the students were advised to schedule a meeting with Pomante to state their cases and discuss what the students could do to lower their fine. Only those students pleading not guilty to the charge are given a hearing. On March 15, at the meeting, no one pleaded "not guilty."

Maladotti explained, "Those students not in touch with us here within the 10 days are issued warrants."

The students in attendance were instructed to take a five-week, 10-hour course on "an educational alternative for the underage drinker," according to the flyer handed out by Pomante. The course is held by the Chester County Council on Addictive Diseases, in conjunction with the police departments of Tredyffrin and Easttown Townships and district court 15-1-02.

The program provides the offenders "with the opportunity to reflect on their decision-making skills and to increase their knowledge of alcohol and its effect on self and community." The course has a $50 fee, but successful completion almost always lessens the fine of the offender, explained Maladotti.

To one student, just shy of 21, Pomante said, "You are almost of legal age, and in your own state you can drink, but you can't in Pennsylvania. College is so expensive, I don't have to tell you. Study. Get good grades. Graduate. That's why you are here. These wild parties, we won't have. You can't drink here [in Pennsylvania]. Take it somewhere else."

He continued, "Your parents aren't here to hold your hands. The key word is responsibility."

Pomante told those present, "I am instructed to call the dean if there is some major problem with Villanova students. I haven't had to call him yet."

Pomante concluded, "Pass the word along — no more wild parties."

The students present declined comment.

Applications Up For Class of '88

By PAULA SOLLAMI

The number of applications for a place in the 1984 freshman class has increased 5.7 percent, from 6,914 last year to 7,314 for next year, according to the Rev. Harry J. Erdlen, O.S.A., dean of admissions.

This rise in applications is significant because it will cause fiercer competition among the prospective students for the allotted 1550 spots in next year's freshman class.

Erdlen offered several possible explanations for this increase in applications to Villanova, including the fact that although there are fewer 18 year-olds in the population today, most of these have chosen to apply to the more prestigious colleges. "Villanova is among these colleges because of its known academic excellence and its highly recognizable name," stated Erdlen.

The increase could be due to the fact that the Admissions' office implemented a new application process. "Because the process is more complicated and utilized by other highly competitive colleges such as Boston College and Colgate University, many people perceive Villanova to be on an equally high level. The inspiration to apply stems from a better perception of the university," according to Erdlen.

An interested student must now participate in a two-part process in order to apply to Villanova. In part one, the prospective student expresses his interest in the university and confirms this interest with a $25 check. The student then receives part two of the process, which is the actual application for admission.

Standards for admittance to Villanova will necessarily increase as a result of the large influx of freshmen applicants.

A larger waiting list will result. For the 1984-85 school year, the freshman waiting list will consist of approximately 1700 students. "All of these students are qualified to be admitted to Villanova," stated Erdlen. "There is just no room for them.

"The commitment to recruit excellent students has inspired Villanova to offer more money and scholarships than it has in previous years," asserted Erdlen. Therefore, the students that do enter Villanova next year will benefit from $500,000 more in financial aid. In addition, an increase from 13 to 23 scholarships to National Merit Award winners will be granted in the upcoming year.

The Rev. Harry Erdlen, O.S.A., dean of admissions.

Candidates Get Rules Briefing

By GARY R. DYER

The Student Government Election Committee held an informational meeting March 20 for students who plan to run in the April 5 student government elections.

On March 21 nominating petitions were made available. Each position requires signatures from 10 percent of the students eligible for the particular position sought. All signatures must be in pen with an accompanying student number. The University College Senate seat requires 108 signatures, five percent of the University College student population.

Petitions are due on March 27.

The positions to be filled are student body president, three senate seats for Arts, two for Commerce and Finance and one each for Sciences, Engineering, Nursing, the Graduate School, the Law School and University College. Also four seats on the Senate Academic Policy Committee (one each from Nursing, Arts and Sciences, Engineering and Commerce and Finance) are open, as well as a two-year term position on the Senate Rank and Tenure Committee (open to any student not from Commerce and Finance, which currently holds the other student position).

There are no nomination petitions for the Academic Policy Committee and Rank and Tenure Committee positions; candidates nominate themselves.

"This meeting is about information," said Student Body President Patrick Leahy. "Let's get everything out into the open.

"If you have a problem with another candidate, talk to that person," Leahy recommended to the group. "If it isn't cleared up, talk to me."

"I don't anticipate any problems this year," Leahy commented. "I think that the Elections Commission is comprised of people of integrity, and I think the people who came here tonight have integrity and will reflect well on Villanova in general.

There were four students at the meeting planning to run for the office of student body president, according to several participants.

"If there are problems, they will be dealt with swiftly," Leahy added.

The four penalties the Elections Commission can apply are: prohibition from participation in the presidential debate; a ban on posting material until election day; a ban on campaigning and posting of materials; and removal of the candidate's name from the ballot.

Leahy explained to the assem-Commission can be appealed to the dean of students.

bly that any decisions made by the

The campaign begins on March 30. The presidential debate will be held in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall on April 3 at 12:45 p.m.

Voting will be in Bartley Cafeteria from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m. April 4 and 5 for University College students and from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. on April 5 in the Connelly Center Cinema for day students.

If a run-off election is necessary for president, it will be held on April 10. The position of student body president requires that a candidate receive 40 percent of the vote to win. All other positions require only a simple plurality.

The new student body president and senators will assume their positions on May 1.

Forum Planned at Penn

By AMELIA MCGOVERN

The University of Pennsylvania will hold an open forum from March 26 to April 26 with the theme "Toward Improving the American Political System." "We are seeking to engage the campus and the area community in a mutual exploration of the topic," said University President Sheldon Hackney.

"By assembling the University's resources and attracting experts from across the country, the Forum seeks to focus public discussion in this central issue," noted Hackney.

The month-long forum will be kicked off with "The Future of American Democracy: A Liberal vs. Conservative Debate." Barney Frank, congressman, D.-Massachusetts, and Phil Crane, congressman, R.-Illinois, will be the guests on March 26.

Other highlights include "The Media and Politics" on April 2. Edwin Guthman, editor of the Philadelphia Inquirer, and William Leonard, former president of NBC News are two of the scheduled panelists.

Former Secretary of State and Professor of Law at the University of Georgia Dean Rusk will speak on April 11. His topic will be "The Conduct of Our Democracy's Foreign Policy."

On April 20 Professor Martin Kilson of Harvard University will speak on "The Maturation of Black Politics."

"Events that are scheduled but still being finalized include a discussion between Ed Koch and Wilson Goode on governing urban America and presentations by the bipartisan Committee on the Constitutional System and the National Women's Political Caucus," Hackney said.

"All of the program events are open to the public free of charge. In my view, this Forum marks a reemphasis of the American university's role to educate society at large. The university provides an important forum in our culture for the thoughtful exploration of social, political and economic issues from all aspects and perspectives.

Hackney concluded, "We are pursuing a topic that will influence not only the choices we make in a presidential election year but also the directions we choose for the future."

Professor Talks on Visit to USSR

By LISA LESTISHOCK

Professor Jonathan Goldstein of the department of history at Georgia College spoke on March 19 in Dougherty Hall concerning his recent tour of European Russia, Central Asia, Siberia and the Peoples' Republic of Mongolia.

It was during Goldstein's stay in the Soviet Union that the Korean passenger plane was shot down, killing 269 people. According to Goldstein, his tour group was traveling through Siberia at the time and "spent many days on the train without the slightest idea of what was going on." The first information his group received concerning the flight was through a phone call made by a member of the group for the independent People's Republic of Mongolia to the United States. The first words which came over the telephone line were, "Have you heard that a Korean airliner was shot down and did you know that there was a Georgia congressman aboard?"

When asked to express his opinion concerning the destruction of the Korean flight, Goldstein explained that in the Soviet Union, "nothing remains the same with out official permission. Since the Korean flight did not have official permission, it was most likely standard procedure to destroy it."

Goldstein also spoke of the lack of freedom in the Soviet Union as compared to the United States. For example, certain parts of the Soviet Union could not be seen by tourists. According to Goldstein, "They allow you to see what they want you to see, and what they don't want you to see, you don't see."

Resident AssistantsNamed

By SARAH BELSON

The Residence Life Office has announced the Residence Hall Staff for the 1984-85 academic year.

The 36 resident assistants were chosen after two rounds of interviewing from among 200 candidates.

The selection process begins in November, when interested students are required to fill out an application and attend one of six informational meetings. During the spring semester the first round of interviews begins. These half-hour sessions are conducted by three staff members: either two resident assistants (R.A.'s) and one head resident or three R.A.'s.

The second round of interviews is conducted by two professional staff members (the director of Residence Life, assistant directors or area coordinators) and one R.A.

The information from all interviews is forwarded to the Office of Residence Life. Director Christopher Janosik, Associate Director Janice Mauk, Assistant Director John Eccles and Area Coordinators Tara Austin and Barbara McGraw make the final selections during spring break.

The head resident for Sheehan Hall will be Dorrie Brzenk; R.A.'s will be Marie Foody, Karen Foytlen, Erinn Dougherty, Nancy Bloomberg, Karen Rushman, Linda Bond, Kelly Deegan and Cynthia Kean.

In Sullivan Hall the head resident will be Ford Trojanowski; under him as R.A.'s will be Matt Garman, Rich Buonocore, Mike Ward, James Eicher, Paul Hackenberger, Gus Hoban, Keith Adams and Chris Lattman. The R.A.'s in Austin Hall will be George Mauch and Chris Fletcher; Corr Hall's R.A.'s will be Fred Murphy and Tom Sollecito, while Pete Gearhart will be the R.A. of Galberry.

In the West Area, St. Mary's head resident will be Dermot Anderson, and the R.A.'s will be John Beller, Bob Delmond, John Godley, Drew Hoffman, Ed Lis, John Monahan, William Rahn and Mike Ryan. In Fedigan Hall the head resident will be Ed Gallagher, and the R.A.'s will be Anthony Skoutelas and Bill Luecht. The R.A.'s for Delurey Hall will be Tom Schopper and Robert Sprague.

In Moriarty Hall the R.A.'s will be Kevin McKeown and Glenn Gavan. Alumni's head resident will be Rose Fox and the R.A.'s will be Jenny Catalano and Lisa Masone. O'Dwyer's R.A.'s will be Mary Ward and Jeaneen Riely; St. Rita's Hall R.A. will be Pam Pentin, and Simpson's will be Regina Leonard.

In the South Area, Good Counsel Hall's head resident will be Carolyn Bohner; and the R.A.'s will be Maryanne Ryan, Cynthia Kirchner, Mary Genoy, Anne Grasso and Jane Keffer. The head residents for the two as-yet-unnamed halls on the south campus will be Beverly Reilly and Christine Obetz; the R.A.'s will be Margaret Gike, Deborah Concavage, Katherine Palmer, Cathy Marino, Ellen Coyle and Joelle Haugherty. Stanford Hall's head resident will be Gary Khalil, and the R.A.'s will be John Bedrossian, Tom Hoffman, Joe Bushinsky, Mark Greene, Paul Tufano, Jeff Hemmel, Hank Boggio, Mike Saulino, Gene Riccardo, Tim Armitage, Gary Degan and Scott Miller.

In the first round, interviewers question candidates in an attempt to evaluate certain qualities, such as communication skills, assertiveness, enthusiasm, leadership and organization, according to Eccles.

Candidates who show potential in the first interview are invited back for a second round of questioning, where the same areas are covered with a greater intensity. The second round also gives interviewers an opportunity to concentrate on areas that may not have been covered during the first half-hour interview, according to Area Coordinator Tara Austin. She also added that although interviewers try to find out as much as possible about a candidate, they rarely ever ask situational, 'what if' type questions.

Christopher Janosik, director of Residence Life.

UnderageDrinking

Think for a moment. When a Villanova student who is not yet 21 years of age takes a drink, whether at a party (on or off campus) or at Kelly's (getting in with fake identification or a friend's), he is breaking the law. We sometimes tend to overlook this important fact, thinking he is not really doing so. He isn't harming anyone, is he?

Recently, 30 Villanova students were caught breaking this law at a party at Sugartown Mews. At a meeting that District Court Justice Armand A. Pomante, a Villanova alumnus, had with some of these students on March 15, the guilty parties were given no pity. The judge did not care that one of the students was nearly 21 and already legal in his own state. The students were forced to face the fact that they broke the law and would be accordingly punished. They were all instructed to go to a course held by the Council on Addictive Diseases, which lasts five weeks and costs $50. After completing the course the students will be issued a fine of from $48.50 to $348.50. These students were treated as criminals. The embarrassment they felt could be sensed in the courtroom.

Students will continue to drink — nothing is more obvious. The issue here is not the morality of underage drinking, but rather one of legality. If a student gets caught drinking, he will have to pay the consequences.

The law as it stands, though, should be questioned. Pennsylvania law states that a person is an adult at age 18 but cannot consume alcoholic beverages until he is 21. The law seems maligned. A person can be sentenced for murder, serve in the armed forces and die for his country, but he cannot drink in a bar.

Can students be expected not to drink? Not at all. They must, however, make a responsible choice and must be willing to face the consequences of their actions. Underage drinking, no matter how we feel about it, is still against the law.

Fine Showing

Dec. 28, 1983. A nightmare for the Villanova men's basketball team. The Wildcats had traveled to Jacksonville, Fla.,to compete in the Gator Bowl Basketball Tournament, and virtually nothing was going Nova's way. In the tourney's opening round the previous night, the Jacksonville Dolphins had come out of oblivion to race past the Cats, 67-63. And now it was Auburn's turn, as the Tigers jumped ahead early and never looked back in their 95-83 win.

The succeeding return to the North was, at first, no kinder on Villanova. Syracuse dumped them on Jan. 3 and Boston College took home a 74-63 victory four days later. Villanova, which a season earlier had reached the NCAA Final Eight, suddenly found itself at 3-7 with nothing to look forward to except a grueling Big East schedule.

What had gone wrong? Most pointed to the loss of John Pinone, Stewart Granger and Mike Mulquin, who had left the program along with 4000 points, 1400 rebounds and 1000 assists. The critics said it would take at least a full year for the Cats to recover from those six departures.

Actually, it took just a little over a month, for after that sluggish start, Nova streaked back to grab 15 of its last 19 games. They clipped such top 20 teams as Arkansas, Syracuse and Georgetown, and, in that strong finish, captured 12 out of 14 Big East match-ups — good enough for a tie for second place in the conference.

For a team stuck in such an early-season rut, the Cats had performed admirably. We congratulate Villanova for its fine performance and wish all the best to departing seniors Michael Enright and Frank Dobbs. They have been instrumental in maintaining the tradition so unique to this Main Line campus.

Letters to the Editor

Justin Green & the CIA

To the Editor:

LaBarth's story regarding my connections with the CIA contained half truths, innuendoes and inaccuracies that need to be set straight.

First, I did not refuse LaBarth an interview. In order to protect myself against just the kind of a story he wrote I asked him to read the project's final report before talking to me. I also requested him not to quote from the report until we had spoken. Apparently LaBarth did not feel that it was worth doing homework to get the facts from me, nor did his ethics prohibit him from violating my request not to quote the report.

LaBarth errs when he says that the experts I asked to meet and discuss Philippine stability were uninformed about the connection between Booz-Allen and the CIA. The group did meet, were aware of the CIA connection and also knew that this was a scholarly unclassified project.

Quoting widely from "The Progressive," LaBarth uses weasel words "reportedly and supposedly" to turn innuendo into fact and violating journalistic ethics never informs his readers that "The Progressive" is a radical, left-wing journal whose views in the opinion of many often parallel those of Communist and terrorist groups in the United States and abroad.

I would like to inform the entire Villanova community that I am proud, not ashamed, of the work I did for the CIA. It was scholarly. (I have already had one article based on the work accepted for publication; others are being written.) My colleagues both at Villanova and in the community of Philippine Scholars were informed about the work. I presented the findings at an open meeting of Villanova's Social Science Forum in the fall and those present were unanimous in their judgment that the work represented quality scholarship. Not only did my colleagues and Villanova's administration know about my work, I also discussed it in class with my students last fall.

Further, I believe that Americans regardless of their feelings toward any arm of their government have the duty to contribute the kind of expertise that will enable the nation's leaders to make better, more rational decisions than those that have plagued our foreign policy over the last two decades. For myself, I can only do this within a scholarly unclassified framework. Others, however, may choose to work on classified projects. I do not presume to judge them.

According to the polls, Americans have very little confidence in the press. I suspect that's so because they know that reporters like LaBarth are more interested in forwarding their careers by sensationalism or character assassination through implication than they are in making an honest effort to get all the facts. LaBarth said to me, "Do you expect me to do all this work just to get an interview with you for this story?"

My response made here is "Yes LaBarth, I believe ethics demand that you get all the facts necessary to write an accurate story." Unfortunately, in the case of LaBarth, Villanova appears to have failed to inculcate the value system of which it is justifiably proved. Also and unfortunately in my view the system designed to prevent this kind of misreporting from occurring failed. Though a free press at Villanova is very important, surely it's just as important that it be a fair press.

Nursing Images

The image of the nurse is similar to most stereotypes — there's a grain of truth in them. Everyone has a certain image of the typical nurse because everyone has had some contact with a nurse either personally, through the media or both. The image of the nurse was the topic of a recent campus-wide poll. The participants included 43 male and 40 female Villanova undergraduates ranging in ages from 18 to 24 and representative of all degree majors. The subject matter of this poll concerned the image of the typical nurse and how the nurse is viewed personally, professionally and through the media.

The majority of the students surveyed believed that their images of the nurse were different from the media's. Most respondents tended to emphasize the positive aspects in their personal images of a nurse: patient, kind, dedicated, sincere, compassionate, helpful, friendly, gentle, understanding, considerate, efficient, professional, intelligent, competent, hardworking and responsible.

There were also some more dubious descriptions: sexy, blonde, cute, attractive, obedient, doctor's helpers. And of course there were more negative ones, as well: flaky, bossy, ruthless, loose, cold, unfeeling, unintelligent, mean, nosey, flirts, stupid, seducer of male patients or looking for a doctor to marry.

Most respondents believed that the media seemed to portray nurses in a more negative light. According to the media,the attributes a nurse possesses include being either pretty, air-headed sexpots or nasty, ugly, overbearing battle-axes. One male participant said he saw nurses protrayed in the media as being one of two extremes-"... either a sergeant-major or an airhead — neither extreme being particularly flattering.

There were, however, other less negative or altogether positive images, such as: young, social, knowledgeable in medicine, helpful. And of course, the more saintly attributes: responsible, loyal, sincere, caring, selfless. In short, the media's positive images were not much different from the positive images which the respondents themselves had.

However, the most powerful image held by both the media and the students — one that seemed to run through all the surveys — is "nurse as woman." Even when people didn't state specifically that they thought of a nurse as a woman, their answers implied that that was the way they felt; they used words such as "blonde," "beautiful," and, most importantly, "she."

Although most respondents believed that their images of the nurse were vastly different from the media stereotypes, the "positive" stereotypes they held were surprisingly similar to the media's. Certainly, this is because people are influenced by the media — and in turn, the media are influenced by the people. As with any stereotype,there tends to be an element of truth until it is applied universally. There are nurses who fit into any of these categories, but certainly there is not one attribute that can be used to describe all nurses.

Handmaidens, harlots, saints, sinners, nurturer, browbeater, professional, technician, angels of mercy, women in white, battle-axes, sex symbols — images all, yet images indeed, for nurses are people who as human beings and professionals continue to evolve toward making themselves and their professions more expressive of who they are and what they do.

irresponsible contradiction between what the facts are and what the journalist reports the facts to be.

F. Paul Zinni Jr.
Graduate Student

The reporter replies: "Dr. Green's response to last week's article is welcome because he answers questions that he refused to in an article interview. However, there are several innuendoes and inaccuracies in his claims.

The intent of the article was not to publish an article on Green's scholarly work on the Philippines. Instead, some questions had been raised by The Progressive concerning the acknowledgement of his work to his colleagues. I asked Green to respond to this allegation. Green did indeed refuse to elaborate on the already published article, as was stated in my article. Incidentally, the report was read by this reporter.

There was no error in the claim that the experts Green consulted were uninformed about the Booz, Allen & Hamilton Inc., CIA connection. This was again clearly attributed to already published material, as cited in the article. I still question when the scholars were informed.

According to Green, there is a violation of ethics by using the journalistic terms "reportedly" and "supposedly." These terms are of common usage to reporters; these terms do not "turn innuendoes into fact" as Green claims, but are employed when full confirmation cannot be achieved by two or more sources. That was the intent of the interview, to clarify Green's role in conduct of research. For the record, this reporter conducted interviews with representatives of Booz, Allen & Hamilton, Inc., and the CIA, as well as with Dr. Priscilla Hopkirk, chairperson of the political science department, the Rev. John O'Malley, O.S.A., dean of arts and sciences, and the Rev. Lawrence Gallen, O.S.A., vice president of academic affairs.

As for the politics of The Progressive*, it would be editorializing in a straight news article to state as Green does that "its views in the opinion of many often parallel those of Communist and Terrorist groups in the U.S. and abroad." That is not fact but Green's opinion, again one that Green would not elaborate on in our interview. Again, for the record, the account of the CIA's venture into Philippine studies appeared in somewhat different form in* The Progressive Review*, a political quarterly at Princeton University.*

Finally, I must take objection to a quote attributed to me by Green. I did not say to Green, "Do you expect me to do all this work just to get an interview with you for the story." In actuality, Green handed me the report and said, "When you understand political risk analysis and have read and understood this, then you can talk to me." My reply was, "Do you expect me to read this paper's topic that has taken you years to become a specialist in and to fully comprehend it in a short period of time," to which Green responded, "Yes, if you want to interview me on

New History Courses Planned

By ROBERT O'MALLEY

The history department is offering a variety of new courses for students in an effort to expand and diversify its course selection.

The courses, most of which will be open to the students in the fall, are in several areas, including Islamic studies, democracy in the ancient world and science and technology.

Dr. Donald Kelley, chairman of the history department, feels that the two new courses on the Middle East are especially important.

"This is the first time that we have offered a historical coverage of the Middle East, and we feel that it's long overdue and very important. Obviously, with all of the happenings in Lebanon and Syria and other places, the course on Islamic history seems especially pertinent," claimed Kelley. Kelley stated that these courses are being offered to expand and diversify the department's offerings.

"If you compare what we were offering even last year with what is going to be offered this year and next year, you'd see a lot of new courses," Kelley said.

"In general, the history department is moving away from chronological or periods of history towards thematic presentations."

Kelley hopes that more student interest will be generated with this approach.

"We hope that if we make the mix of history electives sufficiently attractive, that we'll start picking up more and more history minors, and double majors and regular majors as well."

Dr. Donald Kelley, chairman of the history department.

Courses on the Women's Liberation movement, the history of the modern Middle East and the scientific revolution are some of the additions Kelley hopes will result in students' interest in history going beyond the required courses.

"It's one of our responsibilities in history. We feel that students pay quite a lot of money to come to Villanova . . . and we just have to provide a great mix of history courses," Kelley concluded.

One final observation of Goldstein was the difference of priorities between the Soviet Union and The United States. A primitive grocery store greatly contrasted the highly advanced satellites and other forms of technology in the Soviet Union.

In addition to his duties as a professor in the history department of Georgia College, Goldstein is the author of Philadelphia and China Trade. He taught at Villanova in the early 1970s.

Women's Issues Discussed

By MELISSA MARKARIDIAN

Guest speaker Dr. Joan Shapiro, associate director of Women's Studies at the University of Pennsylvania, presented a discussion and critique of the educational hierarchy, emphasizing its many sex stereotypes and injustices. The presentation was held March 14 in the Connelly Center and sponsored by the Women's Studies Forum.

"Women teach," Shapiro suggested, "while men, the minority, manage in all levels of education." Shapiro, speaking to a small audience, proposed that lack of confidence, lack of preparation and home environment restrictions are only some of the factors which have kept women out of administrative positions.

Shapiro discussed the impact of a report titled, "A Nation at Risk," compiled by the Reagan Commission for education. In its discussion of women's roles in education, Shapiro remarked, "It speaks of a 'master-teacher' . . . but implies no change in the teacher-manager structure."

"The report emphasizes leadership with fiscal responsibility," she added. "The bottom line in education is always money, never quality."

In a recent publication written by both Shapiro and her husband, she suggested a program of positional rotation to allow deans to move from one department to another and "outstanding capable teachers can move into administrative positions and then go back to teaching."

Women make up two-thirds of all teachers, Shapiro noted, but "men are unquestionably the leaders." Lack of effective female role models in teacher management positions, she explained, gives young women little or not administrative aspirations. "Do they really mean the best and the brightest or are they discriminating against us?"

Shapiro did not discourage students in the audience to pursue education careers. In fact, she assured that teachers will be in increasing demand, and students of education should move as far up the teaching ladder as they possibly can.

Job Club Introduced

By DAWN R. OLIVER

To provide seniors, as well as unemployed and underemployed alumni with career information, the university's Career Development Center, under the counseling of Wendy L. Elliott and Robert W. Wendover, has developed a program called Job Club.

This club began in March and specializes in bringing together individuals looking for job positions. It assists in giving support, information on job hunting and strategies.

The participants are required to attend three mandatory meetings in March at which topics such as career goals, resume writing, research options, risk taking, interviewing ideas and conduct, and job search strategies are among the items discussed. During these meetings participants work together in a group.

The organization, on occasion, brings in guest speakers to help with background information for the topics discussed in the group meeting. It also provides the participants with optional meetings held in April, at which interviews can be practiced individually.

According to Elliott, "This program is extremely motivating for individuals who have and have not had experience with job hunting."

Counselors schedule Job Club "drop in" hours on Tuesdays between 2 p.m. and 4 p.m. This period gives participants an opportunity to stop in and get caught up on topics in which they need more help. This program will last for as long as the participants want it. There is a two-week break period for graduation. The program will resume afterward. Those interested in becoming members should make an appointment with one of the career counselors immediately.

"We are here to be a positive reinforcer," said Elliott. "Our group meetings are a think tank and a real support system."

they would have a lot of people attend it, but instead of supporting it, while they may not have consciously torn it down, they clearly don't push the things," Stack stated. Stack believes that a possible solution to this problem would be to have just one student association with "branches" to satisfy the specific student concerns.

By eliminating all the current student groups "as we know them," and forming one association, Stack believes that the students would work together more and, ultimately, have even "more say" into what is actually done. This last proposal, however, was rejected by the Dean's Advisory Committee last month.

the topic."

Once again, I reiterate the article was not to be directly related to Green's work in which he is definitely an expert, but the ethics he employed in conducting his research. The article was fair and journalistically sound.

As for Frank Zinni's letter, I have two comments to make. First, the information in the article was supplied by Newsweek magazine, Rolling Stone magazine and World Press Review. Secondly, as a journalist, I am expected to be informed. As an "aspiring student of political science" you are expected to be informed about your subject of expertise. Your letter's misspelling of a country, a city and a political term leads me to question your credibility in the area.

Police Raid

To the Editor:

I was very upset and disturbed with the article which appeared in the Villanovan on March 16 titled "Students Arrested in Police Raid."

Several references pertaining to Alpha Chi Omega and Zeta Psi were incorrect and I feel they should be cleared up immediately.

In the first place, no one from either organization was arrested. The members of Zeta Psi who live in the apartments complied with the LCB, and cooperation was given by all in attendance. Second, no one was charged at the door and, last but not least, neither Alpha Chi Omega nor Zeta Psi was rushing.

Panhellenic and the National with which we are affiliated do not allow rush parties which include alcohol and we abide by all rush rules. The social between our members and pledges was closed and no other people besides those associated with Alpha Chi or Zeta Psi were permitted in.

The Villanovan is an excellent publication but I feel that in this instance, a few misleading references were made. Alpha Chi Omega holds a fine reputation on campus and I hope the article did not bring about any detrimental thoughts on the sorority.

Carol Mikusa

Alpha Chi Omega

To the Editor:

As I read the article, "Students Arrested In Police Raid," in the Villanovan dated March 16, I was concerned and upset with the assumption of those arrested. As a member of Zeta Psi fraternity, I approached the officers and several other members of our fraternity who also shared the same feelings and felt that this letter is of utter importance. We all personally feel that this matter should be made clear in order to protect our reputation as a fraternity, as well as individuals.

As one reads the article, it is assumed that members of Zeta Psi fraternity and Alpha Chi Omega sorority were among those arrested and later summoned to appear in court. The facts that we feel should be made clear are as follows:

1) Not one individual of Zeta Psi fraternity or Alpha Chi Omega sorority were either arrested or summoned to appear in court.

2) The event held was a closed, non-rush social function engaging members of Zeta Psi fraternity and Alpha Chi Omega sorority.

3) The location of our closed social event was in "B" building and we were [illegible]

Freshman Lottery

To the Editor:

Last Wednesday the freshman class segment of the lottery was not completed as we anticipated and as the students deserved. Although a three-day schedule was sufficient for several, moving to a night schedule, using smaller facilities among other things, may have contributed to the unexpected delay and our failure to process the lottery requests as scheduled.

My purpose here is not to offer excuses, but to express our appreciation to the vast majority of freshmen who were patient, polite and even hopeful during the difficult situation of Wednesday night. You deserved better.

While an apology for wasting hours of your time is insufficient and neither provides an explanation nor justification for our inability to provide the manpower and facilities to conveniently conduct the lottery, it is, unfortunately, all we have to offer.

Each of us in the Office for Residence Life appreciated very much your cooperation, and I apologize for the inconvenience you experienced.

Swept Away

To the Editor:

I write this letter in response to a very crude and damaging entry in the Who Knows Who Cares column of March 16. It is a sad commentary when someone who is bestowed the distinction of an editor acts with such immaturity. The allegations that the Italian Club [illegible] cooperated with them in every fashion. Both Zeta Psi and Alpha Chi Omega obeyed the demands of the officers, thus leading to no arrests or any other confrontations.

In closing, as students, we respect the Villanovan as a newspaper of fine excellence, and in our opinion, in the future before this type of article is written, we feel it advisable for the author and/or editor to seek a second opinion.

Thomas Sklow
Class of 1985
Zeta Psi Fraternity

Editor's Note: At no point in the article does the Villanovan 'assume' that Zeta Psi or Alpha Chi Omega members were arrested by the Tredyffrin police. However, the paper does regret its use of the term 'rush parties' in reference to those two gatherings.

practice would only serve to screen members of the Villanovan staff.

Nick's Knacks Knocked

To the Editor:

Upon reading "Nick's Knacks" in the 3/16 Villanovan, we can't help having mixed feelings about this article. It seems to us that this column points to some unjustified conclusions.

Yes, it is true that WKVU does not receive optimal record service from some of the nation's foremost record companies, but that is because we are not a large scale FM station, and we as staff directors can hardly be blamed for that fact. At this time, the effort to convert to FM is in process, but even that should not ensure that our charts will be an exact duplicate of the nation's other top charts.

For the most part, WKVU's charts are ahead of the national charts, with several justified exceptions. It has been our experience that Villanova students, generically, do not appreciate our efforts to stay ahead. It's pertinent to note that we were playing Duran Duran over two and a half years ago, A Flock of Seagulls months before they hit the charts and Adam Ant for more than three years. So, who is it really who is behind the times?

College radio has traditionally been the breaking ground for new music and new artists. In the past several years we have attempted to offer such an alternative to commercial radio by playing music that is not being played everywhere else. Unfortunately, the Villanova community did not react favorably to this type of programming, so we have returned to a less progressive format.

In implementing a "contemporary hit radio" programming format, it becomes a struggle for us to accumulate all of the records which appear on the top national charts. So, we didn't have Van Halen's "Jump" until recently. (We still do not have the record. One of the staff members taped it for us; he had it in his own private collection.) We don't have the Pretenders yet either. Nor do we have the Yes album, although another of our staff members did contribute a tape of the singles. But we are playing the Eurythmics heavily, and Duran Duran, not because we wish to be a carbon copy of commercial stations, but because the records are popular and merit air play.

As to your attack on our "Top 20" charts, they are not perfect, but no new system ever is. They are determined by weighing the number of times they are played/requested each week. The fact that John Lennon's "Nobody Told Me" only made it to number seven shouldn't be used as a point to criticize WKVU.

This article expresses some very biased opinions. Maybe, just maybe, the song wasn't popular enough to soar higher on our charts. At least, it is apparent that this song wasn't quite popular enough in Villanova. Our charts reflect what is happening within the WKVU studios; they are in no way an attempt to make our station a replica of other stations.

Although some of the supposed facts of "Nick's Knacks" are faulty, this is not the reason we respond to the column. We simply feel that the gripes expressed are unfounded. To compare us to WXTU is ludicrous. The simple fact is, for better or for worse, WKVU is not a commercial radio station. And it should not be expected to perform as one.

Soccer

To the Editor:

Two months ago the Villanova soccer team lost its head coach, Howard Graff. There was some dispute over which path the head coach took, either resignation or dismissal. Nevertheless, Graff is indeed gone and Strath Haven's Chris Jones has taken over the soccer program.

In two months he has strengthened the program considerably, a feat which deserves recognition. He has made reservations for a "B" team in the fall and two weeks ago obtained a scholarship (aided by Barry Young) which can be split to attract two players of his choice. This move will obviously strengthen next year's team and future Wildcat squads.

Villanova plays Division 1 schools. In 1980 it was brought from a club sport to Division 1, playing teams like Textile and Rutgers New Brunswick, which are nationally-ranked schools, equipped with 10 to 15 scholarship players.

Worldwide, soccer is the most popular sport played. The United States is quickly gaining momentum and credibility world over and hopes to host the 1988 World Cup. Next fall, Villanova may be honestly competing with some of the top collegiate teams in the nation in qualifying for the Big East playoffs for the first time in Villanova's 18-year history.

The return of football will be a tremendous homecoming to Villanova in 1986. Soccer is a growing sport and though not as well-known as football, provides as much excitement and needs the students' support.

If soccer is given room to grow at Villanova, it can provide an interesting future. The team graduates four seniors this year and four in 1985, which means Villanova is still young.

After a disappointing year last season, this fall with the aforementioned improvements may prove rewarding. The athletic department has shown a genuine concern for the team and deserves our praise and support.

Fair Standards?

To the Editor:

Does March 23 mean anything to you? It should if you are an engineer.

According to a bulletin posted outside the first floor engineering office in Tolentine, March 23 is the last day that you can withdraw from a course without any academic penalty. On page 14 of the 1983-84 Blue Book, the last day for academic withdrawl without penalty for the spring semester is Feb. 20, 1984.

Now, with a little bit of math, we come out with a differnce of approximately five weeks. To make sure that neither date was wrong, I asked my academic advisor. He told me that the engineers had a different date than the rest of the school and that March 23 was indeed the right day for engineering students and that Feb. 20 was the right day for everybody else. My question is then, why do engineers get an extension?

Do you have about a 3.00 G.P.A. but less than a 3.50 G.P.A.? If you do and you're an engineer, then you are lucky — you have made the dean's list in engineering. If you're not an engineer, too bad, you did not make the dean's list for any other school here at Villanova. Why, again, are the standards lower for the engineers?

In no way am I trying to criticize the engineering student. I just want some explanations to some very puzzling questions that I, and probably other people, have regarding the academic standards.

Author Weaves Fine Web of Intrigue

By AMY O'DONNELL

Have you ever stayed up for half the night wide-eyed, reading a spine-tingling murder story? If so, then you know how spell-bounding a real thriller can be.

Contemporary writer Mary Higgins Clark has the ability to tap this human nerve that thrives on excitement. Mystery, suspense and intrigue are the realms in which Clark weaves her popular novels of love and crime.

On March 13, Mary Clark, the author of six books and numerous short stories, honored Villanova with a lecture about her life and work. Clark's talk was one of several events sponsored by the honors program in their theme week promoting "Popular Culture."

Clark, the recipient of an honorary degree from Villanova, and mother of Warren Clark, a 1973 graduate of the University, shared her enthusiasm and know-how about writing with the audience. It was apparent from her mannerism that she enjoys her success, as she described her life-long ambition to be a writer. Clark says, "I had to write."

This fervor started with a journal she kept from the age of seven, and as she grew she assumed the position of editor of the paper and entered short story contests in high school.

Enriched with the skills she accumulated from various jobs as a secretary, Pan American stewardess, and an employee for an advertising firm, Clark coupled the knowledge she gained about people with her travel experience to launch her career as a writer. She admitted that such success only came after a long and frustrating period of publishers' rejections and late nights of revising and rewording.

Clark told the listeners that the best advice she ever received came from a teacher who told her to write about what she knew best. She started using episodes from her stewardess days and structuring her adventure plots around them. This advice has been given to Clark's [illegible]

Author Mary Higgins Clark

She explained that this is a subject that she, as a mother, can identify with, and one that provokes the sympathy of the reader.

Relaying her own writing experiences, Clark shared two important [illegible] in developing her books. The first is the magic word "suppose." This word, she explains, is the key that unlocks our imagination and the doorway to the world of mystery. It is through "supposing" that Clark fabricates her thrilling plots.

Secondly, Clark realizes that a good story must have a certain element of human interest to give it character. So to supply herself with these small details, she frequently attends criminal trials. Many times Clark gains ideas or finds an interesting character while listening to the evidence revealed at these hearings.

Reminiscing, Clark admitted that she didn't always have long periods of time to dedicate to her writing. Having been widowed and left with a household of children, Clark worked during the day and wrote during the early hours of the morning. She says the person who puts off writing until they have the time, never will. She adamantly insisted that one must make the time for writing if it is important enough to him or her.

For the young writers, she advised looking at the kinds of books and authors that appeal the most to them, for it is in these areas that they are most likely to be successful. Aside from allotting time to writing, she says a novice should realize that they are engaging in a "constant learning process."

Impressed by her ambition and warm sense of humor, the audience responded during a short period of questions and answers. When asked how her works related to the times, Clark explained that her books deal with contemporary issues and people.

After several other inquiries, the audience took advantage of the wine and cheese refreshments offered by the honors society program, and were able to speak more personally with Clark.

Sportscaster Content for Now

(Second of a two-part series.)

By JOE ALESSANDRINE

Don Tollefson is very proud to be a part of the Action News "family." He believes that the station's success is a combination of the production and management staff, as well as the broadcasting personalities, whose popularity and long tenure is unparalled by their competitors.

He emphasizes that many "grew up" seeing the same friendly faces on Action News.

Most of that growing up was with the late weatherman and 5 o'clock anchor, Jim O'Brien. O'Brien perished in a sky diving accident on Sept. 25 last year.

At the time of his death, however, he was probably the most popular media personality in Philadelphia. People remembered him as the cheery voice on WFIL radio, as the host of the local game show "Dialing For Dollars," as host of the series "Prime Time," and as the weatherman who introduced the city to "good guys" and "bad guys" when referring to weather patterns.

Tollefson says, "I lost a best friend." He continued, "Jim's loss was really a loss to all those in the Delaware Valley. His professional brilliance and how he constantly 'cranked it out' left a legacy that we [at Channel 6] are all dedicated to carry on, although no one could ever reach that level of professionalism. He was the consummate professional."

He commends O'Brien's successor, Dave Roberts, for "replacing the unreplaceable. I've learned a lot from Dave," he says. "Dave is able to put aside his personal feelings and be the same Dave Roberts [each day]," noted Tollefson.

"The mentality of Philadelphians' work ethic is unique, they're full of pride and get involved." said Tollefson. For this reason, Tollefson has dubbed Philadelphia as "the biggest small town in America." The amount of charity work and the closeness of the city's people impresses him.

He also feels that Philadelphia is a "genuine sports town," and that the fans are a cause for the city's sports teams to strive to be winners.

Tollefson suggests that sports is a "common denominator left in an increasingly stratified society," and that although "technology pulls us apart, sports pulls us together."

Tollefson notes that even though the recent Olympic Games' television ratings were down nationally from 1980, Channel 6's ratings were far better than the rest.

Tollefson is often asked if he'd ever seek a network television job. Though he's covered U.S.F.L. and college football games in the past, he says, "I don't want to get involved with the politics of network television and be a nomadic gypsy." If he ever decides to go national however, it would be on an "irregular basis," similar to those shows hosted by Brent Musberger of CBS or Jim McKay of ABC. But play-by-play has been virtually ruled out by Tollefson.

He is close friends with the likes of Jim Lampley (ABC) and Bob Costas (NBC). Still, Tollefson is not envious of their national notoriety. "I'm very happy here, there's no need for me to leave."

At 31, Don Tollefson cannot see himself doing what he does now in 20 years. He would rather settle down into a "regular life style." He is certain there is life after television, and is interested in the possibilities of writing books, working as a consultant; or even owning television stations.

Odds are, he'll stay in the area of his adopted home, Philadelphia. But for awhile, Philadelphians can expect to see the friendly face of Don Tollefson doing sports on Action News at six and 11.

Vasey Plays Are Harder Work Than You Think

By ROBERT O'MALLEY

For the past few weeks, people have gone to see the Vasey Theatre production of "Buried Child." The audience saw the quality acting involved, but there is a lot of work that goes into the production of a play, a lot of people who work behind the scenes whose work may not be fully appreciated.

Director Lon Winston explains, "You have more people involved putting the stage together and getting all of that to happen technically than you have in the play."

Winston compared a play's organization to a pyramid, with the actors at the top being supported by a large number of hard-working people who work to build the set, fix the lighting and all of the other jobs that go into putting on a play.

He continued, "We have graduate students and undergraduate students who are theatre majors taking production credits and working in the theatre; we have a work study contingency . . . and all of these people are working all the time; I mean all day long every day, to make that happen. It's a tremendous amount of work."

In the case of "Buried Child," the stage had to be completed only ten days after the production of "Whisper Rings" closed, which made the job even harder.

Before any of the actual work on the set starts, you have to design the set, hold production meetings, have the set design drafted, send it

Prof Makes Breakthrough in the Physics World

By ROBERT O'MALLEY

One of the great mysteries remaining to man today is that of the atom. The very building block of matter is very much a frontier, and Dr. James McNeil of the physics department is exploring this frontier and is making breakthroughs.

Last fall, McNeil received a $31,000 National Science Foundation grant. With this, he set out to study low energy nuclear phenomenon, including a study of the binding energy of atoms, nuclear spectroscopy and proton scatter. With his collaborators Stephen Wallace from the University of Maryland and James Shepard from the University of Colorado, McNeil used Einstein's theory of relativity to explain low speed nuclear phenomenon. In the past, Einstein's theories were applied to nuclear studies of atoms [illegible]

[illegible] though the particles in it are slowly moving."

McNeil elaborates on this breakthrough. "Einstein showed that if you move at a speed close to the speed of light, any fraction of the [illegible] to use a to a technical director where it is redrafted and then you can build a model of the set.

Once this is all done, then and only then can you go about building the set, which means that you have to beg, borrow, build, buy or find the materials you need for the set. For "Buried Child," this included coming up with eight and a half tons of dirt and a car for the set.

"I'm there every night of performance, but I'm in the audience. I'm watching the actors, and I'm spending time with the actors before the show and after. The next night I'm giving notes and talking about the play," commented Winston.

The production of a play takes a lot of people and a lot of long hours, but, Winston concludes, "to be really good at what you do takes time."

true; you really need the relativistic description."

With this new perspective on nuclear phenomenon, a great deal of what was thought to be "known" in the field of atomic nuclei has to be re-written.

"You have to go back and redo all of the textbooks on nuclear physics . . . within this new perspective.

"What we're hoping for is a unified picture of the nucleus," McNeil explained, but the task is not easy, because a new development "usually raises more questions than it answers."

And so the work goes on, and McNeil will continue his work in the field of atomic nuclei in search of a better understanding of the very building blocks of our world. As McNeil concluded, "there's a lot of work to be done."

Housing Options Explored

By SUZANNE BRUSTMAN and JOE ALESSANDRINE

Well, it's that time again when the annual housing lottery has students contemplating their living arrangements for the next school year. While many hoping to remain on campus waited for the cut-off numbers to be posted, others have already began the search for off-campus housing.

For those lacking a plan of action or uncertain of where to inquire about off-campus housing, there are several routes to follow. To start, the Office of Residence Life, 219 Tolentine Hall, issues a list of 21 apartment complexes available to Villanova students. The list is comprehensive of the area, and includes apartments as close as Rosemont and St. David's and as far as Upper Darby and Springfield. The types and prices of apartments range from efficiencies costing $200 per month at the Bala Apartments in Bala Cynwyd, to three-bedroom apartments, six-person apartments costing $1200 per month at The Regency in St. David's.

Some of the more popular apartments inhabited by Villanovans include Bryn Mawr Courts and Bryn Mawr Gables (the "quad" of off-campus living), The Chetwynd (closest to the campus but less student-oriented), The Regency (a nice place if you don't mind living next to a police station) and Sugartown Mews (Villanova's answer to co-ed dorms).

Eileen Masterson, coordinator of off-campus housing, works closely with students to provide them with as much information as possible. In addition to the apartment list, she posts up-to-date availabilities on the bulletin board outside the Residence Life office.

Ironically, Masterson notes that she often loses contact with students after they are situated. In order for her office to reach these off-campus residents, they must obtain the student's home phone number from the registrar's office and call his or her parents. "It's a shame, because I'd like to know where they are and how they're doing," she says.

The advisor for off-campus residents, the Rev. Francis A. Farsaci, O.S.A., provides students with "realistic knowledge" about all the facets of off-campus living. He offers rides for students to sites offering residence to them. "I'm also very interested in their personal adjustment," Farsaci noted.

Farsaci asked the Villanovan to let students know he wants to help them and let them know where he can be located. His office is in 207 Dougherty, and he also advises commuter students.

Current off-campus residents are another source of help and information. Many are willing to show their apartments or houses and may be able to arrange for their residences to be turned over to a particular student after vacating.

Newspapers such as the Main Line Times (published on Thursdays) may help. Many apartments not listed by the school are advertised, as are rooms and special arrangements with local families.

The real estate agency route is another option. They're listed in the business directory of the phone book and provide a complete record of available apartments and houses.

Still there will be a number of V.U. students staying on campus. The completion of the two new female residence halls next to Stanford probably assures all freshmen and most sophomores of on-campus housing next fall. By then, 55 percent of the beds on campus will belong to men and 45 percent to women.

If the Mother of God came to us today, would we believe it? What exactly would we do? Many of the faithful believe the Blessed Mother is appearing to six children in Yugoslavia. How different are we from our friends, long dead, whose skepticism deprived them of an even greater miracle — Jesus Christ?

In the small agricultural village of Medjugorje, Yugoslavia, two boys and four girls from ages 10 to 17 have witnessed what they say are apparitions of the Blessed Mother. The apparitions began on June 24, 1983, on a mountaintop behind the village. The teenaged children say they have received daily visitations ever since.

Local clergy and the surrounding community are convinced that the apparitions are genuine, and the village has responded to the Mother's message with a deep demonstration of faith and sacrifice. The entire community has reportedly undergone a spiritual transformation. The apparition itself is not what is so important, but rather the Mother's message of peace on earth.

Initially they were attracted to the apparition of a brilliant flash on the mountain, and then saw a woman coming through the light. Eight to 10 weeks later, to discourage interest, government officials fenced off the mountain where the appearances of the Blessed Mother were occurring. After that, the girls asked the Mother to appear to them in the parish church, where, in a small room by the sanctuary, the children say they have since seen and talked to her almost every night. Thousands of travelers fill the village each day and pack the church each night, where, after prayers, the children enter the small room, and then fall to their knees in unison.

In the past, the six children say they have received specific information and teaching on how to pray from the Madonna. She is described as a young girl, about 19, wearing a brilliant white veil, a lucid, gray dress to her ankles, and having a lock of curly black hair on the left side of her face. There is a crown of brilliant stars around her head. The children describe the Madonna as "glowing with holiness." She is usually smiling, and her hands are lifted to her sides and turned to heaven.

Her relationship to the children is as a loving mother. She greets them each day, saying, "Praise be the name of Jesus Christ," and always ends her visitation saying, "Peace be with you." Her messages have all been Christ-centered. They are in accordance with the Gospels, and there is no new dogma.

The children say that many times the Mother has told them the world is on the brink of major catastrophe, because of sin in the world. She is pleading with all to believe that the catastrophe which faces us can only be turned away through sacrifice, penance and especially prayer and fasting. The catastrophe is inevitable, but the days to it may be shortened. The Virgin Mary has indicated that this is the last time she will be making appearances on earth. She urges all to turn to Jesus, who offers us the only true and lasting path to peace.

Duran Duran Rocks the Spectrum

By AMELIA McGOVERN

Duran Duran, the Grammy Award - winning band, 'rocked Philadelphia's Spectrum for the second time March 18. The Philadelphia dates were part of the U.S. leg of their world tour. The audience was excited and went hysterical; they danced and sang along with the band, obviously enjoying the two-hour set.

A pre-recorded version of "Tiger Tiger" (from their third and most recent album "Seven and the Ragged Tiger") played as the lights dimmed and the crowd roared. At the end of the taped song, the band started singing from behind the curtain "please, please tell me now . . .," the opening line from their hit "Is Their Something I Should Know?" By the time the curtain had risen, flowers from fans covered the stage.

The band became famous for their video clips shown on MTV, the cable network, as well as for their music. Video is a medium with which both the band and the fans are familiar. A large video screen posted above the stage enabled the fans who did not have the benefit of seats near the stage to see the band well. The girls cheered when their favorite band member appeared on the screen.

Duran Duran appeared more unified and also seemed to be having a better time than at last week's performance. The songs were performed in different order, also. This time their hits were clumped in the beginning of the show. After "Is There Something I Should Know?," lead singer Simon le Bon asked, "Is anybody hungry?" and the crowd, again, roared as the band played "Hungry Like the Wolf." This was followed by "The Reflex," (a song currently receiving a lot of FM airplay), "New Moon on Monday," and what sounded like a soul version of "Union of the Snake." The mixture of teenaged girls and more sophisticated fans who made up Sunday night's audience did not lose interest. Much of the audience mouthed the words to every song.

Duran Duran was assisted by two backup musicians and two backup singers. Andy Hamilton, who appeared on "Rio" and "Seven and the Ragged Tiger," played saxophone and helped out on percussion. Rafael DeJesus was also on percussion. B.J. Nelson and Charmaine sang backing vocals. DeJesus and both women appeared on the "Ragged Tiger" album.

Le Bon, dressed in black leather pants and a white button down shirt, used his acting training (was studying drama at the University of Birmingham when he first joined Duran Duran) as he really played to the audience. He felt just as relaxed playing to the video camera.

Judging from the crowd's response, Nick Rhodes, the keyboardist, is the most liked member of the group. The crowd screamed the most whenever he appeared on the screen.

The teenage girls, especially at the first concert, were inescapable. One girl came up to me asking, "Who's your favorite?" There is a camaraderie felt by the girls at the concert. The way they talk about the member you would swear they know them.

The band's two-hour set was consistently good; at no point did the band let the audience down. Bassist John Taylor was outstanding, even though he could barely be heard over le Bon's singing and Andy Taylor's guitar playing. Drummer Roger Taylor, though not flashy, more than held his own, keeping the fast pace of the show. Le Bon's voiced stayed strong throughout the whole concert on Sunday. "The week before his voice was not powerful." Keyboardist Rhodes got the most use out of his synthesizers, completing this sound for which the band is known.

Andy Taylor showed that he is a capable rhythm guitarist, but his occasional leads were weak. The fact that Hamilton handled most leads with his sax made this all the more evident.

From the "Rio" album they played "New Religion," on which guitarist Andy Taylor sang the harmony, "The Chauffeur," during which le Bon donned a red and black chauffer's cap, "My Own Way," and "Save a Prayer," during which le Bon demonstrated his skill on the acoustic guitar. "Rio" was their first encore.

The second encore was a fifteen minute version of the song "Girls on Film."

Two short years ago, Duran Duran (named after an angel in the film "Barbarella"), was virtually unknown. When they opened at the Mann Music Center in 1982 for headlining bands Squeeze and Split Enz, a Philly deejay pronounced their name Door-in Door-in.

Despite this the Philly crowd got the chance to experience a hot show by a hot band.

New Movie Beats the Odds

By JOSEPH McALEE

"Against All Odds" is a steamy, sharp detective thriller which runs at breakneck speed from high stakes crime in the Los Angeles underworld to love and murder in the Mayan ruins of Mexico.

Jesse Wyler (played by the stunning Rachel Ward) is a very popular young lady wanted by her racketeer boyfriend, Jake Weiss (whom she has robbed and nearly murdered), and her millionaire, football-team-owner mother, Grace Wyler. Terry Brogan (Jeff Bridges) is a former football player and employee of Grace Wyler who is blackmailed by Weiss (James Woods) into tracking down Jesse in Mexico. Amid the wildly exotic scenery of the Yucatan, with its pristine beaches and majestic ancient jungle ruins, Brogan and Wyler fall in love.

However, their idyllic life is shattered when an old friend of Brogan's, Hank Sully (Alex Karras), is killed by the two lovers in his attempt to bring Jesse back to her mother. While Brogan is disposing of the body, Jesse escapes from him. After scouring Mexico, Brogan heads back to Los Angeles in a desperate attempt to locate Jesse, only to find her living again with Weiss. What is revealed in the closing scenes of the movie is a tangled web of political blackmail, illegal gambling, crooked real estate deals and murder, from which the two lovers attempt to extricate themselves.

Taylor Hackford did an effective job of directing. Although the movie is rather long (nearly 2 hours), one wishes it would end quickly, not because it is tedious (far from it), but because one wants to see how the convoluted plot turns out. One scene which was particularly well-done was the absolutely harrowing high-speed race, between Weiss in his Ferrari and Brogan in his Porsche, down the sunset strip at rush hour. The moviegoer feels as if he is actually in the passenger seat during this insane duel.

Bridges, Ward and Woods all turn in good starring performances. Bridges is believable as the football player who owes the wrong people a few favors and gets caught in a snare of his own while devising a way to settle those debts. Woods is excellent as the small-time crook who gets too deeply involved with a beautiful woman and some heavyweight gangsters. Ward is exquisite as the beautiful, spoiled-rich girl who runs from everyone and everything until she can run no longer. However, the real star of this film is the smashing Mexican countryside which steals nearly every scene. "Against All Odds" is a real thriller because it has everything a good mystery should have — passion, suspense and a surprise ending.

'Ammonia Ave.' Is Smooth

By TAD FINNEY

Alan Parsons, best known for his talents in mixing the "Dark Side of the Moon" album for Pink Floyd and working with the Beatles on the "Abbey Road" album, has once again shown listeners his talents as a musician and producer on his latest album, "Ammonia Avenue."

After working with other various groups, Parsons and partner Eric Woolfson decided to start their own project. In 1976, they cut an album called "I Robot," which was about the rise of the machine and the decline of man. Other such concept albums as "Tyranid" and "Eve" followed. As Parsons entered the '80s, his music was directed more toward mainstream pop and The Project scored with big singles like "Time," "Eye In The Sky" and "Games People Play."

"Ammonia Avenue" should continue this string of hits. The album opens with a song called "Prime Time," which has some nice guitar work and is a candidate for strong air play. The current single "Don't Answer Me" is already doing well. It is about a past love affair in which one person does not want to communicate with the other: "Don't answer me, don't break the silence/Don't let me win/Don't answer me, stay on your island."

For the WYSP and WMMR fans there are a couple of good rockers such as "One Good Reason," "Let Me Go Home" and "You Don't Believe," featuring Lenny Zakatek on vocals. Parsons always has at least one instrumental track on each album and "Pipeline" from "Ammonia Avenue" is the best. Parsons uses an orchestra, horns and a synthesizer to maximum effect to produce a very refreshing sound. After all, how many instrumentals have you heard that you would want to listen to again?

The best song on the album is the six and a half minute title track. Featuring Woolfson (who also sang "Time") on vocals, it is a mellow, spacey song about Parson's view of what technology has come to: "And stone by stone they built it high/Until the sun broke through/A ray of hope, a shining light, Ammonia Avenue."

After the platinum success of the Alan Parsons Project albums "I Robot," "The Turn of A Friendly Card" and "Eye In the Sky," "Ammonia Avenue" should broaden Parson's audience even more.

Gilmour Turns 'About Face'

By TOM BARAN

David Gilmour, Pink Floyd's lead guitarist, has done on his solo album, "About Face," what Pink Floyd has never been able to accomplish. He has produced an album that contains fine music and meaningful lyrics, while at the same time is not monotonous. For his second album, Gilmour has surrounded himself with a number of veteran musicians. These include Jon Lord (of Deep Purple fame) playing organ, Jeff Porcaro (from Toto) on drums, Steve Winwood, who is possibly the finest keyboard player around and Bob Ezrin, who has worked extensively with the Grateful Dead.

As is to be expected, parts of this album sound very similar to Pink Floyd. The song "Blue Light" shows what a talented song writer Gilmour is. The song, which features a horn section, is skillfuly blended so as not to overpower the listener with any one instrument. The rhythm guitar on this song sounds almost identical to that of the Pink Floyd song "Run Like Hell." What separates Gilmour's song from "Run Like Hell" is that it contains more than just tired-sounding vocals. Along with the horn section, this song contains an organ solo by Lord which sounds much like the fine work he put out while with Deep Purple.

The vocals on this song are also very good and different from what Gilmour does with Pink Floyd. The singing has more life in it, and Gilmour's voice probably does more on this one song than on some of his Pink Floyd songs.

"All Lovers are Deranged" is another excellent song. It shows that David Gilmour is a bonafide rock guitarist. On Pink Floyd's albums most of Gilmour's solos may have been good, but were so covered up with effects that the listener could not be sure. On "All Lovers Are Deranged," Gilmour's solo is much better than one that any pop group could ever hope to come up with. The lyrics on this song, even though they are written by Pete Townshend, do not differ much from the lyrics of Pink Floyd.

Possibly the best song on the album, and definitely the most musically involved, is the instrumental "Let's Get Metaphysical," which has as its major musicians the National Philharmonic Orchestra. Once again, Gilmour shows his talent of being able to skillfully blend all the instrumental parts together so as not to overpower the listener. This song starts off slowly with a simple piano part, then switches into a slow, melodic Gilmour solo backed by the orchestra. The song then builds to a climax with the full force of the orchestra.

"About Face" is one of the finest albums released this year. It contains something that everybody can enjoy. It contains both slow, mellow music, and fast rock. If you have always wanted to see Pink Floyd, but have never been able to, then the next best thing is David Gilmour. Gilmour is doing a spring and summer tour in which he will play smaller theatres.

Nick's Tracks

Johnny Sells Out

By NICK ANASTASIO

Tickets for the April 6 John Cougar Mellencamp concert at the Tower Theatre went on sale last Saturday at 10 a.m. By 10:15 a.m., they were all sold. That's right, 3000 tickets were sold in less than 15 minutes. This left many Mellencamp fans asking the question, "Why the Tower?"

First, we have to take into consideration the entire tour. Mellencamp's schedule probably does not leave him enough time to play more than one night.

Then there is the Spectrum itself, where, on April 6, the 76ers will be playing. Their opponents that night will be, ironically, the Indiana Pacers (Mellencamp was born, raised, and still lives, in Indiana). So the Spectrum is closed to Mellencamp that night, and also on the 8th, when the 76ers play against New York. In addition, the NHL's Stanley Cup Playoffs start on April 4, so the Flyers may also need the Spectrum that week.

So that leaves the Tower. Now you know why.

Last week's "Nick's Tracks" made practically the entire WKVU staff mad at me. In response to their letter, I would like to point out that I never compared WKVU to WXTU, and even if it did appear as if there was a comparison, then WKVU came out as the more favorable of the two.

It was also mentioned in the letter that WKVU was playing Duran Duran and other bands over two years ago, at a time when no one had ever heard of them. Fine. I was not criticizing WKVU for what it was playing. My criticism dealt with what WKVU was not playing. WKVU's format gives air time to just about every form of popular music, so it seemed odd that it was not giving the No. 1 pop song in the country much (if any) attention.

As for the part about WKVU and other college radio stations, when I said that John Lennon's "Nobody Told Me" "only" reached No. 7 in their Top 20, "only" was referring to the fact that the song did not reach the Top 5; it was not a "gripe." If the song had reached No. 5 (as both Duran Duran's and the Eurythmics' songs did), then it would have been included in the "consistent category." Besides, the poll dealt with albums, not songs, and Lennon's second single ("I'm Stepping Out") has yet to be listed.

These people and 3 million others have something to celebrate.

They beat cancer.

We are winning.

Golden Earring LP Is Dull

By MIKE MATHIS

The Netherlands has spawned few rock 'n roll talents. However, the music that has emerged from this corner of the globe has been regarded as first rate. The Van Halen brothers, Alex and Eddie, hail from here, as do Abba, the world record-holders of the most albums sold by a vocal group.

Golden Earring fits into this elite group, though they are not superstars in any sense of the word. They are not as charasmatic as Eddie and Alex Van Halen are, nor are they as internationally known as Abba. Instead, they are regarded as a major act in their homeland alone, and it wasn't until 1974's "Radar Love" hit No. 13 on the Billboard Chart that they first drew attention in the United States.

Although tours with Santana and the Doobie Brothers proved successful, the band failed to yield another chart-busing song until 1982's "Twilight Zone" appeared on the commercially successful LP "Cut."

The band's latest effort, a compilation of heavy metal and blues called "N.E.W.S. (North East West South)," is the follow-up to "Cut;" its theme suggests espionage and love, portrayed through shallow, face-value compositions.

Songs like "Clear Night Tonight" and "It's All Over Now" include horn lines and quick guitar licks. Yet the outstanding problem in these songs is that they fail to rock hard, a trademark that has been attached to the band for the better part of two decades.

This weakness, unfortunately, is reflected throughout the album. "When the Lady Smiles" is a poor example of heavy metal molded into a love song, although the keyboards are worked in quite well. "Fist in Glove" is a bluesy attempt at recapturing the roots of die-hard heavy metal with a rusty vocal delivery and weak backing harmonies.

Although the band has never openly revealed their musical influences, their musical approach is clearly heavy-metal oriented. They could prove to be a driving force in the music world if they would dare to rock harder than on their last two albums. The components are present — hard bass lines, searing guitar riffs and a dizzy, head-spinning beat.

Golden Earring is, however, a band for the middle-of-the-road metal fan. They are not sleazy or rambunctious like Motley Crue or Twisted Sister, nor are they the undisputed kings of heavy metal. Instead, they are a polished example of exactly what heavy metal is not.

"N.E.W.S." is not a monotonous album. It does provide the listener with a melodious attempt at heavy metal. Unfortunately, the majority of the album's songs are shallow and fail to crop up any new musical genius. Heavy metal is a form that must go all the way with no strings attached. The musicians must give 110 percent to the depth and hardness of the compositions. On "N.E.W.S.," Golden Earring turns in only a half-hearted attempt, and the music as a result, fails at being true heavy metal.

For the middle-of-the-road fan, "N.E.W.S." is fine listening material. Those who like true heavy metal at 160 decibels, however, must patiently await the next album by Ozzy Osbourne or Judas Priest.

'Dresser' is a Fresh Look at the Acting Tradition

By JAYNE M. STUART

The life of an actor is stereotyped as demanding, lonely, inhumane and thankless. Behind all the glitter and the glamour lies a person, a real human being with needs, wants and feelings. Few and far between are the movies, plays, and books that effectively and thoroughly explore the mysterious life of stardom.

Even more elusive is the life of a dying breed: the Shakespearean actor. In the recent release, "The Dresser" is more than a character study, more than a witty look at "behind" the scenes, but rather a thought-provoking piece that explores the limits of the human mind and emotions.

The film is about stage performers in the 1940's during World War II. Although their theaters are being bombed daily and air sirens interrupt the performance, the show must go on.

Tom Courtenay portrays a lovable, convincing, humorous, devoted neurotic who is "Sir's" (Albert Finney) dresser. He has the awesome job of getting Sir made up for his part.

Sir is a somewhat pompous, taciturn and loud man, but that is on the exterior only. It is with Courtenay that he exhibits his deepest fears and anxieties.

"The Dresser" demonstrates traits often associated with homosexuals (a limp wrist, a lisp, etc.) with a flair and without the slightest hint of disdain or mockery.

One of the most unique and interesting aspects of "The Dresser" is the obvious respect it directs toward acting as a profession. It recognizes and salutes the sacrifices made daily by the actors. It does so tactfully and tastefully, but most of all realistically. The events in the movie take on a very honest and believable quality which only serves to make the viewing of "The Dresser" more enjoyable.

In the end, when Courtenay is faced with no recognition and no gratitude, he initially responds with anger and frustration. After the shock and pain have passed, he immediately thinks of his most dear friend by saying "If you think you loved him, what about me?" The utter despair is conveyed more through the actor than through the words. That scene is a difficult one to dismiss.

As is obvious at this point, "The Dresser" is highly recommended. It is a complete and satisfying film that leaves the audience with a view of what it can be like to be a star and what it is like to live in the shadow of one.

'Splash' Goes Overboard

By MICHAEL D. MANNO

The most realistic thing about the movie "Splash" is that it is directed by good old Richie Cunningham from "Happy Days." Although Ron Howard had nothing to do with the story line, one can't help but imagine that he thought this movie up while driving home late one night from "Arnold's." "Splash" is actually the brainchild of producer Brian Grazer, who started to imagine that a mermaid would be an extraordinarily beautiful girl with an unbelished outlook on life. Anyway, the story grew from there.

Daryl Hannah takes a dive in "Splash."

"Splash" is about a mermaid in Manhattan who falls in love with a fruit and vegetable wholesaler, Allan Bauer (Tom Hanks). He is a lonely bachelor with a single overriding wish: "to meet a woman, fall in love, get married, have a kid and see him play a tooth in the school play." The mermaid (Daryl Hannah) at first knows only one word of English: "Bloomingdales."

The movie's strong point in terms of comedy is the bulldozing presence of John Candy, as the hero's hilarious brother. The mere sight of the tubby Candy is funny enough (the spectacle of him playing racquetball is really something to see). But he also gets most of the better lines in the screenplay, which was written by Lowell Ganz, Babaloo Mandel and Bruce Jay Friedman. "What are you looking at?" Candy screams at the employees of his family business after the man-mermaid love affair has been revealed to the press. "You never saw a guy who slept with a fish before? Get back to work!"

"Splash" could have been shorter, but it probably couldn't have been much sweeter. Only purists will quibble with the blissfully happy ending.

It was indeed a "beast" of a movie.

If O.C.S. (Army Officer Candidate School) looks tangential at first, look again. Look at it from management's point of view. Management wants engineering skill plus leadership ability in the people it moves up the ladder.

O.C.S. is a great place to get started on leadership. It is a 14-week challenge to your mental and physical toughness. And if you pass the tests, you will come out strong, sure and in great shape—a commissioned officer in the Army, ready to exercise the leadership that civilian companies put such a premium on.

Icecat Seniors Bid Adieu

All good things must come to an end. And, unfortunately, this adage applies to college hockey careers, as well. But, what a spectacular finale it was for Icecat seniors Frank Segreto and Fred Christie. This past weekend these two members participated in Villanova's big upset over Delaware for the MACHC title. In a recent interview these two departing players shared their thoughts on their many hockey experiences.

Segreto, who has been the Icecat captain for the past two years, has been playing hockey since age six. According to him, his best game was during the '81-'82 season when he scored the game-winning goal against Delaware in the closing regular season encounter. But, without a doubt, he stated that "these past two games this year were our team's best. They were a complete and total team effort."

For Christie, the senior goalie on the squad, his inspiration for becoming involved in hockey came from watching the Flyers and especially the actions of goalie Bernie Parent when the Philadelphia team won the Stanley Cup. This senior, who has only played five years in the sport, declared that "last Friday night would have to be my best game ever. If we had played like we did at the season's end we would have beaten some of the seeded Division III teams." As for the overall team effort, he simply stated, "It was electric, how else could you put it? Everyone really wanted to win it."

According to Segreto, his job as captain, though a good experience, was not always an easy one. "It is tough trying to communicate to and motivate 20 guys for a game. You might think that it's your own job to motivate yourself, but when you are the captain you feel as though you have the responsibility to motivate the players and get the team moving."

Obviously Segreto did his job well, because head coach Skip Probst is quick to point out, "Frank was one of the best captains that we ever had. He was our best player and the most consistent member on the squad. He's a very hard worker and has a lot of character, and he has demonstrated a lot of leadership these past four years."

Christie, when asked to comment on whether or not he ever felt isolated being in the nets, said, "Not really, you always feel a part of the action; sometimes it's boring when the action is up ice, but you're the only player who is in there for the whole 60 minutes." About the finals, Christie is still shocked: "I still haven't come down to earth. I keep day-dreaming and I can't believe that we really won the championship." As for being named the MVP of the game, "when I see the other Villanova names on the cup I feel honored to be included in their company."

According to Probst, "Freddie is a real inspiration in a lot of ways to the other players. He's the most unselfish player that I've ever coached. Also, I've never had a player come so far in four years."

About next year Probst said, "It will definitely leave us with a big gap. Frank was our leading scorer — which is always tough to lose — and Freddie's unselfishness and inspiration will be sorely missed."

With regards to their futures? For Segreto, "I would like to coach at the high school level. I'll probably skate in a rinky-dink men's league somewhere, but as far as a highly competitive level — definitely not."

And Christie? "I don't know where I'll get a job, but I want to play on either a company team or an adult league."

Laxmen Win

By TIM VALLACE

On Feb. 25, the 1984 Villanova men's lacrosse team faced off with Lafayette University in a scrimmage in preparation for their season opener versus Western Maryland. The Cats appeared unaffected by the winter layoff as they soundly defeated Lafayette, 12-6.

John Mahdessian dodges the "stick" of an opponent in Saturday's game.

The following week, while most went on vacation, the laxmen stayed behind at Villanova for two-a-day practices and anxiously awaited their St. Patrick's Day clash with Western Maryland.

Amid a brisk wind, the hometown faithful took a mid-day break from the holiday festivities and saw a high scoring, hard-hitting contest. The Cats jumped out to a 4-1 lead in the first quarter. However, the Cats became somewhat lulled to sleep by their early lead. This and an unusually high number of penalties enabled Maryland to take a 7-6 halftime lead.

The Cats came back and dominated the fourth quarter territorially in keeping the action in the opposition's end of the field for most of the quarter. They scored four goals in the stanza, coming away with an opening day victory by 12-8.

Amazing Tornadoes

'Pep Boys' Spark Squad

By MARY AGNES MATYSZKWSKI

It was a Wildcat victory all the way. This past week, the Villanova ice hockey team went up against the Delaware Blue Hens for the Mid-Atlantic Collegiate Hockey Conference Championship and in both encounters, the Icecats came out on top.

In Wednesday night's game — the last home one for the squad — the Cats managed to down the Hens by a score of 9-7. Nova drew first blood in the initial period when freshman scoring sensation Brian O'Connor sailed the puck between the posts on an assist from Bill McHugh; O'Connor would later go on to score a hat-trick.

In the second period Steve Thorley had an unassisted score, which was followed a minute and a half later by John Canuso's goal aided on a pass from captain Frank Segreto and Thorley. Thirty-six seconds later assistant captain Tim Curran lit up the net again with an assist from Jamie Huston and O'Connor. However, the Cats were not yet done. Rookie Pete Geraghty finished off the second period scoring drive on a well-executed pass from sophomore Paul Critchley.

In the third period, after Delaware managed to score three unanswered goals, junior Jim Haganey was the first to score when he blasted the puck from the blue line after a pass from O'Connor and Huston. Tying the game at seven apiece was the two of an assist by Curran. Both were paid O'Connor who put the Cats ahead — a lead which they never relinquished — with 2 minutes remaining on an assist from Curran. And it was this amazing duo who managed to put the game on ice just 27 seconds later when they fired one between the posts.

A feeling of elation was evident everywhere after this first round victory. The many fans who attended — including members of "the Band" — really helped to fire the team up and increase the general spirit level in the Skatium. Moreover, describing this general mood, head coach Skip Probst stated, "It was nice to beat Delaware for a change. All the guys played well and it was a great upset for us. In addition, O'Connor and some of the others' improvement this semester has just been incredible." Furthermore, Villanova continued to ride this high crest as they took to the road for round two of the finals.

him the game's MVP.

The rest of the night spelled an Icecat win. In the second period O'Connor, on a pass from Critchley, fired one through the posts to tie the game. Then, in the third boards with it. The amazing thing about these victories was that the only times that Villanova was able to beat Delaware all season were in these two final games. Curran, reflecting on this ironic turn of events, stated, "I think the Florida

Segreto, who played his last game under the Icecat colors, summed it all up by commenting, "This was probably the best team effort that I've seen in my four years here. I want to give a sincere thanks to the entire team for making my last game a memorable one and I want to wish them the best of luck next year."

And speaking of next year, the future looks bright indeed. As coach Probst, the only coach to win three MACHC championships, pointed out, "the rewarding thing about winning the championship was that we had 10 new guys on the squad."

Moreover, these 10 rookies indeed proved themselves. The "Pep Boys," as a group of them is called, managed to dominate many of Nova's games and contribute greatly to many of the Icecat's victories. Thus, next season should prove to be a fruitful one for the Cats, as well.

Illini Knock Cats Out of NCAA's

By LARRY GOANOS

A rugged University of Illinois team forced Villanova into a poor 38 percent shooting performance on Sunday as the Fighting Illini overcame the Wildcats for a 64-56 victory. The win enabled the Illini to advance into the NCAA Tournament's "sweet sixteen" finalist's field this weekend in Lexington, KY.

The Cats weren't able to contain the brawny Big Ten Conference co-champions, whose physical play caused the Nova field goal mark to fall 27 percentage points from the previous game against Marshall.

"It was a very physical game," said coach Rollie Massimino. "They wore us down down the stretch."

Among those chiefly responsible for harassing the Cats were Scott Meents (6-9, 230 lbs.), George Montgomery (6-8, 215 lbs.) and Efrem Winters (6-9, 210 lbs.), a trio of Illini players who seemed to have this post-season game confused with the Rose Bowl.

"I think they're very physical," said battered forward Ed Pinckney, who did a great imitation of the Paoli Local while transporting the Illinois hulks around the lane on his back for much of the evening. Unfortunately, the conductor never called their stop.

Things started out well for the Cats as Harold Pressley fed Pinckney for the game's first score, a lay-up, with only 28 seconds gone in the game. Dwayne McClain followed with a tip-in off a Gary McLain alley-oop pass and the Cats were up 4-0, which was to be their biggest lead of the night.

With the score tied at six, senior guard Quinn Richardson stole the ball at midcourt and cruised in with a lay-up that would put the Illini ahead for good. The Cats got six points and nine rebounds from Pinckney en route to a 24-20 halftime deficit, but EZ Ed just didn't have enough gas to carry the Cats while transporting the Illini as well.

Said Villanova Coach Rollie Massimino: "At the half we were leading them 17-12 [in rebounding, a key statistic according to Massimino before the game] but then I think we got a little tired."

The Illini changed their game plan a bit in the second stanza, aiding them in opening up a bigger lead.

"In the first 12 to 18 minutes of the game we just let the ball fly," explained Illinois mentor Lou Henson. "We just didn't play the type of ball that got us here."

Thanks to Henson's strategical maneuvers, the Illini came out in the final half and played not only the kind of ball that got them to Milwaukee but also the kind that would carry them to Kentucky for the regionals.

After six minutes had elapsed in the half, Villanova was still clinging to a two-basket deficit at 34-30 when Winters scored on an offensive rebound off a Montgomery miss. Forward Tom Schaffer followed that with a three-point play (a lay-up and foul on Pinckney), Winters jammed an alley-oop pass and Montgomery tipped-in Illinois' fourth shot of the possession to increase the Illini's lead to 43-30. This nine point outburst over a 4-minute span put the game virtually out of reach for the weary Wildcats.

McClain and Pinckney combined for 23 of Nova's final 26 points of the season but it was not enough to prevent an Illini victory. Illinois relied upon a balanced scoring attack (eight of the ten players on the roster scored) and good penetration by guards Quinn Richardson and Bruce Douglas (the Big Ten Conference's Co-Player of the Year).

And as Massimino had predicted before the game, rebounding and defense proved to be the deciding factor in the match-up.

"We won because of our defensive rebounding," said sophomore sharpshooter Doug Altenberger, "not because of our offense."

Second Half Corrals Herd

By LARRY GOANOS

The Villanova Wildcats managed to shake off a sluggish first half with red hot 17 of 19 shooting in the second stanza to propel themselves to an 84-72 victory over the Marshall University Thundering Herd on Friday night at the Milwaukee Arena.

"I thought we had a great second half," observed coach Rollie Massimino minutes after his Wildcats had shot a team record 71 percent from the floor and made the Milwaukee fans wonder if maybe the Sixers had taken Villanova's place on the flight out of Philadelphia.

"We had to make a little adjustment in the second half," added senior Frank Dobbs. "Mainly we went to a man-to-man . . . that's our bread and butter."

A "little adjustment" was indeed necessary after the Cats produced more turnovers (16) in the first half than field goals (13), thanks mainly to Marshall's "permanent press," a full court swarming pressure defense.

Despite combining for 29 first-half points, Harold Pressley (11), Dwayne McClain (10) and Ed Pinckney (eight) were unable to keep Villanova even with the Southern Conference champions in the opening stanza.

The Cats and the Thundering Herd were neck and neck for the first part of the half, with the score being tied seven different times before McClain put the Cats ahead for the final time in the stanza with a smooth lay-in at the 4:53 mark. Marshall's Don Turney slammed home an alley-oop dunk seconds later to spark the Herd off to what would eventually be a seven-point lead at 40-33 when the half ended. Playing the major role for Marshall was senior Laverne Evans who poured in 18 first half points and put on the best show of anyone in Milwaukee with his name since Penny Marshall portrayed a brewery worker in a TV sitcom.

Junior Dwayne McClain

The Cats put an end to the comedy in the second half, however, with a fierce man-to-man defense and remarkable marksmanship. After forward David Wade drove to the lane for a strong lay-up with 16:38 left in the Marshall season, making the score 50-42 in favor of the Herd, Villanova put the clamps on and allowed only two Marshall free throws over the next 9:12 of the contest. Sam Winley converted an offensive rebound at the 7:18 mark to finally put an end to the Thundering Herd's drought. By this time, however, the Cats had surged to a 56-52 lead as a result of excellent penetration and an intelligent shot selection. Never looking back, the Cats sailed out to an eventual 12-point victory, 84-72.

Marshall Coach Rick Huckabay offered an explanation for his team's woeful second half showing. "I think Coach Massimino kicked into gear and his team really started to play," said the Basketball Times' Rookie of the Year coach.

"They handled our defense better in the second half," explained Evans who managed only four points in the second half to close out his Marshall career with a 22-point performance.

Villanova was led by McClain (24 points) and Pinckney (22 points, 10 rebounds) in the game, both of whom teamed up to shoot nine of 10 in the Cats' hot second half.

Correction

Villanova's first round Big East opponent was Pittsburgh and not Connecticut as mentioned in the [illegible] of last week's article on page 23.

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Ed Pinckney

For his outstanding performance in the last four games of Villanova's '83-'84 basketball season, junior center "E-Z" Ed Pinckney has been named Budweiser Athlete of the Week.

Pinckney, at 6'9", has been an asset to the team all season long. In Villanova's last four showings he really came alive with extraordinary performances in the Big East Tournament and the NCAA Tournament, averaging better than 21 points per game in addition to pulling down an average of 13 rebounds per game.

In the Big East Tournament at Madison Square Garden in New York City, Villanova defeated Pittsburgh, 75-65, in their first game but fell to Syracuse by 66-65. In these two games Pinckney personally contributed a total of 41 points, 28 rebounds, four steals, four assists and three blocked shots. For his efforts he was named to the All-Big East Tournament Team and Second Team All-Big East Conference.

In the first round of the Division I NCAA Tournament, Villanova was victorious over Marshall, 84-72, but lost to Big Ten co-champions Illinois, 64-56, in the second round last Sunday in Milwaukee. In the Wildcat's last two contests, Pinckney threw in a total of 44 points while grabbing 24 rebounds.

Pinckney's season-long accomplishments earned him the right to be named one of the 10 finalists for the John R. Wooden Award, which is presented annually to the nation's most outstanding college basketball player. Pinckney commented on being one of these chosen few: "It's a pretty good honor, considering only a couple of guys in the whole country get this chance."

He also commented on the team's overall progress after coming back from a 3-7 start: "We finally got going after a slow start when everyone began to put it together and the team began playing consistently well."

Pinckney led Villanova to a 19-12 final record, along with a 12-4 mark in the tough Big East Conference. Pinckney ended the season in the top 10 in both scoring and rebounding, finishing tenth and fifth respectively with an average of 14.3 points per game and 7.3 rebounds per outing.

Party Proceeds Despite Ban

By AMELIA McGOVERN

An unauthorized Radiation Day party was held March 23 on the maintenance building field near the corner of County Line Avenue and North Ithan Road, resulting in vandalism to certain campus residence halls.

The party, which was supposed to be in "celebration" of the fifth anniversary of the Three Mile Island radiation leakage incident in Harrisburg, Pa., was attended by about 400 students throughout Friday afternoon, according to one of the student organizers of the event. No more than 200 students were there at one time. The organizer related that there were supposed to be 20 kegs, but only 17 were tapped.

"I wonder if those people who live out there in the Harrisburg area whose lives were affected by the possible evacuation for months on end, at the time of the Three Mile Island incident in 1979, would really see it as a cause for a multi-keg party," the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, said. "I have trouble with the idea of this being a cause for celebration. I don't want to get hung up on this because I'm not so sure this is most people's intentions."

Stack continued, "It seems that if we had a rally to protest nuclear arms we would be lucky to get 20 people unless we were having kegs."

The administration did not call the police. There were no major problems at the party itself. "The unapproved outdoor event was a problem in itself," stated Dr. Richard Neville, vice president for Student Life. "We did not approve that event; rather, we asked the students not to have an event like that because of the bind that it puts us in with underage drinking. That it happened at all is very disappointing."

Stack said the administration made an attempt this year to be in touch with the students on the event. The offices of the Dean of Students and Residence Life sent out a letter (see page 3) to all on-campus residents warning the students that they would be sanctioned if the outdoor event took place.

The posters put up around campus said the party would be March 31, but the word was passed around that it would be March 24, according to several accounts.

"When the students saw we were starting to close parking lots and prevent cars from coming onto campus with kegs, they decided to do it Friday afternoon," Stack said.

According to one student who attended the Radiation Day party, a Villanovan security guard tried to take a keg from a student but was unsuccessful. "Security left us alone after that. There was nothing they could do. They just stood up on the hills and watched."

Students at Radiation Day party.

"We cooperated with the dean of students and Residence Life. They called the shots. There were no confrontations, at least none of which I was aware," said Rowan Kelly, director of security. "The police weren't called. This was my first experience with an event like this; I just wanted to see how it went."

Concerning the incident with the security guard, Stack said, "I'm not aware that that happened. Security was taking a cue from Residence Life and my office. The new director, Chief Kelly, was very helpful. He did what we asked him to do.

"I think we had a sense of what

Student Government Assessed

First of a two-part series

By NICK ANASTASIO

With the student government elections less than a week away, it is now appropriate to take a look back at the student government headed by Patrick Leahy. The "Leahy Administration" helped return football, implemented a fall break for next year, laid the groundwork for an off-campus student busing service, gained extended visitation hours and was even able to work with the school's administration to allow alcohol at parties (with certain restrictions).

Football was of primary concern last semester. "The first issue we handled was the football issue," said Engineering Senator Jon Meisel. "That was a touch and go thing. Our decision was not to make enemies along the way. When we had a meeting with the executive committee of the Board of Trustees, we mentioned that the students were in favor of football.

"We weren't going to hold any rallies because of the bad publicity for the university. That is how we attempted it. We went right to the top and stated our views. That might have had some impact."

Leahy holds similar views. "Football was a controversial subject since they dropped it. What we had to do in this student government was take a change of course than last year's student government. We wanted football but I think the situation had risen to a degree where football wasn't the issue anymore. It was a matter of emotion on both sides."

"You know that's a sticky thing," said the Rev. John Stack, O.S.A., dean of students. "Some felt the students could have rallied and that [Leahy] could have organized them. I think his feeling was at that point that that was not going to do anything more than get people's backs up.

"I agree with that . . . There were certainly a lot of bad feelings there, and I don't think the answer was going to be in terms of a big protest. Looking back, I think that that would have just backed people into a corner. I think that he did the right thing. I think he made his position clear."

"It wasn't as simple as going out and yelling, 'We want football back,' " said Thomas J. Sullivan, a Commerce and Finance senator. "I think we did a good job. We were doing things we thought would get football back, which isn't always the path that the student can see."

Almost as important an issue as football was the alcohol policy. "When we came back this summer we found that Villanova was going to go dry, and that is not just the college atmosphere to have," Sullivan said.

"It really shocked me, and I was here all summer long," Leahy explained. "Nobody made me aware that they were dropping alcohol. It was ridiculous that no one consulted with the students. They didn't consult with anyone; they

Zoning Variances Granted

By GARY R. DYER

On March 15 the Radnor Township Zoning Hearing Board granted the University two variances from the West Campus zoning classification. The variances will allow two buildings on the western part of the former Morris estates to be used for administrative offices and a faculty club facility.

Farrell Hall, a mansion built in 1890, is tentatively set to hold the offices of the vice-president for university relations, the alumni staff and the development office, "those offices which are now housed in Austin Hall," according the the Rev. John J. McKenzie O.S.A., director of planning.

The Morris house at the south end of Dundale Rd. will now be permitted to hold the Faculty Club, as well as serve as a residence for either two unrelated individuals or five Augustinians (the Order is viewed as an extended family).

The entire West Campus, most of which was bought by the University in September 1978 for $750,000, is still zoned as R-1 Residential, for single-family homes. The variances were granted on demonstrated hardship, the impracticality of the buildings fulfilling that classification.

"Farrell Hall has about 15,000 square feet of floor space," explained McKenzie, "and the average single-family dwelling going up now, even in Radnor Township, is about 2,000 square feet. It really can't be used for that purpose."

Farrell Hall and the Morris house are both west of Dundale Road. "We received variances on the eastern portion of the Morris Estate two years ago for general institutional use of the three major buildings there."

The Rev. John J. McKenzie, O.S.A., director of planning.

Of those three buildings, Burns Hall is currently the Midwest Seminary Residence, Donnellon Hall is art department studio space and Kletotka Hall is used for storage.

The current plan entails installing parking for 40 cars to serve Farrell Hall and 30 spaces for the Morris house.

Last summer two fields for lacrosse, field hockey and soccer were put in on the east side of Dundale Road. "The turf is still in preparation," McKenzie said.

The parking facilities for Farrell Hall will hold 40 vehicles, while those for the Morris house will hold 30, according to McKenzie.

"The trustees have not committed anything to these buildings, but the administration is using this proposal as a tentative plan for approval by the Zoning Board," McKenzie explained.

"We have not received written indication from the Zoning Board, but the number mentioned as a reasonable figure was 40 employees in Farrell Hall.

"At least we are certain now that the township will let us use [Farrell] for office space, which is heartening," McKenzie said.

There are no further zoning proposals to the Radnor board planned.

"We asked for residence for five people on the second floor of the Women's Business Society

Wendy Elliot from the Career Counseling Center, will be speaking to the W.B.A. and all other interested students on "Career Trends for Women in the '80s." The lecture will begin at 4:30 p.m. on Thursday in the North Lounge. Also, elections for next year's officers will be held, so all members must attend.

Organizational Meeting

There are two meetings scheduled to explain what is done on Sunshine Day (April 14). Anyone who is planning to participate in Sunshine Day must attend one of these meetings. They will be held on April 2 at 6 p.m. in Bartley 108 and April 3 in Tolentine 213.

Villanova Comedy Works

Never a dull moment! Can you believe it!?! Chip Franklin and Sean Morey on the same night! The Villanova Union presents Chip, who has appeared with such acts as Jackson Browne, The Ramones, Dan Fogelberg and Steppenwolf. Sean Morey has been seen on the Tonight Show, as well as many other TV shows and has been hired as a writer for television. As an opening act he has performed with many stars in Las Vegas, Lake Tahoe, Atlantic City and on tour. Don't miss the excitement on April 6, 8:30 p.m. in the Day Hop.

Villanova Theater

Villanova Theater will present William Shakespeare's comedy, "A Midsummer Night's Dream" April 3-7 and 10-4. All performances take place at 8 p.m. in Vasey Theater. Call 645-7474 for information. Tickets are $5 Tuesday-Thursday and $6 on Fridays and Saturdays, with group rates and student and senior citizen discounts available.

Homeless

There will be a panel discussion on the plight of the homeless people of America this Thursday. The discussion will look into the dimensions of the problem and what we can do as a nation. The discussion will be presented by: Dr. Mathis, Villanova University; Br. Anthony Struzinski, St. Francis Inn; two homeless men; and members of the Villanova Committees for the Philadelphia Homeless. The discussion will be held in the North Lounge of Dougherty at 10 a.m. and 11:30 a.m. All are welcome.

Class Rings

Class of '86 Ring Orders will be held April 10, 11 and 12, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. each day. The rings will be delivered in September. A $25 deposit is required.

Peace and Justice

Villanova's Peace and Justice program is co-sponsoring with St. Joseph's University, a lobbying workshop to be held at St. Joseph's on March 31 at 10 a.m. Students who want to become more politically awake throughout Election '84, this is an opportunity for you. The workshop will be presented by Network, a Washington based Catholic lobby. For information contact Professor Regan, Philadelphia Department Vasey Hall.

New Course

An interesting new course called "Tales of Terror and the Supernatural" will be offered in Fall 1984. Unfortunately, the course title isn't correctly listed in the Fall 1984 Schedule. The course number, 133-2700-03, is correct but the title is inaccurately given as "Studies in Literature." Authors covered are Edgar Allan Poe, Ray Bradbury, Howard Lovecraft, Stephen King, etc. For further information contact the English department.

Villanova Dance Ensemble

The Villanova Dance Ensemble presents: Showcase I on April 8 at 3 p.m. at the Field House. Tickets will be available at the door. Cost: $4 — general admission, $2.50 — students. For information, call Mary Ann Burke, 645-7214.

Balloon Day Meeting

A meeting for planning Balloon Day will be held April 2 at 8:30 p.m. in the West Lounge (Balloon Day is April 10).

I.F.C.—Panhel

The I.F.C. and Panhellenic Associations, will be sponsoring the Second Annual Easter Egg Hunt on April 7 from noon-2 p.m. in front of the Main Chapel. The hunt is for children 8 years and younger. There will be prizes awarded. Raindate April 8.

Cheerleader and Mascot Tryouts

Wanted: spirited, agile, fun-loving, basketball-loving, able to travel, guys and girls.

Applications available in Student Activities. Bring completed application and a photograph to the clinic on April 4. Dress: sneakers, sweats, shorts. Anyone wishing to tryout must attend the clinic.

Mandatory Clinic — 4/4 and 4/5, 4:30-7:30 p.m. Alumni Gym.

Extra-help Clinic 4/6, 4:40-7:30 p.m. Alumni Gym.

Tryouts — 4/8, 9 a.m.-3 p.m. Alumni Gym.

Campus Ministry will hold an Easter Retreat on April 18, 19 and 20 at Kirkridge Retreat Center. Cost is $25. Please sign up in Campus Ministry office.

Lucious Legs

A Luscious Legs Contest, for men only, is being sponsored by Tau Kappa Delta sorority. Pictures of legs will be taken April 2 and 3 in the Connelly Center. Proceeds will benefit the Leukemia Foundation. Pick up an application in the Student Activities office by March 30 for your favorite male leg. Winner will receive a cash prize on Balloon Day.

Cultural Film

Harold Pinter's "Betrayal" is the next presentation in the Villanova Cultural Film Series. This perceptive film will be shown April 8 at 3:30 p.m. and 7 p.m. and April 9 at 7 p.m. in the Connelly Center Cinema. A discussion, "Silent Messages," will follow the April 8 showing. Admission is $1.50 for students and senior citizens and $3 for the general public. Call 645-7262 for information.

Adam Smith Prizes

Each year the department of economics awards two prizes to those students who submit the best research papers on topics in economics. This year the first prize is $150 and the second prize is $50. Open to all full-time undergraduate students.

If you wish to submit a paper or have any questions, please contact Dr. Thanawala (Bartley 342).

The deadline for submission of the papers is April 3. All papers should be submitted to Miss Brown, in the economic department office (Bartley 342).

Slide Presentation

Have you heard about Villanova's medieval archeology program in Sienna this summer during the month of July? A narrated slide presentation on the dig will be given in the Connelly Center lobby on April 2, 3, 4. For more info call 645-7610 or 645-7590.

Organizational Meeting

There will be two organizational meetings for the April 14 Sunshine Day volunteers. Anyone planning to participate must attend one of the following meetings: April 2 at 6 p.m. in Bartley, or April 3 at 12:45 p.m. in Tolentine. Any questions regarding Sunshine Day will be answered. Thank you for your cooperation.

Student Government Analyzed

just dropped it.

"It took meeting after meeting to balance out different ideas that I had, that the student government had, that (the administration) had. We finally came out with a compromise."

Stack agreed. "Certainly the solution we have now is not pleasing to everybody, but I think it was a step in the right direction, away from where we were last fall. Pat was trying to mediate between the administration and the students."

"We went to the D.A. [district attorney] and met with the administration," Sullivan added. "We battled because we realized that alcohol is something that college students want on a sociable basis."

Recently, student government has been pushing for a bus service for off-campus residents. Nursing Senator Janine Alfano, who has done much of the work on the issue, hopes to see it through by next semester. "I put a lot of time into it, and I'm not going to let it just drop there. It didn't get the best response, but there is a future for it."

The fall break, which will be implemented next year as an experiment, became a reality through student government efforts. It conducted a poll, and the results showed that 70 percent of the students favored a break. Ironically, the same percentage of faculty members opposed the break. "It just shows the usefulness and the need for student government," Leahy said.

Stack doubts that the fall break will have many opponents after it has been tried. "I think once we go through one year with this, there will be very few people who will be opposed to it," he said.

Patrick Leahy, student body president.

So how does student government rate itself this year? Any regrets or second guesses?

"I think we had a great year," said Leahy. "I really don't have any regrets. I've loved being student body president.

"One thing that I wish had gone through that we did push for was the change in student activities in the structure of the organization. Student government presented it and it was shot right to hell. I think it was a mistake, and I've no regrets in pushing for that bill."

Meisel: "I don't regret anything. I really don't feel bad about anything that was done."

Sullivan: "I think we did a good job on football because they voted it in. I really think we could have made a more conservative effort to do something more to try to get people more involved."

Next week: What the new student government might be dealing with.

Candidate Speaks

By MARIA C. BRECK

Curt Weldon spoke March 21 in Dougherty Hall sponsored by the Villanova Republicans, concerning his candidacy for the 7th district's Congressional seat.

Weldon will be running unopposed in the primary elections on April 10 and against the incumbent, Democrat Bob Edgar, in the general elections in November.

In establishing his qualifications for the Congressional position, Weldon reviewed his record as mayor of his hometown, Marcus Hook, from 1977 to 1981. Marcus Hook is "a blue-collar, heavily-industrialized community" located in Pennsylvania's 7th district, which he described as the "waterfront corridor of Delaware County."

During these years, Weldon said, his prime concerns were upgrading his community's economic standing and decreasing its crime rate. He said his major accomplishments included improving the police department and reoccupying a large, abandoned office building left by the FMC corporation. As a result, Weldon was able to attract numerous businesses to Marcus Hook and improve the unemployment rate. He also remarked that he feels these projects were accomplished by getting the people of his community involved in the improvement process.

When asked why he decided to run for this position, Weldon cited several conditions that exist under his opponent's administration. Weldon stated, "One of the things that the incumbent Congressman has not been able to do has been the ability to provide leadership for industry and for the county in terms of securing additional defense contracts." According to Weldon, these contracts are needed to provide jobs and profits for the many industries located along the waterfront.

Secondly, Weldon said that Edgar falls down in "applying the practical reality of governmental programs at the local level." In response to this, Weldon commented, "If you are elected Congressman, the representative of the people in your district, you have every responsibility to make sure that your constituents are getting every available service entitled to them."

The last reason Weldon cited was the incumbent's voting record. According to Weldon, Edgar's record was "one of the most liberal in the House of Representatives," and did not correspond to the middle-of-the-road views of his district.

In speaking of the election itself Weldon stated, "This race is especially important because, in my opinion, Bob is attempting to buy the seat." Weldon went on the explain that he does not think it is fair that Edgar can generate in excess of $600,000 for his campaign and consequently saturate media time with political ads.

PBK Studies University

By ROBERT M. JORDAN

Representatives from Phi Beta Kappa, the prestigious national liberal arts and sciences fraternity, visited Villanova last week to evaluate the possibility of establishing a chapter here.

Three members of the Phi Beta Kappa qualifications committee met with University administrators, Phi Beta Kappa faculty members and honors students on March 22 and 23. The committee consisted of Frederick Crosson from Notre Dame University, Bruce Donovan of Brown University and Frederick Andrews of Purdue University.

During their stay, the committee analyzed Villanova's strengths and weaknesses. One Honors student who met with the committee noted, "They focused on three questionable points they had noticed: the disproportionately high number of A's given in Religious Studies courses; the fact that core math requirements can be partially fulfilled by taking Math Appreciation, which, one of the committee members observed, 'doesn't appear to be a particularly difficult course;' and the high number of part-time teachers. They asked us specifically about how available those teachers were for out-of-class consultation."

Among the administrators who met the committee were University President John M. Driscoll, O.S.A.; Vice President for Academic Affairs the Rev. Lawrence Gallen, O.S.A.; Dean of Admissions the Rev. Harry Erdlen, O.S.A.; College of Liberal Arts and Sciences Dean the Rev. John O'Malley, O.S.A.; Director of Athletics Dr. Theodore Aceto; and Director of the Honors Program Dr. Michael Burke.

The process of applying for the establishment of a chapter was initiated by Burke in 1982 when he, as chairman of a group of Villanova faculty who are members of Phi Beta Kappa, began petitioning for Villanova's admission to the select group of Phi Beta Kappa colleges.

Burke said, "The committee detected a general optimism for the future of this institution. They felt that the faculty and students perceive our academic administration as being supportive and conducive to academic excellence.

"They were generally impressed with Villanova in general and with the students in particular. Their questions were in the nature of clarification. Our university's rigid core requirements worked to our favor," Burke added.

The committee's recommendation will be announced in late May. Their report will be presented at a full convention of fraternity members in the summer of 1985, at which time the application will be voted upon.

If a Phi Beta Kappa chapter were instituted at Villanova, the first class to be eligible for admittance would be the Class of 1986, and then only a small group of students, perhaps 10, would be inducted. The whole university would benefit, however, because of the prestige such an organization adds to a college's reputation.

Visitation Hours Extended

By ANTHONY EDWARDS

The administration has announced a new visitation policy after lengthy study of the situation.

There were many factors involved in the process of changing the visitation situation, according to Dr. Richard Neville, vice president for Student Life. "We felt that the visitation policy should be limited, reasonable and in keeping with the student's lifestyle."

A one-year study was done on the advisability of changing the old policy. This included the recent student survey, suggested by President John M. Driscoll, O.S.A.; discussion with the resident assistants; and a survey of other similar Catholic colleges and universities in the Northeast.

"All of the schools in the Northeast had a policy that was similar or longer than the present program," added Neville.

It was believed that the old program, with visitation on weekdays from 3 p.m. until 11 p.m., was not unfair. However, it is felt that the new policy makes more sense. "Three o'clock in the afternoon did appear to be an artificially late time," said Neville. "It wasn't serving much purpose. Hopefully the new hours will lead to increased study time."

Weekend hours were not changed. "We feel our weekend program is not unreasonable and that there is a need to respect other's privacy," said Neville. Residents and visitors have to know when guests are not supposed to be in the dorm."

The new policy will not bring any change in the enforcement of visitation hours. "Sleeping overnight generally results in the loss of campus residency, but being ten minutes overtime is a different story."

Pat Connell, a resident assistant in Delurey Hall, thought that the new hours would enhance the living environment. "It is much easier for students to study for tests now, and most people are up and dressed by noon, instead of, say, 8 a.m."

Dr. Richard Neville, vice president for Student Life.

Connell also felt it was a positive move by the administration. "This shows that they are aware of the student's needs and that the students can act positively through the channels of University government."

Most of the resident assistants were in favor of the new policy. They also felt it was more reasonable for both the students and the R.A.'s. They were informed of the policy change about one week before the new policy was implemented.

Radiation Day

Editor's note: The following letter was delivered by administration officials to all on-campus residents on March 21, two days prior to 'Radiation Day' at the University. It is printed in its entirety, unedited.

March, 1984

To All Resident Students:

The "Radiation Day Event," an unauthorized outdoor beer party has been advertised over the past two weeks. Because last year students encouraged this activity and participated without a clear understanding of the institution's liability or the individual consequences that could be assessed, we want to take this opportunity to provide you with factual information.

Villanova University recognizes the Pennsylvania State Statutes that forbid the sale or distribution of alcoholic beverages to any person under the age of twenty one. Current University policy on alcohol allows for those who qualify under the law to be served at properly sponsored activities. B.Y.O.B. events and other illegal activities obligate the institution to civil, if not criminal liability, in the case of accident or injury, and therefore are prohibited.

The Dean of Students Office, the Security Department, and the Office for Residence Life would appreciate your cooperation in avoiding an unnecessary incident over this issue. Recent press coverage in Radnor and Lower Merion Townships as well as discussions on our own campus should serve as good documentation of Villanova University's concerns and limitations. If students, however, disregard these obligations and insist on initiating an illegal outdoor event, be advised that the University will have no choice but to take appropriate action.

Students identified as organizers or suppliers of large quantities of alcohol will be subject to suspension or loss of campus residency, and are subject to $100 fines. Students who fail to identify themselves with University identification cards upon request, may also be subject to disciplinary sanctions. In no case should students assume that "Radiation Day" or other similar illegal activities will be approved or that the institution's response will be the same as in previous years.

We hope very much for your understanding and cooperation. Please see your Resident Assistant or Coordinator for Residence Management, if you have any questions.

Sincerely,

was going on and what we wanted was to keep more kegs from coming onto campus. We were not as successful as we'd like to have been."

A main problem with the party concerned vandalism. "We're disappointed with the afternoon's events. We are always upset when vandalism occurs and almost always it is correlated with drinking," said Neville.

The vandalism included several doors being broken in Sheehan, a fire extinguisher used in Sullivan, and the worst thing, according to Stack, a glass bottle thrown through a resident assistant's window.

"We can look at statistics on vandalism," Stack commented. "It is the price you pay when you allow easy access to great amounts of alcohol. I don't know what the answer is. I did not want to send down security and make it look like we're running some kind of police state.

"Obviously, students will feel as if they've gotten away with something. Students whose names we have will be sanctioned." Stack explained that the normal fine for having a keg on campus is $75, but for this case the fine was raised to $100 per keg. "We want the students to know we surely did not want this to take place.

"I feel the students are here for more than tying a load on. I just think back to the times that I've had to deal with parents of a victim of an accident involving alcohol. I wish that some of those kids who feel it's okay would have to do that. It would make them think twice."

Mike Ryan

What should voters look for in a candidate? Initially, several tired terms come to mind: the person seeking office should be responsible, dedicated and possess a certain degree of integrity. He or she should also be willing and able to take on the demands of the office, to resolve any conflicts which inevitably arise.

But when you come right down to it, despite all the claims everyone annually makes about his or her character and determination, what really counts is experience. Can that person do the job? Has he already proven himself capable of handling the office?

When students go to the polls on April 5 to elect a new student body president, as well as others for student government posts, they should keep that very word in mind. And when you talk about experience among the presidential candidates this year, one person clearly in the fore is Mike Ryan.

Ryan's accomplishments are impressive. As a current Commerce & Finance senator and as the student government vice president a year ago, Ryan has seen the operations of the system. Additionally, he has worked with several committees, including the Student Government Committee to Reinstate Football and the University Senate Executive Committee.

Ryan has also played a part in several student issues in the past. He has worked to keep minuses out of the grading system and argued for the implementation of a fall break, which becomes a reality next semester.

In short, Mike Ryan has proven himself the most viable candidate for the position. The Villanovan endorses him for student body president, a move that the voters, come election day, would likewise be right in making.

Big Brother

Did you ever have the feeling that someone was watching you? You neither see the person nor hear him, but you know he's there, lurking somewhere in the background.

If you are a Villanova student, whether an on- or off-campus resident, you have probably experienced this phenomenon within the past seven months or so. Your little neurosis, however, is most likely well-founded. There is someone hanging in the background, waiting for just that one slip that will allow him to make his move. We like to refer to such a shady figure as Big Brother, which can take any number of forms as it carries out its warped mission.

Exactly who (or what) is Big Brother? Well, for instance, we saw it in action last summer in the shapes of both the Liquor Control Board (LCB) and the Villanova administration. Remember? "The alcohol policy this year is the same basic policy we've always had, but we're changing it in that we're not going to allow exceptions to it," an administrator said in late August. "This is a direct result of pressure put on the administration by the state Liquor Control Board," he later commented. The campus went dead for several months following that action. Chalk one up for Big Brother and Doublespeak.

When the alcohol eventually flowed back to campus, Big Brother was not to be discouraged. Instead, it next struck off campus. This time, however, it took the shape of the Tredyffrin police, who courageously "busted" some gatherings in Sugartown on Feb. 24. We found out at the same time that Big Brother can also be eloquent: "Pass the word," said the Big Brother judge, "no more wild parties."

Alas, the students had their day in court last Friday when they gathered for Radiation Day, despite all the warnings from the administration and the presence of security personnel. We congratulate those who organized the event. You see, sometimes Big Brother has to look out for its own tail, and Radiation Day probably was a good opportunity for it to try to put down the clamps. Sometimes students must see through the guise, though. Sometimes we should just have a little fun.

Letters to the Editor:

A Comparison of Standards

To the Editor:

Does the name Bill Hurley mean anything to you? It should if you are an engineer. In his "Fair Standards" letter in last week's Villanovan Mr. Hurley informed us of his insight on the College of Engineering's low academic standards. It is our goal in writing this letter to answer "some very puzzling questions" concerning why the academic standards "are lower for the engineers."

Not to lessen the academic standards of other colleges, but is it not possible that a 3.0 G.P.A. in Engineering is just as fine an achievement as a 3.5 in other colleges?

The key word here is standard. The standards are set by each college, not the university. You, Mr. Hurley, question, "Why are the standards lower for Engineers?" The very same question could be unduly posed on other college too. One may question why C&F students take a standard 15 credits per semester while the Engineering student standard is never less than 17 and usually 18 credits per semester. This standard statistic, if looked at hastily by a confused student, may lead to one of two wrong conclusions: (1) that C&F students are slower and cannot handle the additional work or (2) that Engineering courses are easy and therefore one must take more of them. We do not think anyone would argue with the absurdity of these two conclusions. The fact is that the two colleges, in this case, have different standard requirements.

We can see from this situation that one's ignorance of the facts leads to unjust accusations from those who have never experienced the course load of engineers.

Poor Candidate?

One thing every candidate for an elective office wishes is that he be taken seriously. Let us then accord that respect to an announced candidate for student body president, Mr. Mark Rupprecht.

If we look at his previous public statements, and take him seriously, then we can see what type of candidate Mr. Rupprecht is.

The young Mr. Rupprecht had an auspicious debut in Villanova politics as an organizer of the protest rally in November. Rupprecht claimed the protest was an effort to renew social life at Villanova — yet posters advertising the rally played on student dissatisfaction with the then-current alcohol policy. Rupprecht has since denied that alcohol had anything to do with the rally. "Just because Jimmy D. [a Villanovan reporter] sees alcohol as the only social issue on campus does not mean we do," wrote Mr. Rupprecht in the Dec. 2 edition of this newspaper. One can only ask, would so many students have attended the rally if another purpose had been advertised?

The rally did have some effect, however. It forced the hand of Mr. Patrick Leahy, the current student body president who had been working on revising the alcohol policy behind the scenes. The rally obligated Mr. Leahy to make his work public.

Later, news articles about the policy which appeared in this paper were held to be subjective and misleading, according to Mr. Rupprecht. In his letter to the Villanovan, Rupprecht stated, "It would appear that you [another student] have fallen into the same sewer, or is it bed, with the former editors of the Villanovan." At no time were misleading news articles published in this paper under the former editorial board which Rupprecht so casually slanders. The truth often hurts and is more disheartening than anything we could make up.

How can a person who hopes to gain the confidence of the student body create a personal vendetta with one student, let alone attack the newspaper which seeks to represent the best interests of its readers? Is this someone to be taken seriously?

Well, Mr. Rupprecht let the "social life" issue lay low for a while, as it had bored students, and it was giving the university bad publicity. Yet Mr. Rupprecht, who had gained a role in student government by acting on his own, sought once again to move outside the rules of a body he was now part of.

In another letter to the Villanovan, published Feb. 24, the now-dissatisfied Mr. Rupprecht took the student government to task. "As the coordinator for the Student Government ad hoc Committee to Restore Social Life, I have found my efforts to make progress thwarted under the guise that another committee is already handling the issue," Mr. Rupprecht wrote. "After participating in the committee world of student government, I can report that it is not effective."

Very subtly, Mr. Rupprecht made the student body aware of his name. His bid for the presidency is not unexpected; in fact, it was his next logical move.

Yet it is not a move in the best interests of the student body. As shown in his previous public statements, Mr. Rupprecht is not someone in which to place our confidence. In the past, he has been too quick to attack the very system he now seeks to become a part of. Mr. Rupprecht is someone we should take seriously, seriously enough so that we do not elect him the next student body president.

An Unfair Fine

On March 12, I opened my mailbox to find a pink slip indicating that a piece of registered mail awaited me. Gee, I thought, maybe Mom sent a package! Well, was I ever disappointed! Rather than a care package, I got an envelope bearing the seal of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the return address of District Justice Armand A. Pomante.

Inside was a citation indicating that I had been charged with underage drinking, specifically possession of alcohol at Sugartown Mews. (Actually I had to deduce that myself, seeing as, other than the fine and court costs, the entire summons was illegible). My eyes quickly darted to glaring half-inch numerals indicating that I had been issued the maximum fine of $345.05. I went numb, developed a nervous giggle and was unable to say little more than, "This is ludicrous; they can not do this to us." But they have done this to us, and in two weeks I'll be stating my plea of not guilty to Judge Pomante.

Now let me fill you in on some of the events of Feb. 24 seeing as most of you are aware of nothing more than the fact that "thirty students were arrested during a raid on Sugartown Mews." First of all, I would like to produce the "facts" as they appeared in the Philadelphia Inquirer. Such an innocuous picture of what really happened. Perhaps the media should be censored more often. Secondly, I would like to point out that a party was actually taking place in the apartment which I was in.

Upon leaving the aforementioned party, the police [illegible] the entire area and proceeded [illegible] hallway, listening for other parties. They must have pounded their ears to the floor to [illegible] that a party was actually taking place in the apartment which I was in.

Feb. 24 brought beautiful, springlike temperatures to Villanova and following a week marred by four mid-terms and an infected throat, I was ready to get out of my room. With less than $20 total to our names, two friends and myself set off for Sugartown and what might turn out to be the most expensive party I'll ever attend. Upon our arrival, we noted the heavy volume of cars in the parking lot and passed several large, loud parties in both "I" and "R" buildings. We proceeded upstairs to what can only be termed a small, mellow gathering; the radio was tuned to easy-listening music and about seven people were engaged in conversation. And yes, there was beer available, though neither myself nor my friends had a single beer. During the ensuing ten minutes or so, a handful of others arrived.

At approximately 10:15, the Tredyffrin Police arrived after having broken up at least one other party, a large noisy affair at which only the apartment leasees were fined.

World Affairs Symposium

By BRIAN D. WEBB

The Delaware Valley Symposium on World Affairs, sponsored by the political science department, was held March 24 in the Connelly Center. Although several issues were discussed, most of the attention was focused on the human suffering in Central America.

"Today we will attempt to expand and clarify the contemporary meaning of human rights," said Dr. Joseph Thompson, assistant professor of political science. Thompson stated that people have a "moral obligation" to work for human rights and "seek agreements" wherever necessary. These agreements, he said, are "the basis of hope for the future."

After Thompson's opening remarks, the audience divided into five workshop groups to discuss specific issues affecting different regions of the world. There were workshops for Central America, Ireland, the Middle East, the U.S.S.R. and Eastern Europe and Southern Africa.

The Central America workshop was led by Angela Berryman, assistant coordinator for Human Rights/Global Justice. In a prepared statement, Berryman pleaded for "peaceful, negotiated solutions" to the violence and injustice in Central America. She said that we as Americans must "open our minds to a broader way of looking at human rights."

In a discussion that followed Berryman's presentation, the group exhanged opinions on what they thought should be done to solve the problem of injustice in Central America. The overall consensus among the group was that all aid to El Salvador and Nicaragua should be stopped. They also agreed that this can be achieved in two ways: defeating President Reagan in the fall and writing to local congressmen.

Berryman does not believe that people really understand what is happening in Central America. Her message to Villanova students is to "become more educated" on the topic of Central America.

The basic conflict in El Salvador is a civil war between the government and leftist guerrillas. The El Salvador government has no real judicial system. The army and deathsquads have allegedly killed 40,000 civilians since 1979. There is much economic injustice and poverty throughout the nation. Although Reagan has been sending economic aid to the government, much of the money is not reaching the people. Instead, it is being used for military equipment, according to the coordinator.

The basic conflict in Nicaragua is a civil war between the Sandinista government and the American-financed counter-revolutionaries. In July 1979, the Somoza government was overthrown and replaced with the Sandinistas. The United States was upset with this change because the Somozas were friendly with the U.S. and the Sandinistas were more independent. Under the Somoza regime, there was much illiteracy, oppression and other injustices. After four years of the Sandinista government, there are signs of social improvement.

Shirley Dodson, peace field secretary of the Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends, presented an address entitled, "A Witness For Peace In Nicaragua." After recently spending eight days in Nicaragua, Dodson reports that the social and economic situation is improving. According to Dodson, many homes, health clinics and schools have been built. She said, "The Sandinista government has the support of the people . . . They have given guns to their people, but still they do not uprise."

According to Dodson, the U.S.-financed counter-revolutionaries often attack defenseless villages and kill many innocent women and children. She said, "It is distressing for me that our government is supporting this kind of thing."

In an interview after her presentation, Dodson said, "Reagan believes that the whole world is divided between countries that are with us and countries that are against us. Countries like Nicaragua, which are independent, are seen as a threat to the United States."

Dodson would like to see all aid to Central America stopped. She feels that the Salvadoran government would collapse without aid from the United States. According to Dodson, this collapse would be followed by the takeover of the government by the FNLN (the guerrilla organization). "It would be a real bloody mess," said Dodson, "but it is a bloody situation right now. Military aid just fuels the fire." Dodson believes that after the initial "bloody mess," the killings would stop and the country would return to normal.

After Dodson's address, Kenneth M. Peoples, from the Bureau of Human Rights and Humanitarian Affairs, U.S. State Department, gave a presentation entitled "United States Policy on Human Rights." He said there is a "bilateral concept" of the need for human rights, but there is a "difference of opinion on how to carry out this goal." Peoples said that "quiet diplomacy" was the answer for countries that violate human rights.

"Strong condemnation would just decrease the likelihood of human rights. It would just challenge them to prove that they are not a present to the United States," said Peoples.

Peoples stressed the need to "balance out" the need for human rights with other considerations such as economic, military and national security.

In an interview after his presentation, Peoples said it was "unfortunate" that people are being killed in the civil wars of Central America, but "those things happen in war."

Following Peoples' address, the last speaker, Dr. Douglas Bennett, director of public policy studies at Temple University, presented an address entitled "A Critique of United States Human Rights."

Bennett said, "How can we promote democracy on a people? Democracy cannot be imposed — it must be the labor of the Salvadorans." Bennett called the March 25 elections a "hoax." He feels that there can be no democracy if people are not treated as equals.

West Campus Zoning

Morris house," McKenzie said. "It was brought up that that would make it a boarding house. So it was a condition imposed that we do not have more than two unrelated individuals or five Augustinians living there."

The principal purchase of West Campus property was made in September 1978; that transaction involved abut 38 acres. Later the University acquired the Morris house along with 2.3 acres of land.

"We went into Radnor Township in March 1982 looking for a rezoning of the whole property to institutional use," said McKenzie. "During the course of deliberations we compromised to restrict our application to just the area east of Dundale Road.

McKenzie pointed out that the "land-use map" of the township shows the area as institutional, not residential; the map is a "guide to the development of the township, but such differences between it and the actual zoning are not unusual with local government.

"Radnor will be re-mapping the whole township about two and a half years from now," McKenzie noted.

"While we did then have a good case for re-zoning the eastern portion, bringing the land into conformity with the land-use plan, the Board took a relief that was not really legally supportable, contending there were hardships on these three buildings, when they are not as large and impractical for a single-family classification as Farrell Hall is.

"But the Zoning Board did permit, in July 1982, the institutional variances for what are now Burns, Donnellon and Kletotka, and also hardship on the field there behind Burns, which permitted its institutional use as a playing field," McKenzie explained.

According to McKenzie, the repairs on Farrell Hall will take about a year. "It needs painting and roof repair, as well as the addition of modern heating, plumbing and electrical facilities. There is no water system in Farrell Hall, except a well."

The Dundale Road will be made a foot wider than it is now and needs to be resurfaced. The road was worn over the summer when 20,000 cubic yards of soil from the dormitory construction site were brought in to level the athletic fields.

"The Morris house needs little work, as it was inhabited by a husband and wife up until September 1980," McKenzie continued.

While the Faculty Club's Friday afternoon gatherings usually draw fifty or sixty, "about ten times a year they have dinners, and Radnor was talking about putting a maximum on the building — maybe 250. But its use will not be anything on that scale," according to McKenzie.

"There will be a traffic-control system imposed on the property," commented McKenzie. "A card access-controlled gate will be installed at the top of Dundale Road. Anybody with his brother and/or sister won't be able to drive in and do as they please, which is presently the situation. We've had undesirables about. University security drives through at random times, but the best form of security is having people in the buildings.

Farrell Hall, on the West Campus, proposed as site for administrative offices.

"The parking lots for the two buildings will complement each other," McKenzie observes. "Nighttime overflow from one can go on the other.

"We have not received an official transcript of the conditions imposed by the Zoning Board," added McKenzie. "We do not propose to add additional lights, as we're not going to be operating any kind of a major attraction.

"With people resident, there will be people around at night, as well as people in the offices during the day. That's precisely why President John M. Driscoll, O.S.A. has made it a point to have people living in the buildings."

Letters

To the Editor:

This is in response to a letter written by Bill Hurley last week, whining about the engineers having it easy. We have a question: Was it written in crayon? Perhaps it was given orally. Hey Bill, have an idea.

First of all, what's it to you anyway? We enter this university as students of the College of Engineering, and we leave as graduates of the same college. At no time do we enter into academic competition with any other college. Therefore, it should be no one's business but engineers' on what goes on within the College of Engineering.

There are many engineers who always complain that we have it the toughest. Personally, we don't usually take part in these discussions because we have chosen the course to take, and any problems we have are our own. But Bill wants an explanation, so here goes.

Over four years, engineers have 15 credits of humanities and six credits of English. The rest are all technical courses (about 120 credits). That works out to 17 or 18 credits per semester. More credits, more time to WX — big deal. Now, about this dean's list stuff. We'll bet you three dollars that there are fewer engineers per capita on our dean's list than on yours. But we can see your gripe, like we can see Pat Ewing becoming a Rhodes Scholar.

If you have any more questions, just come up to the fourth floor of Tolentine (that's the one above the third). Any of our colleagues would be more than happy to chat with you. Until then, remember Bill: "T" means true and "F" means false. Have a nice day.

No Respect

To the Editor:

This is not a particularly easy letter to write as I am torn between anger and dismay at my confrontations with a number of Villanova undergraduate students on March 14. While waiting for the six o'clock train, I watched several dozen students vault or attempt to vault the fence as they crossed the railroad tracks. Although there was water in the tunnel, it was possible to cross it without getting too wet, but most of the students insisted on crossing the tracks. I begged all of them to either use the bridge or brave the water. For my concern I received the ugliest, filthy verbal abuse from a number of students.

If Villanova students wonder why they are not respected in the area (not to mention not loved), perhaps this kind of behavior is the reason why. If Villanova students wonder why the LCB is pursuing them, perhaps public drunkenness at 6 p.m. is the reason why.

I have two pleas to the students of Villanova. One, under no circumstances cross the tracks. It is never safe, no matter how clearly you think you see or how nimble you think you are. Two, no matter how angry you are or how trivial it seems, watch your language. Walking around the campus is like walking through a locker room. No matter how inconsequential the incident, the image you present at all times to others represents not only you but Villanova. The image of many of the students I saw Wednesday was a disgrace.

To those hundreds of pleasant, friendly, sensible undergraduates I have gotten to know — can you exert some peer pressure to get those other guys to clean up their act?

Landesberg Entertains at Connelly

By ANDY MILLER

Most people know Steve Landesberg from his portrayel of Sgt. Arthur Dietrich on the highly successful comedy, "Barney Miller." During his five and a half years on the show, he received three straight Emmy nominations and wide recognition for his comic talent.

However, it is often difficult to tell the difference between Arthur Dietrich and Steve Landesberg, because both basically have the same sense of humor. The main difference according to Landesberg, though, is in intelligence. "I'm smarter than Dietrich.

"Naturally, some people only think "Barney Miller" when they come to see me, but either way, the audience pretty much knows what to expect," remarked Landesberg Saturday night, after his performance in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center.

Since "Barney Miller" ended its network run two years ago, Landesberg's been performing primarily before college audiences, but maintains that there is no real difference between college crowds and other types of audiences.

"No specific group is more or less enthusiastic than another," he claims. "People come to see you because they like what you do. Either they like you or they don't, so, there's no real difference.

"There's no particular reaction from an audience that stands out in my mind. I guess the strangest thing is when they don't laugh — that's certainly the worst reaction for a comedian."

Landesberg is not opposed to doing another sit-com if it's right, but he doesn't expect another "Barney Miller' to come along. He says that doing that show was more fun than work.

"We never had that hectic atmosphere," he noted. "It was very loose, and we got along great. We didn't feel any pressure; all the pressure was on the writers.

Landesberg doesn't watch many of today's situation comedies, but instead he prefers the shows that are in syndication, like "M*A*S*H" and his favorite situation comedy of all, "The Honeymooners." As for live comedy, such as that found on "Saturday Night Live," he expresses some doubts.

"It's awful hard to be funny for an hour and a half, especially if it is live. Most people don't realize just how hard that is, although the sketches can be a lot of fun."

Landesberg holds a tremendous amount of respect for writers, although he's never written for any comedians other than himself. He feels most comfortable writing for himself, because he knows what will probably work with his audiences.

As a native of the Bronx, Landesberg started doing comedy in Greenwich Village, where he worked with the likes of Jimmie Walker and David Brenner, both of whom were also starting out.

He continued to work as a stand-up comic, and soon got his first big break — an appearance on the "Tonight Show" with Johnny Carson on Dec. 17, 1971. Danny Arnold, who was the executive producer of "Barney Miller," liked Landesberg's work very much, and eventually hired him to play parts on the show. He soon became a permanent member of the cast, and went on to enjoy five-and-a-half highly-successful years as Sgt. Dietrich.

"'Barney Miller' was a good show because the writing was just terrific. All the pressure was on the writers, and we finally went off the air because they got tired."

Landesberg never got tired of playing the same character, however. "I really enjoyed playing Dietrich. When the script wasn't all that good, you might [start to], feel a little tired, but that didn't happen very often."

The future is still pretty much up in the air right now for him. He has turned down several scripts for movies and been up for others that he didn't get, but he is still in great demand as a stand-up comedian and makes many appearances on talk shows. He has also turned down several pilots for television shows.

Comedian Steve Landesberg

And if he weren't a comedian? "I'd love to be a ballplayer. I also like good journalism — I admire the kind of guy who just gets up and writes about what's going on."

But he is able to look at his career lightly. With that boyish smile on him that helps to make him so appealing, Landesberg noted, "Deep down I'm a bum."

Critic Speaks on Propaganda

(This is the first in a two-part series)

By GARY R. DYER

In January 1941, the New York publishing firm Harcourt, Brace published a book entitled "My Sister and I: the Diary of a Dutch Boy Refugee" under the pseudonym Dirk van der Heide. The book, an account of the author's life in war-torn Holland and his escape by way of England to New York, sold 52,000 copies before it went out of print in 1948, and inspired a popular song of the same title.

But in fact the book was not aimed at Holland or England. When the young author expresses his hope that what happened to the low countries never happens to England, the hand of propaganda is apparent.

The book was a hoax engineered by British propagandists.

Paul Fussell, noted literary and social critic, spoke March 27 in Bartley Hall in favor of the thesis that "wartime writing is the quintessence of popular writing," and that the way wartime hysteria fills literature with packaged images is illustrated by the popular fiction of the Second World War.

Fussell, who now teaches at the University of Pennsylvania, published in 1976, a book titled "The Great War and Modern Memory," a study of how British literary consciousness was affected by the experience of the First World War, and how the quality and vividness of the literary responses to that conflict influenced the modern psyche. Last year his book "Class" explored social distinctions in the United States and the effects of popular culture.

Fussell's talk was co-sponsored by the Honors Program and the history department and was part of the Honors Program's spring symposium, "An Exploration of Popular Culture."

His talk was drawn from material for the book he is writing, tentatively titled "The Cultural Form of the Second World War."

He discovered van der Heide's book in London's Imperial War Museum amid other works of the war.

The book, according to its translator, "Mrs. Anton Devanter," was written by a "sturdy Dutch boy with straight taffy-colored hair that falls over his forehead."

Paul Fussell Photo by Walsh

The account of the German bombing of the Dutch city of Rotterdam, which, at the time was the most destructive air raid ever, is a plausible account of the destruction and of Dirk's flight. Both a close friend and his mother were killed.

When he is in England, the English are very kind to Dirk, and the captain of the British ship which takes him to America encourages him to flesh out his diary.

"When I finished the book, I felt there was something strange going on," Fussell said. "It wasn't merely that the Germans were shown as instinctive killers of columns of unarmed civilians, [but] that the British were pictured as wholly fine and heroic. One gets that in all wartime writing.

"What seemed curious was the book's being written by a twelve-year-old Dutch boy anxious to portray as Good Samaritans, noble in every way, not so much his own people, as the British."

Fussell quoted from the book a passage in which the boy says, "I [illegible]

Villanova Grad Rises to the Top of Chrysler

By SHARON KELLY

Tom Gilman, a 1973 Villanova graduate and the current manager of Corporate Financial Studies at Chrysler, spoke on Chrysler's comeback in a lecture last Wednesday entitled, "Chrysler: The Remarkable Recovery." Gilman's ability and assertiveness combined with sheer determination enabled him to rise quickly to the top of his field. He recounted Chrysler's bleak financial situation in 1979 and detailed the results of the aggressive recovery program they implemented in order to put Chrysler "back on its feet" again.

Gilman emphasized that the Chrysler turnaround is an excellent example of government and business working together "to save jobs and restore competitive basic industry." But, he said, there was an urgent need in the United States for a "cooperative industrial policy" which would respond to the unfair cost advantage that Japanese car manufacturers have and thus enable the U.S. auto industry to become more competitive, both at home and abroad.

He urged the audience to respond to this challenge. "Maybe the place for the development of a cohesive industrial policy is right here on the college campuses of America," Gilman said.

Gilman outlined the circumstances which necessitated the Chrysler recovery. In the fall of 1979, roaring inflation, rapidly rising unemployment, and a severe auto industry slump found Chrysler on the brink of bankruptcy. It desperately needed a government-guaranteed loan of $1.2 billion to stay afloat, which was given on Jan. 7, 1980, after President Carter signed the Loan Guarantee Act. This loan came as a welcome relief to more than 600,000 workers who would have become unemployed overnight had Chrysler declared bankruptcy.

Although its financial status [illegible]

"unenviable challenge" of enacting an effective and speedy recovery plan that would enable Chrysler to show a profit while repaying the loan and interest, which totaled over $1.5 billion.

Under the strong and prudent leadership of chairman Lee Iacocca, Chrysler accomplished just that, "a complete corporate restructing" in a much shorter time period than anyone anticipated.

This recovery plan facilitated "the most incredible turnaround in U.S. corporate history," according to Gilman. It included reducing major wage and benefit concessions, slashing fixed costs by $1 billion, closing over 20 plants, and trimming their white-collar personnel by 20,000.

These enormous cutbacks enabled Chrysler to fulfill its main objective — increased market competitiveness. In the words of Iaccoca, "[Chrysler] emerged from the crisis as planned; not as a shaky raecuperant, but as a vigorous, lean and tough competitor, with technologically advanced cars and trucks carrying the best warranties in the business."

Chrysler's market share had drastically dwindled in the years preceding the '79 crisis, so, in order to increase competitiveness, it invested an additional $1.5 billion into product research. It also modernized its productional facilities with state of the art equipment so it could boost capacity and "begin to market a new line of innovative, high quality vehicles equipped with the latest technological advances." According to Gilman, this revamping of facilities was the key to Chrysler's comeback.

While attending Villanova, Gilman was an active and involved student. His impressive list of credits include executive vice president of student government, treasurer of the finance society, chairman of student life, student senator and a reporter for the [illegible]

Did you know. . .

●Recently the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) published a list showing the caffeine content of 23 popular soft drinks in its monthly magazine "FDA Consumer." The list showed that sugar-free Mr. Pibb has more caffeine than any of the other 23 popular soft drinks checked. Number two on this list was Mountain Dew, which beat out both Coke and Pepsi. Seven-Up, the third best-selling soft drink, has made the absence of caffeine the basis for an advertising campaign aimed at increasing its market share.

Caffeine is, however, on the FDA's list of food additives generally recognized as safe. FDA spokesman Jim Greene said "the effect of the milligram differences among these products is basically nil in the long run." There are two areas in which the FDA has expressed reservations about caffeine consumption, excessive consumption by youngsters and by pregnant women.

●Are you tired of paying high prices for theatre tickets? If you would like to attend more shows at the Philadelphia theatres, but cannot afford the prices, here is a list you will want to be on. This list enables you to receive discount tickets which you can exchange at the box office for the regular reserved seats at substantial savings. If you wish to be placed on this permanent list for discount tickets to live shows in the Philadelphia area, write a note to Hit Shows, 300 West 43rd Street, New York, N.Y. 10036.

●Recently in Pennsylvania a new bill has been proposed for legislation; it is the "Lemonade Bill." The same type of law already exists in both New Jersey and Delaware, and is being attempted in Pennsylvania. This bill deals with recurrent problems found in a new car by its owner. If you buy a new car in Pennsylvania and the dealer is unable to fix any recurrent problems, the dealer must give you another new car or refund your money. If you are interested in the outcome of such legislation, please contact the Consumer Affairs Research Board and if you would like to have an effect upon such legislation, write your state senator or assemblyman.

●How about the new Bell wiring insurance! I hope you all signed your "negative contracts." Bell wants us to acknowlege a new service by simply disregarding them. If you want to disregard the service, you must acknowledge this by signing the "negative contract" which was one of the many confusing pages in your new bill. This entire scheme is being brought to court because it doesn't seem right to place a service upon the consumer and leave the obligation to accept/reject up to them. More important is the fact that such insurance may be unnecessary. If you don't have insurance you will be charged $25 for a visit from Bell to do the wiring repairs, and if you do have the insurance you will be paying 50 cents per month. This scenario makes the insurance look like a bargain; however, the average phone heads a wiring repair once every 13½ years. Insurance for that period will cost $81 (disregarding future value). Now which seems the bargain?

●Here's a follow-up on one of our earliest articles. The Civil Aeronautics Board (CAB) has recently denied a proposal which would ban smoking on all flights shorter than two hours.

If you have any further questions, please contact the Consumer Affairs Research Board in Bartley 331.

A query in a literary magazine yielded an answer. A Mrs. Young wrote to inform him that her husband, a now-forgotten novelist named Stanley Preston Young, wrote "My Sister and I." Young, an editor at Harcourt, Brace, wrote the book as part of a British propaganda effort covertly managed by the "Bureau of British Security Coordination" in New York.

lanova experience as "incredible."

"The people here are close and friendly," he added. "When individuals in similar situations bond together, lasting friendships result.' He also keeps in touch with some of his closest college friends, whenever the pace of his demanding job allows.

He rates Villanova's business program, and, specifically, the accounting program, as "excellent.'

"Professors here possess sound and practical business experience, so, a student graduates with realistic goals."

Gilman, who is often involved in recruiting at Chrysler, ranks participation in college organizations and activities as extremely important. While a good G.P.A. "is a plus to get you in the door," he admits that he also looks for individuals who have developed valuable personal assets, such as public speaking and decision-making ability through activities.

Gilman concluded by saying he believes that these types of people are "well-rounded and possess qualities that will enable them to fit into our organization."

(Ken Stevenson, official spokesman for the Shroud of Turin research project, will give a slide-show presentation of the Shroud on April 11 at 8 p.m. in Dougherty Hall. His presentation would be a good way of focusing our attention on the passion, death, and resurrection of our Lord during this season of Lent.)

By ED LIS

The Shroud of Turin is an ancient linen cloth imprinted with the image of a dead man's body and marked with what look like bloodstains. The man appears to have been crucified and buried in a way that exactly parallels the Gospel account of Jesus' crucifixion and burial. Is the Shroud the burial cloth of Jesus? And, if so, what does it mean for Christian faith?

Kenneth Stevenson, co-author of a book entitled "The Verdict on the Shroud," claims that the scientific and historical evidence contained in the Shroud "all points to Jesus as being the man of the Shroud — and this has momentous implications, not only for Christianity, but for the whole world of the twentieth century. It directly confronts us with the Resurrection of Jesus Christ." His conclusion seems well-founded, since Stevenson serves as the official spokesman for the Shroud of Turin Research Project — the scientific team which examined the Shroud in 1978.

What the Scientists found after careful study, according to Stevenson, was that the image of the Shroud exhibits physical, chemical, and optical properties that cannot be created artificially. While no foreign material such as paint dye or ink could be found on the Shroud, scientists did find that the reddish-brown stains that marked the body's wounds were indeed bloodstains. It was thus concluded that the image was not a forgery by some medieival artists, but that the Shroud was a real burial cloth.

What is the image composed of? What process formed an image with such unique properties?

It is here that Stevenson begins to speak of the Shroud as possible evidence for Jesus' Resurrection. In his book, he affirms that Jesus is the man of the Shroud based upon the corroboration between Gospel accounts of the various irregularities in the manner of Jesus' crucifixion and the Shroud's image of a man crowned with thorns, pierced in the side by a Roman spear, and with no broken bones. The fact that there is no evidence of decomposition on the cloth and that the bloodstains are intact confirms that the body was in the Shroud less than four days and was wrapped. Stevenson concludes that the image was scorched on the Shroud by heat and light as Jesus rose and his transformed body left the Shroud without unwrapping it.

Although Stevenson affirms that as Christians we don't depend on the Shroud as an integral part of our beliefs, he sees it as a good focusing mechanism for faith, a way to get our attention and to consider the Gospel more seriously.

Op-Ed

several of the officers, there were at least five present, suggested that seeing how small and quiet this gathering was, they should leave us alone (sic). But one officer insisted on entering the apartment and breaking up the party. He sauntered in with a tough-guy image and immediately tried to intimidate us. He immediately assumed a snippy, defensive attitude even though none of us offered any hassles or comments. The lieutenant first indicated that anyone of legal age could leave. Those people left freely and were not required to show identification. Being honest individuals, my friends and I did not attempt to leave at this point. As a further indication of our honesty, despite the fact that we carried no I.D., we gave the officers our correct names and addresses upon request. Stupid perhaps — but honest.

Upon giving our names to the officer, we asked what would be done with this information. He replied rather offhandedly that we might receive a summons for underage drinking. I immediately informed the officer that I was not drinking, but he paid no attention. At no time did the officers see us in possession of alcohol, nor did they give us breathalyzer tests.

In the ensuing days, we pretty much laughed off the incident — until the citations were received.

Judge Pomante is obviously making examples of us despite our innocence. The gathering I attended was not as he suggested "a wild party." The judge, in his infinite wisdom, stated, "College is so expensive, I don't have to tell you. Study. Get good grades." Sir, as an honors student carrying 20 credits and holding a part-time job, yet still earning a 3.4 cum. I know what it's like to "work hard." Yet like everyone else, I need to relax sometimes. I feel that this situation has only served to create multiple problems for those individuals charged and will have no lasting effect on the Villanova student population as a whole. Equally as traumatic as the fine is the anxiety which we are now facing.

As for the respective presidents of Zeta Psi and Alpha Chi Omega, I suggest that rather than being "upset and disturbed" by the articles in the March 16 issue of the Villanovan, you sit back and say a prayer of thanks that you too are not being made innocent victims.

Yes, Judge Pomante, we realize how expensive college is; we don't have $345 (not to mention 5 cents).

Election Supplement '84

Candidates: Issues and Ideas

the Villanovan

Presidential Timber. . .

Mike Ryan

What makes a person qualified to be student body president?

EXPERIENCE: Currently I am serving as Commerce & Finance Senator and last year I served as Vice President of Student Government. I have also been a member of such committees as the University Senate Planning & Priorities Committee, the University Senate Rank & Tenure Committee, the University Senate Executive Committee and the Residence Hall Planning Committee.

DEDICATION: Last year I worked with the Student Government Committee to Reinstate Football. This year I fought successfully to keep minuses out of our grading system and for the implementation of a fall break.

ABILITY: Over the past two years, I have worked to make changes which benefit the students. I have contributed to such projects as the South Campus drainage problem and the extension of library hours.

But what do all of these examples from the past say about the future of Villanova? They show that I am the most qualified person to be student body president. My experience and dedication have shown that I have the ability to work effectively for you.

There is a need for Student Government to become more involved in the everyday problems that students face. I would work to facilitate this change and to create stronger, more positive communication among students, faculty and administrators.

So on April 5, VOTE FOR EXPERIENCE, DEDICATION and ABILITY: ELECT MIKE RYAN STUDENT BODY PRESIDENT.

Mark Rupprecht

My name is Mark Rupprecht, and I would like to take some time to tell you why I am seeking the office of student body president. As coordinator of the Student Government Committee to Restore Social Life, I was asked to do a great deal of work for Student Government. When I completed the work, the present government seemed to turn a deaf ear. I would not have been mad if they had given me negative responses, but they gave me no response!

I see this as a waste of valuable time. If nothing else, as student body president, I pledge to be responsive to the needs and concerns of my fellow students.

My next goal would be to bring student government back down to earth. Did you ever try to get information from them on topics such as the commuter busing issue? The current resident has decided all student government meetings are closed to outsiders. It is as if they are dealing with items of national security. It was this same closed door policy which resulted in the demonstration and sit-in last October.

If elected student body president, I would be easily accessible and give freely of my work for the students in order to keep them fully informed of the issues relating to them. In that respect, a vote for Mark Rupprecht, is a vote for you.

Dennis C. McKithen

The responsibility of being student body president requires that person to work for the student body as a whole. I have been asked by different students, "What are you going to do for me?" My answer is that I will be working for ALL the students at Villanova. I will try to reflect your views, while working diligently for policies that will benefit all the students at Villanova.

The student body president should be a person with innovative creative ideas who will seek close students-administration relations. I am confident that, based on an open channel of communication, I will accomplish this important responsibility.

The one thing that I can promise is that I will DO the best job that I can. I would like to take this opportunity to wish the other candidates good luck, and may the best candidate win, which I believe is Dennis C. McKithen.

Thank you, the students of Villanova, for your support in me . . .

Luke Nolan

Villanova's Student Government has gone through many changes over the past three years. I feel it has been in a transitional stage where the students' voice, in administrative decisions, is of increasing importance. I sincerely believe that the students should have an operative role in this institution. We should take an active position in the community as well as the classroom. Input is needed from all students, residents as well as commuters. I am not willing to settle for "NO" as the absolute answer to the students' request on the administration. As the elected representative of the students, I will pose the question, "Why not?"

To do this requires collective association from all parts of the student body. I propose to initiate the Villanova Association of Students (V.A.S.). This association will cause a shift from the present disjointed structure to a unified incorporation of the major student groups. A Student Forum would assemble each month to discuss the issues that are up for vote in the Senate. Representatives from each group would communicate their sentence to the student Senators.

I believe that V.A.S. is one way you as a student can have control over change. If one does not vote, he or she forfeits their right to complain. Your vote is significant. It is your chance to voice your opinion now and in the future.

You are the force to elect change. Luke Nolan, student body president.

VOTE ON THURSDAY, APRIL 5

9 A.M.—5 P.M.—VILLANOVA ROOM

(Bring valid picture I.D.—Seniors can vote)

C & F Senatorial Candidates. . .

Stephen J. Hanley

My name is Stephen Hanley, and I am a junior finance major.

On April 5, I will try to win a seat on the C & F Senate. Although I will not make promises concerning specific issues, I will do my best to make Villanova a better place.

The social life at Villanova has encountered many problems in recent years. This, of course, stems from the restrictive alcohol policy. If elected, I will work hard in returning a better social life to the campus. Progress has been made and I intend to build upon this foundation. Another very important issue is the need for more computers.

It is important that all students vote on April 5. Only through the Student Government can changes be made. Thank you for your support.

Joseph F. Conlan

My name is Joe Conlan and I'm running for Senator of the College of Commerce and Finance. There are problems that do exist on this campus and I feel that I'm the person who will draw attention to and provide possible solutions for these problems.

My main goal, as Senator, will be to promote a more "spirited" university atmosphere. The kind of spirit that is, initially, felt at Orientation, heard at basketball games, seen at "Balloon Day" and is taken home on vacations. I'm talking about more student involvement, parties on campus and creation of new spirit events so that students can get together in the spirit of Villanova.

So, vote for me, Joe Conlan, for C & F Senator, to spark the flame of Villanova's spirit.

Ed Walton

A popular commercial heard this year is "Where's the beef?" I believe that students are asking this question about Student Government. We feel the need for action, and a strong commitment to work for realistic goals, not vague, unfulfilled campaign promises. So often in my two years at Villanova I have heard the complaint "What is Student Government doing for us?" I will not make promises I cannot keep but will give my best effort in representing and communicating your needs and ideas to the Administration.

We the students are looking for a change, and I believe I can provide it. So on April 5, I ask your support in order to bring about new, "substantial" leadership in our cause for change.

Vote Ed Walton for C&F Senator.

David Steele

My name is Dave Steele, and I'm a sophomore marketing major.

Many of us may be overwhelmed by the decisions we are faced with in the next few weeks. Our first priorities may be choosing housing for next year, summer jobs or class schedules. The upcoming student government elections may not be at the top of our lists, but it is a matter which should be given consideration.

I am a candidate for Commerce and Finance senator. My main goal as a senator will be to bring Villanova together. I know that it is my responsibility to portray the ideas of my fellow students, and exhibit them to the student government. On April 5, we have the opportunity to make Villanova University work for us the "new student generation." Vote Dave Steele, C&F Senator.

Tim Hanlon

Action that's what the student body wants and what I have to offer as Senator of Commerce & Finance. My two years at Villanova have given me knowledge and motivation needed in addressing university issues. I'm dedicated to Villanova and see this position as an opportunity to be directly involved in bringing the Villanova community closer together.

I possess a well-rounded view of Villanova from my experiences in staff positions on the Villanovan and The Villanova Union, as well as participation and involvement in R.S.A. activities, Gamma Phi, Accounting Society, S.B.D.C., Alpha Phi Delta and the Basketball Club.

I am well prepared and capable of handling required responsibilities, and ensure that students will be represented fairly and not let down.

Mark T. Elia

Instead of mentioning the relevant issues which we are all aware of, I am going to inform you why I am the best choice for Commerce and Finance Senator. I am an outgoing individual who achieves goals with great enthusiasm, organization and perseverance. Anyone can make these claims, but my successful involvement at Villanova supports them. As a night and weekend manager of the Connelly Center, president of the Men's Rugby Club, fund-raising chairman of my fraternity and a past orientation counselor, I can honestly say I've devoted many hours representing my school. Now it is your turn. Elect me and I will promise to put my talents and efforts toward making the student body's voice be heard. Thank you.

Tom DeVita

Candidates have often used this space to make meaningless campaign promises. Proposing great changes is unrealistic. As a candidate for C&F Senator, I can promise you that I will work to the best of my ability to represent you, the students.

I am currently a junior majoring in Finance and Accounting, and an active member of the Finance and Accounting Societies, Basketball Club and Gamma Phi. During this past year I was appointed to the University Senate Budget Committee. As a member of the committee I gained the necessary experience and knowledge to be a responsible and effective Senator.

On April 5, please vote Tom DeVita for C&F Senator. Thank you.

David Kniffin

A college should be like a small community. Here at Villanova, we have a problem of achieving that. We have one problem of not enough housing, which is a serious problem to unity. The commuters already feel a position of being outside the community. Another problem is the separation of colleges.

This is where I hope the Senate comes into play, trying to create unity. This is where I intend to concentrate, if elected, not only focusing on uniting C&F, but the whole university. Then, as one, we may be able to close the gap between the students and the administration on academic and social issues. But the only way this can be achieved is through unity.

Arts Senatorial Candidates. . .

Michael Mirabelli

When confronted with issues I pride myself in rejecting complacency and striking for responsible and pragmatic solutions. I have a strong desire to serve and represent you, the Commerce and Finance student.

This desire is coupled with my respect and sensitivity to the viewpoints of all who are involved in the formation of policy here at Villanova University.

My ambition is not born of selfishness; rather, it is one of my strong commitments for Villanova University to fulfill its great potential.

I stress to you my sincere and limitless dedication, and I hope you give me this chance. Make your vote count; vote for me, Michael Mirabelli, for C&F Senate.

Nancy Sue Smith

WHAT C&F NEEDS IS A COMMUNICATION NETWORK! As a C&F student, I have been actively involved in the Gamma Phi Honor society, The Finance Society, and a National Sorority. If elected I would address the issue of extending hours in Bartley's library and the computer center. This is especially vital for the working student who needs use of these facilities on the weekend. A central activities board in Bartley is vital for notification of group meetings and other business activities. This would reduce the need for flyers posted in every classroom and hallway. This would provide a communications system which is much needed in a rapidly growing program such as ours. I would like to play a vital role in this communication network as your senator.

Suzanne Mitchell

I'm Sue Mitchell and I'm looking forward to representing you next year as Senate representative for the College of Commerce and Finance. I believe that effective student government will play a key role in improving student life and that C&F resources need to be used more efficiently. The hours in Bartley Library and Computer Room need to be extended. The classes necessary for a solid academic background must become available to everyone. If elected, I will do my very best — through hard work and commitment — to see that student government is effective and your interests are well represented.

My campus involvement has included Delta Delta Delta, the Blue Key Society, and the Finance Society. I have held various positions of responsibility within these organizations. Elect Sue Mitchell for responsible, effective student

John M. Burgess

Instead of listing my every accomplishment from the Cub Scouts to the present and putting down every important "think" I want to do while in office, I would like to tell you what I will do while in office. I will initiate a program whereby the University bookstore will buy back books that are in good condition. I will submit a proposal to change the present meal system to a meal by meal basis rather than the one we have now. And if the University can spend all of this "money" on a new field house, they can improve the quality of the classrooms in Bartley. I will have air conditioners installed in all the classrooms along Ithan Avenue.

Doug McKeever

As you know, my name is Doug McKeever, and I am seeking the office of Arts Senator. During the time I have spent at Villanova University, I have lived both off-campus and on-campus. These two experiences have allowed me the opportunity to understand the needs and problems of both off-campus and on-campus residents.

During the time that I was an off-campus resident, I served as Commuter Concerns Chairman for the Association of Commuting Students. A position which not only gave me exposure to many of the problems of off-campus students, but the ability to do something about them.

I'm asking you to vote for me because I want to get things done, and because I have the experience to represent my fellow Arts students.

David Thieman

My name is Dave Thieman, and I am running for the office of Arts Senator. I cannot promise to accomplish a single goal, nor can any other candidate. What I can promise is to serve as an effective liaison between students and the administration.

Many questions arise concerning academic and administrative policy. As senator, I would hope to be able to answer these questions, and where disagreements arise, I would propose and work out viable solutions from the student point of view.

Most importantly, I hope to make student government a highly visible organization, thereby making it more effective. To do so I and the other candidates need your support. Come out and vote on April 5.

John Hickey

Hi. My name is John Hickey and I am running for the office of Science Senator. In my three years at Villanova, I have prided myself in getting involved, because I believe that through participation, progress can be made. I am running for this position because I know I can make a difference. I possess qualities that would be great assets to our Student Body Government. I am enthusiastic and motivated, and would cooperate and work hard to achieve the desired goals of the student body of Villanova.

Nursing Senator Janine M. Alfano

In addition to experience, there are two essential ingredients necessary when holding a governmental position. These ingredients are commitment and dedication. I, Janine Alfano, the present nursing senator, feel that I possess both these qualities.

During the past year, I have gained valuable experience participating as your senator. With my participation and contributions, I have assisted student government in accomplishing what it has set out to do. One project which I am responsible for is the initiation of a Student Bus Service. I am proud of the accomplishment of having this service approved for a trial period.

This project is an example of the commitment and dedication which I display with every project I am involved in.

University College John McGee

My name is John McGee. I am a junior University College student studying Business Administration. I am also the current University College Senator. My involvement with the University Senate places me far above all other candidates for this position. Prior to my present term, the University College has had poor, if any, representation in the Senate. The University College is a large and active part of Villanova and it needs a person to convey this to the Senate. I am very prepared, excited and determined to see that this objective is met. I am honored to represent the University College in the Senate now, and would be grateful for the opportunity to continue my job.

Engineering Jimmy Bergin

A senator's sole purpose is good representation of the student's ideas. What is essential is communication with the students, combined with the determination to present their ideas, unintimidated in the face of the administration. I have the ability and the desire to do this.

Some of my specific objectives are the reevaluation of the work load in one credit labs and membership on the Student Life Subcommittee (at this point, nothing deserves higher priority).

Engineering is not easy; and we are all in it together. Seeing the same faces in class everyday, we are a small enough group so that real unity is possible. As the spokesperson of this group, I would hope to supply the engineers with both academic and social unity.

Local Philly Bands Will Die If. . .

By ED De MARCO

The local music scene in Philadelphia is dying as the local bands are being successfully ignored by so called progressive rock stations such as WMMR and WYSP.

Two years ago, the local music scene was thriving as the Hooters, Robert Hazard and the Heroes and the A's were receiving airplay. However, both WMMR and WYSP abandonned their adventuresome programming in favor of a top 40 rock format. The airwaves are now being permeated by Journey, .38 Special, Van Halen and Cyndi Lauper.

Granted, Van Halen's "Jump" is a good song, but one can only take so much of a good thing. Cyndi Lauper, the former lead singer of Blue Angel, has two big hits in "Girls Just Want to Have Fun" and "Time After Time." The radio stations are proud to point out the fact that both of these songs were written by members of the Philadelphia music community. "Girls Just Want To Have Fun" was written by Hazard, and Rob Hyman of the Hooters composed "Time After Time." The fact that Hazard and Hyman were each able to score a national hit should prompt their hometown radio stations to play their own material. However, Hazard's new LP has received sparse air play and Hyman's band, the Hooters, is faring only slightly better with their album, "Amore."

In an interview with the Philadelphia Inquirer, Stephen Starr, president of Ripley Enterprises, which operates the Ripley Music Hall, credits the deterioration of the local music scene to the radio stations. Starr said, "locak bands like the Hooters, Beru Revu, Pretty Poison — these bands are only going to develop followings if we can get exposure on the radio. But now all the radio stations are basically just playing the hits."

The best of the local bands, the Alan Mann Band, is going virtually unnoticed by the local FM stations and the record buying public. Their latest EP, "White Lies," released by A&R Records six months ago, has been totally ignored by Philadelphia radio. It features the brawling, bluesy style reminiscent of the Animals or Southside Johnny minus the horns.

By far, the strongest cut on "White Lies" is "Tell Me," which features a solid rhythm section led by George Manney on drums and Bobby Philadelphia on bass. The song features a pleading, passionate vocal performance by Mann which is augmented by a traditional rock 'n roll piano riff by guest keyboard player Fred Wackenhut. Allen James' soaring guitar solo adds the final electrifying touch to this masterpiece.

"I Don't Understand You" is a satirical song about relationships that sour. The lyrical talents of Alan Mann are evident in the chorus: "Friends are rare and you're living proof.' Once again, Manney and Philadelphia provide a solid backbeat, but it is James' intricate lattice on lead guitar that makes this song click.

The Alan Mann Band

The remaining three songs on "White Lies" are also strong candidates for airplay. "Lovers" is a soft ballad permeated by a three-part vocal harmony consisting of Mann and backup singers Janet Darlington and Robin Traetta. "The Bridge" is a raunchy rocker which displays the individual talents of the band members. The fifth and final track, "Fear of Heights," is a new wave rocker similar to Graham Parker's best work.

So what's new for the Alan Mann Band? According to Mann, the band is undergoing a transition period. Mann is auditioning new members for his band, including a sax player. Drummer George Manney is staying on with the band and keyboard man Fred Wackenhut is now a full time member of the band.

Mann will also be taking his band into the recording studio within the next few months. When asked to describe his music, Mann called it, "short stories set to a rock 'n roll beat."

Later in our conversation, Mann expounded upon the state of local music in Philadelphia. He said that for a band to succeed on the local level, they must draw 400 or more people. He said that this feat is nearly impossible without support from the radio stations. "The radio stations cater to the corporate bands, which squeezes out the bands on independent labels," Mann said. He also noted that a band must be more selective in choosing club dates so that they can continue to perform live. The Alan Mann Band will be playing at La Salle College on April 23, as well as several other unannounced local dates.

In addition to other big name acts such as the Alan Mann Band and the Hooters, there are many lesser known bands deserving of support. One of these bands is Retrospect, which is composed of four Villanova students. Retrospect member Mark Gatti calls their music "frat rock," which is influenced by the likes of Chuck Berry.

Hampshire Hotel Checks Out

By TOM BARAN

The movie, "The Hotel New Hampshire," is one that should be avoided at all costs. If the movie does contain a plot, it is not easily found. The movie is full of so many characters and their problems that the viewer will have trouble following what happens, if he can stay awake.

The movie focuses on the Berry family. The father, Win Berry (played by Beau Bridges), is a teacher who has a dream of owning his own hotel. He has three children that the movie focuses on (played by Jodie Foster, Rob Lowe, and Paul McCrane). Each of the Berry children has his own problems. The oldest brother, Frank (McCrane), is a homosexual; Fran (Foster) is obsessed with revenge against the boy who raped her, and John (Lowe) is in love with his sister. There are two other children in the Berry family, Lily, who is a ten-year-old writer, and Egg, their son who is killed in a plane crash along with his mother.

The Berry Family in 'The Hotel New Hampshire.'

The movie starts off badly and continues downhill from there. The two best parts of the movie are the family dog and the one family dispute. The dog, Sorrow, had a case of excessive flatulence, and consequently made the first part of the movie seem like "The Benny Hill Show." Unfortunately, the stupid comedy ends when the dog dies. The only other funny scene in the movie is the family dispute in which the whole family ends up in a brawl underneath the dining room table. Once again what makes this scene funny is that even though it's stupid, the rest of the movie is horrible.

What this movie can be described as is a plotless disaster. At first the movie looks as if it might be the story of a family struggling to find its identity. But as the movie continues not only do the characters not find any identity but the viewer loses the entire meaning of the movie, that is, assuming that there is one.

All in all "The Hotel New Hampshire" is a flop and a major let down. The movie contained excellent actors thrust into poor roles and fine film work lost in the flow of too many characters and stupid lines. The story this movie was based on should have stayed a book and saved moviegoers the pain of sitting through two hours of garbage.

'Parting Should Be Painless'

By BOB SMITH

With the release of "Parting Should Be Painless," Roger Daltrey has become the first member of The Who to release a solo LP since the band's official breakup last December. "Parting Should Be Painless" is the most recent in a series of solo albums released by members of recently disbanded supergroups (Robert Plant of Led Zeppelin, David Gilmour of Pink Floyd) who have recently launched solo careers.

As solo albums go, "Parting . . ." is an excellent release. Daltrey manages to avoid the temptations of recording another dull, heavy-metal/hard rock LP, as was the case on his earlier solo outings, and of recording another album rife with weak ballads.

The songwriting is sharp, as is the instrumental backing provided by Daltrey's band. "Parting's" sound is not as hard as that of the Who's work, but it does rock. The band, highlighted by Alan Schwartzburg's imaginative drumming, keeps the material from drifting into the easy-listening field traversed by Paul McCartney. For the most part, guitars serve an accompanying rather than a dominating role. Saxophones stand out on a few tracks, while synthesizers are in evidence in the backing of the rhythms of several songs.

Daltrey's New Solo

One of the major factors in "Parting's" success is the quality of the song-writing. The material comes from a variety of sources: Eurythmics' Annie Lennox and Dave Stewart, Roxy Music's Bryan Ferry and Nicky Chinn of Sweet. Daltrey responds to the combination of quality songwriting and strong instrumental backing by turning in some impressive vocals.

"Is There Anybody Out There" and "Somebody Told Me" are on the same level as The Who's best work. On the former cut, Daltrey starts out slow, almost in a whisper, then builds to a rising crescendo, keeping just ahead of the band but not leaving them behind. "Somebody Told Me" is straight-out rock and roll. One of the record's few guitar-dominated rockers, "Somebody Told Me" deals with the time-worn topic of dumping a two-timer; Daltrey's excellent vocals bring the song above the realm of the ordinary. Other topics as diverse as determination ("Looking For You," "One Day") and dissolution ("Parting Would Be Painless," an apt title in the face of the recent Who breakup) are dealt with on the album.

Daltrey's future as a solo artist is still somewhat up in the air. He has been in some demand as an actor, and has expressed great interest in this field. It appears that his screen activities will somewhat curtail his recording and touring activities. As of yet, he has not announced any plans to tour in the near future. However, as long as he upholds the quality revealed on "Parting Should Be Painless," Daltrey will continue to satisfy his fans.

'Heartbeat City' is Beat

The Cars

The trademark of the band, has decided to alter the group's sound by fattening it, and making it by using the talents of keyboard wizard, Greg Hawkes. When he succeeds, the song often achieves a startling breadth, depth and pulsing life which is a far cry from the cold, technical efficiency of most synthesizer-oriented bands. When he fails, the song sounds mechanical and robotic, becoming an exercise in electronic gadgetry.

"Looking For Love," "Heartbeat City" (both which are sung by Ocasek) and "Drive" (sung by bassist Ben Orr) are successes. "Heartbeat City" is clearly the best track on the album. Drummer David Robinson pounds out a steady beat while Hawke's keyboards create a lush foreground of electronic music. This provides the perfect foil for guitarist Elliot Easton's sharp staccato solos, and the perfect complement to Ocasek's deep, breathless singing, and the band's high ethereal backing vocals. "Stranger Eyes," on the other hand, is a forced effort: repetitive, cold and heartless, an example of synth-pop at its worst.

Ironically, the cuts getting the most airplay ("Magic," "Hello Again" and "You Might Think") are not representative of the album, and are more similar in style to the songs on the group's last work, "Shake It Up." Although they are not as ambitious as some of the other tracks on the album, they are nevertheless good pop songs.

The Cars, who burst on the scene five years ago as one of the leading new wave bands, have not lived up to the vast potential evidenced on their classic self-titled debut album and their strong follow-up effort "Candy-O." However, "Heartbeat City" is a step in the right direction, and hopefully the first of many steps which will bring this talented group of musicians to the forefront of American music in the future.

Benjamin Wins His 'Race'

By MIKE NOONE

At first glance, "Racing with the Moon," the new movie starring Sean Penn, Elizabeth McGovern and Nicolas Cage, looks like another poorly-made exploitation of "growing up in America." But, unlike such disasters as "Porky's," with its quasi-demented maniac characters, "Racing with the Moon" offers an intelligent and poignant romantic vision of adolescence.

The story is set in 1945, in a small coastal town in northern California. Hopper (played by Penn) and Nicky (played by Cage) are high school friends who have joined up to serve with the Marines. Throughout the movie we see the changes and growth they experience in the last six weeks before shipping out.

The movie offers no great shocks or revelations, but is simply a low key, tender romantic comedy which examines the strength of love and friendship. Hopper is a typical small-town boy who falls head-over-heels in love with Caddie, whose beautiful awkwardness is perfectly protrayed by McGovern. Meanwhile Nicky tries to soak in as much action as he can before leaving to crush "Japs."

After receiving critical acclaim for directing Peter O'Toole in "My Favorite Year," Richard Benjamin has now tried his hand at a more sensitive and potentially difficult picture. Once again, he has achieved success. Benjamin shows an uncanny amount of restraint for such an inexperienced director. There is great potential for the film to become mushy or overbearing, yet through Benjamin's control the film never loses its appeal. He allows his actors to become human and easily identifiable, rather than just prefabricated characterizations. The movie has a clever plot heightened by suspense, an accelerated pace and excellent acting. All these elements come together to form a perfect whole, with no loose ends or lost ideas.

Benjamin's New Success Races

The acting in the film is near perfect. After such one-sided roles as the class clown in "Fast Times at Ridgemont High," and the tough guy in "Bad Boys," Sean Penn is now given the opportunity to expand his acting talent by portraying a well-rounded character with equally more depth. This he does magnificently. Penn has been compared to James Dean, but in fact he has much more talent.

His counterpart, Nicky, is portrayed superbly by Cage, who made his debut in the low-key comedy "Valley Girls." He accurately portrays the self-destructive Nicky as he changes from a self-centered shallow teenager to a moire compassionate young man. Yet he never loses his rough edge and impulsiveness which makes him so appealing. Cage shows the rare potential to become a great tragic actor.

One of the most memorable scenes occurs when Nicky and Hopper try to swindle some sailors in a game of pool. This scene encompasses the brilliance of the film in its magnetic appeal. There are some scenes in which Benjamin is sending out a message, but one has to look hard. Perhaps the film does not go far enough in its exploration of such themes as the war and its effect on the small town. But Benjamin has wisely avoided creating an overbearing, moralizing film. Rather he cleverly disguises simple messages throughout, rather than forcing any on his audience.

Sean Pen (left) tries to keep his balance at the local skating rink in Paramount Pictures' "Racing With the Moon," a romantic comedy set in the 1940 s.

"Racing with the Moon," is one of those films which deserves much success. The movie is pleasant and charming, with a tender romance which is wonderfully entertaining. It offers entertainment to all age groups and brings the hope to the movie industry that adolesence can be examined without vulgarity or sexual exploitation.

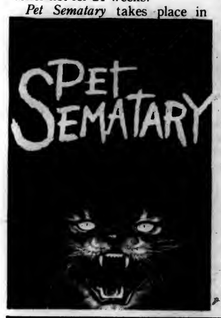
King's New Pet . . . Sematary

By RON GAHAGAN

Few things are certain in life (i.e. death and taxes), and now it appears as if there is another, a Stephen King book on the best seller list. Ever since the release of Carrie, horror readers have been religiously devouring King's novels. The latest of these is Pet Sematary, which has been on the best seller list for 21 weeks.



Pet Sematary takes place in Maine, as most of King's stories do, for that is where King now lives and has resided most of his life. The plot involves a young doctor, Louis Creed, and his family, who unsuspectingly move into a small town besieged by some ancient demonic power.

Louis becomes aware of this power through his genial and fatherlike neighbor, Jud Crandall. Through what at first is innocent conversation, Louis discovers that there is a little pet graveyard behind his house which has somehow earned the respect of the small Maine town. This is proved rather easily by the way the children strangely take care of the cemetery. The same kids who refuse to pick up a rake for their dad take almost professional care of the creepy place out in the woods.

The power strikes at home soon enough when the family's pet cat, Winston Churchill, attains a permanent putrid smell and when not too busy sleeping, disembowels some "dangerous" robins. The reader finds himself anticipating what kind of thing it is that can have such an effect, and possibly what it could do to a human.

Through the mixture of horror and humor which King so effectively blends, the reader finds himself laughing at the most ludicrous times. For example, Louis finds himself out in the forest in the middle of the night doing something hideous and he humourlessly tries to convince himself that he has to be in a dream: "If I was awake, he thought, I'd no more head up that deadfall [dangerous pile of blown over trees] than I'd get drunk and go skydiving. But I'm going to do it. I really think I am. So . . . I must be dreaming. Right?"

Though the book is very entertaining, King implies a message which is rather common in his other works: the inability of people to accept what they must and ignore it instead of confronting it, is what leads to their downfall. In Pet Semaiary, what Louis and his wife refused to acknowledge is the natural place of death in life (theirs in particular), and this leads to their terrifying demise.

King states that this novel was

Rockwell . . . He Rocks Well

By MIKE MATHIS

"Somebody's Watching Me," the album and current number two single by an artist named Rockwell, has opened the door for a musician whose talents will be his claim to fame, not his personal background.

Rockwell is in reality Berry Gordy's fourth son (Gordy is the president of Motown Records). This critic wondered how a new artist such as Rockwell could get both Michael and Jermaine Jackson to provide backup vocals on his first album. Obviously, the Jacksons are synomymous with Motown, and it is only fitting that some of Motown's best performers aid Rockwell in producing a marketable product.

However, Rockwell proves that he does not need the help of the Jacksons to enhance his recordings. Rockwell is a multi-faceted musician; he plays both the synthesizer and percussion with an array of studio musicians. Regretably, the current popularity of Michael Jackson alone is propelling both the album and the single high upon the charts, eclipsing Rockwell's true musical talent.

Included on the album is a unique cover version of the Beatles' "Taxman." Complete with mellow-funk rhythm and earthy vocals, "Taxman" is a prime example of Rockwell's ability to blend current dance rhythms with the down-to-earth blues that comprise both soul and rhythm and blues.

Unlike many Motown performers, who rely on other songwriters for their material, Rockwell contributes a great deal of his songwriting skills on the album. Two songs were written solely by Rockwell and the remainder of the album's eight songs were all penned in part by Rockwell, except, of course, "Taxman."

Rockwell

Rockwell's songwriting/performing skills are vast and varied. He can deliver strong vocal punches ("Foreign Country," "Wasting Away"), earthy soul numbers ("Taxman"), catchy pop tunes ("Somebody's Watching Me") and tearful love songs ("Knife"). His versatility as a musician is apparent in all of these songs, especially when he can successfully make the transition from a funky dance song to an emotionally moving slow song.

Rockwell's talents are diverse enough that he will make a name for himself in the music world.

Pet Sematary Howls

his most difficult to complete because even he, the master of horror, was too scared to continue writing at times. Unfortunately, I found the terror in Pet Sematary to run dry a little too soon. This is rare for King, who usually can prolong the terror of a story over many pages, yet the 373 pages in "Sematary" involved too much detail at certain points in the story.

This, however, does not in the least take the pleasure out of the book, for King makes the reader feel as if he knows the characters and thus one becomes almost attached to them. This leaves the reader too engrossed to let the unnecessary details interrupt the affect of the enticing horror. Hopefully, Pet Sematary will be out in paperback by summer, for this book will make excellent, as well as terrifying, summer reading.

Nick's Knacks

The Tower Perks Up

By NICK ANASTASIO

The Tower Theatre has sprung to life. This coming week will see two concerts at the Tower, the Eurythmics tomorrow and John Cougar Mellencamp next Friday. But that's nothing compared to the eight day stretch from April 12 to April 29. In those eight days, the Tower will be the scene of six concerts: Elvis Costello's one-man show on the 12th, George Clinton on the 14th, the Pretenders on the 16th, 17th, and 18th, and Thomas Dolby on the 19th. And to top if all off, Laurie Anderson will be there on April 27.

So why all the fuss? Well, the people who happen to live near the Tower have been complaining for years about the noise and the number of people roaming around after concerts. The Tower is located in Upper Darby, two blocks from the Septa terminal, but also two blocks from a large residential section. A few years ago, the residents of Upper Darby tried unsuccessfully to close the Tower completely, but were able to restrict it to about one concert a month.

Over the past few months, the Tower had started to slowly increase the number of concert bookings. Now the dam has burst. For music lovers, this is very, very good news, because the Tower has no equal in terms of acoustics. Visually, only the last few rows of the upper balcony require binoculars. Also, the size of the Tower (seating capacity: 3000) helps create a cozy, intimate atmosphere.

Of course, the reason for the Tower's resurgence could lie in the fact that the Spectrum, the "King of Concerts," has been booked up solidly by both the 76ers and the Flyers. Both teams start their playoffs in April (the Flyers start April 4, the 76ers start in the middle of the month), and since the exact dates of their home playoff games are not yet known, they need the Spectrum open for them. Considering the rents that these two teams pay the Spectrum, it is easy to see why they are favored customers.

So while the nearby residents of the Tower put up with a little extra noise for a few weeks, the concert goers can enjoy some fine music in a comfortable setting.

If you read the review of Roger Daltrey's new album on Page 16, then you probably saw the brief reference to the break-up of Pink Floyd. If not, then you just heard now. Yes, that's right, after more than 15 years of great music (not to mention thought-provoking lyrics), the band that gave us such classic albums as "Dark Side of the Moon" and "The Wall" has called it quits. This was obviously planned for some time, since their last album, "The Final Cut," could not have been more aptly titled.

And now for something completely different: ballet. The Pennsylvania Ballet is at the Shubert Theatre for Dance Festival 84. For the next 10 nights (excluding Mondays), the Shubert will be a hotbed of culture. On the program are four performances: "Dvorak: The Slavonic Dances," featuring ballet interpretations of Dvorak's music by Richard Tanner (this is a world premiere); "Swan Lake, Act II"; "Pas De Deux (Steps of Two)" from "Don Quixote;" and a ballet interpretation of "Western Symphony," choreographed by George Balachine.

The Pennsylvania Ballet is offering college students a half-price discount on tickets. To get the discounts, students must bring their valid ID cards to the Shubert Theatre box office at least 30 minutes before showtime.

Women's Day at Villanova
Villanova Women in the 80's

APRIL 7, 1984

The Villanova General Alumni Association in cooperation with the office of Adult Services of the University College will conduct a special "Alumnae Day" on the Villanova Campus on April 7, 1984. Students, faculty, administrators and alumnae are cordially invited.

This timely seminar is carefully designed to help you assess your potential — take advantage of new trends —and obtain valuable insight into the human and economic factors affecting today's women.

The areas covered the panelists will include changing careers for women—educational choices—job search strategies and techniques—administrative skills—historical perspectives for women—specialized skills—improving adminstrative ability—and demonstrating how to accept professional responsibility.

You will be able to share in the experiences of the panelists, each an expert in their profession. A question and answer period will follow each talk; and you will have an opportunity to expand your insights during the cocktail reception at the end of the day. Looking forward to seeing you on the seventh. All the day's activities will take place on the Villanova Campus in the Connelly Center.

Here and There

Not again. Don't tell me another Atlantic Coast Conference team is going to become the cinderella story of the NCAA's. Yes Virginia, there is a Santa Claus. Isn't it ironic that Virginia, with Ralph Sampson, could not make the Final Four any of the four years he was there? And now the team no one gave a chance to at the beginning of the year is only two wins away from the NCAA Championship. Could it be three in a row for the ACC? Probably not. But you've got to wonder about the drinking water down there.

Let's hear it for those college basketball teams with original nicknames. I'm rooting next year for the Richmond Spiders, the Evansville Purple Aces, the Oregon Ducks, the St. Louis Billikens, the South Illinois Salukis, the Tennessee Moccasins, the Texas Christian Horned Frogs the Anteaters of Cal-Irvine, and last but not least, the Fighting Camels of Campbell.

Is anyone beginning to check out the USFL on television? Much better talent there than what they started with last year. Hey, I think I see a little sweat on Pete Rozelle's brow. Better think of something quick, guys. The USFL is picking off first rounders faster than Glenn's campaign went downhill. Looks like the USFL has got "The Right Stuff." Sorry for that one. Forty million to play quarterback, huh? I'll see you later, I got to go loosen my arm.

This week's Clubber Lang "I have no excuse for living" award goes to Michael Graham, Georgetown's talented freshman forward who is a prime example as to why the Hoya's team is labeled the bad boys of basketball. No reason, Mikey, to run into Cedric Toney like that in the Dayton-Georgetown game.

Major League Baseball is less than a week away, and here is another chance to ruin my name. Oh, it's already been ruined. Well, here goes. Let's hear it for division winners Baltimore, Texas, San Diego and Philadelphia. The Mets? Gimme a break, guys. Biggest flop of the year? Peter Rose. Listen Pete, you're old, you're overweight, you can't run. Don't become the next Muhammed Ali. Biggest surprise? The Rangers. Don't look a me like that.

Tennis Splits Pair

By DAVID ERRICO

The Villanova men's tennis team started off their season with a victory over King's College on Saturday. Only one week into the season, the Cats have already had three rainouts. Unfortunately, the team had to face Haverford on Monday and they were soundly beaten by 9-0.

Against King's, winning in the singles for the Cats were Larry Gallen, Bill Harahan and Mike Parks.

In the doubles competition, Villanova rose to the occasion to sweep three matches. The team of Gallen and Lee had a difficult time disposing their opponent, 7-5 and 6-4. Harahan and Parks had to go to three sets to gain their win. Pete Russell and Scott Miller finished off Kings with wins of 6-4 and 6-1.

Most pleased with the team's performance was Coach Robert Langran: "It was a good opener for the team. It's always an advantage to start the season with a victory. Our one, two and four players had an excellent day winning both their singles and doubles."

Against Haverford the Cats were not so fortunate. Haverford rolled to an impressive 9-0 shutout. Coach Langran commented, "Playing against Haverford, we did a lot better than the score indicates. The first five singles players were very competitive. In the doubles, we used substitute players who, against the Haverford regulars, did excellent in their efforts."

Corbin has played well also, batting .344 and slugging six doubles. Paparella and Kane have been consistent, averaging .254 and .277 respectively. As a team, however, Villanova is only hitting .286.

Another telling factor in the Main Liner's record is their runs-per-game average. Villanova averages 4.87 a game, while their opponents score 7.43.

The Villanova nine have lost four games this season by a margin of one run, two games by a two-run margin, and two games by three runs. The Wildcats began the 1984 campaign by losing their first five, then won their first in Florida, defeating arch-rival St. Joseph's. Villanova then lost their next six, before winning two straight at LaSalle and Philadelphia Textile. However, Villanova then lost the next four, and has yet to win a game at its home field in the 1984 campaign.

But today is the 30th of March, and April's arrival Sunday brings with it the promise of spring. And for Villanova's baseball team, April cannot come soon enough.

Laxmen 2-1 for Season

By WENDY WISE

The men's lacrosse team split last Wednesday, winning against Michigan State at home, but losing to Boston College away Saturday night. These games leave their record at 2-1.

The March 21 encounter brought the Michigan State laxmen far from the Great Lakes area, to face the well-prepared Wildcats. Faithful fans, braving the chilly wind and falling temperatures as the sun began to set, saw an intense offensive game by Villanova, winning the contest, 13-4. The first quarter proved to be the most productive with six Villanova goals, two a piece by seniors Tom Gravina and Ken Crowley.

Michigan was scoreless the second quarter, giving Villanova the lead, soon to be a permanent one, at halftime, 9-1. The Cats dominated the second half, scoring three more goals to Michigan's two. Villanova's goalie, junior Drew Cunningham, recorded eleven saves for the day, posting a 73.5 percentage. Junior John Haggarty helped the Cats seal the victory, scoring three goals.

Saturday, the Cats traveled to Boston to play Boston College, but it was a long ride home, as they succumbed to a tough Eagle team, 6-3. Villanova came on strong and kept pace with B.C. the first half, scoring their only goals — one apiece for juniors Haggerty, Keith Connors and senior Vinny Del-gatto. The second half proved to be the fateful one, as B.C. scored three unanswered goals to hand Villanova their first loss.

One of the reasons for this loss was the fact that Mike Cortez, a starting attackman, was out for the game due to an operation.

Commenting on the loss, Captain Paul Campanelli stated, "In the first half we took an early lead, 3-1. But, later in the period the penalties really hurt, and we gave the Eagles the opportunity to tie it up in the second half at three."

The second half proved to be mostly a defensive game for the Cats. The ball was in Nova's end of the field for the majority of the half.

"The only opportunities that we had in the second half were mainly unsettled situations which we did not capitalize on," added Campanelli.

"The most outstanding statistic, which sort of reflects our loss, was the fact that we only managed nine shots on goal in the whole game (three of which went in). However, the game was a hard-fought battle on both sides. We felt we were even, if not better, than B.C. and that we should have won."

Referring to the season in general, Campanelli further added, "This is the strongest squad out of the four years that I've been at Villanova. Our second year coach, Randy marks, has disciplined the team to the point where we can go 11-1 this year and this we hope to do. We feel confident that we've gotten the monkey off our backs and that the rest of the season is going to show up in the win column."

Sailors Open Season

By JOHN WIBBELSMAN

The Villanova sailing team opened its spring season last weekend at Annapolis Naval Academy, Md., racing both 420 and laser boats. The team sent eight sailors to the regatta, five of which were freshmen.

Skipper Tim Robinson and crew Jim Hart in the lead in race No. 5 at Annapolis this past weekend.

On Saturday the team raced in sunny weather with only light winds, but on Sunday the wind picked up to about 10 m.p.h. Sailor Bill Brickach felt just how cold the Chesapeake can be, as his boat capsized and he was tossed into 40-degree waters. Fortunately, he was quickly pulled from the water and treated immediately.

Overall, the freshmen did quite well, considering it was their first intercollegiate sailing experience. However, the team's final standing at the end of the regatta was not high. The team has not been able to practice because of the lack of proper boats, but they are looking forward to their next regatta.

Lifters Place Fourth in NCAA's

By AMELIA McGOVERN

Villanova's powerlifting team lifted to a fourth-place finish at the National Collegiate Powerlifting Championships held at Villanova University on March 23 and 24. This is the second year in a row that Villanova has come in fourth place. The team did not do as well as expected, as a result of some unforeseen problems.

A Kutztown powerlifter appeals for divine intervention during the recent powerlifting championships held at Villanova.

The men who qualified from Villanova's men's team and placed in the meet were John Padova in the 114-pound weight class, Ed Dracup in the 123-pound weight class, Dan Wagman in the 181-pound weight class, Brian Nibblelink in the 220-pound weight class and Lee Gallagher in the 242-pound weight class. Captain Pete Anninos and Marty Murphy were disqualified and Rich Nielson did not place.

No women from Villanova competed this year. "There was a dual problem there," explained Coach Joe Slabinski. "There were only five girls on the team to begin with. We were plagued with injuries and my one girl who qualified transferred in December."

"As for the women, it was the largest turnout ever. Fifty-eight women were entered." Nineteen new records were set in the women's division. Louisiana Tech won, followed by Purdue, Temple, Lafayette and the U.S. Military Academy.

Each lifter is allowed three attempts at the squat, bench press and the dead lift. The best of each of the three is totalled and this is the athlete's score.

Padova finished third in the 114-pound weight class. His bench press of 107.5 kilograms was the best in his class. His total was 425.0 kilograms; the winner in the class was 475.0. Three new records were set in this class. First place finisher James Morgan, Eastern Illinois, squated 182.5 kilograms beating out the old record of 162.5 kilograms and totalled 475.0, breaking the old record of 442.5. Second-place finisher Joseph Catalfamo set a new record in the dead lift with a 200 kilogram lift. (The previous mark was 188.5 kilograms).

"John beat the winner last year. The winner came out of nowhere. John did well; he did his best," added Slabinski.

Ed Dracup, in the 123-pound class, placed sixth. "Ed did well, considering he literally started training in November," Slabinski noted.

In the 181-pound weight class, Dan Wagman finished sixth. "Unfortunately he just came to Villanova and he's leaving already. He's transferring to Ursinus. He attempted the national in the bench, and they called it for an infraction"

Brian Nibblelink in the 220-pound class did "very, very well," according to Slabinski, as he placed seventh. "Brian lifted 100 pounds over his best two months ago."

Lee Gallagher, in 242-pound weight class, placed fourth. "Lee is relatively new in the sport. It is very difficult your first time competing in a national meet."

Unfortunately, Saturday was a bad day for Captain Pete Anninos. Anninos, a senior, was disqualified after three tries at the squat. He lost his balance on the first try, cut the second one too high and lost his balance again on the third. Slabinski blames his lack of success on starting at too heavy a weight (651 pounds) and being over-excited. Marty Murphy had the same problem with being disqualified. He, too, could not get one of his squats past the hard national judges.

Temple won the men's championship, followed by Louisiana Tech, Texas A&M, Villanova and Western Illinois.

Last year Villanova put in a bid to have the National Championship here this year. "We, as bidders, had to explain what they planned for the meet in front of the committee. One month after bidding they told us the meet would be held here," Slabinski explained.

Powerlifting has been a sport of excellence at Villanova since the program was formed. Slabinski has attended every National Collegiate Powerlifting Competition since they began in 1969, either as a competitor or a coach. "Villanova has never finished out of the top 10. Only on three occasions have we been out of the top five.

"The crowd at Villanova was the best crowd for a powerlifting championship. The fans really came out and supported the team. I really want to thank them," Slabinski said.

March Miserable for Cats

By JAMES H. DeLORENZO

So far, March has been a cruel month for the Wildcats.

In eight games this past week, Villanova's varsity baseball team won two and lost six. The third month of the year is not yet over, but the Main Liners are 3-13 overall.

Seton Hall was the first opponent Villanova faced on its home field. Prior to that, four games were cancelled due to poor field conditions. The Wildcats had been dormant since returning from Florida on March 10, a long eight days. Their bats remained dormant in the first game of a doubleheader with the Pirates, as they were shut-out, 7-0.

The Blue and White bounced back in the second game, but any rally was cut short when the game was called on account of darkness. Villanova lost, 6-4.

LaSalle's Explorers were the victims of a Villanova sneak attack, however, as Nova scored four runs in the eighth inning to win, 9-5. Junior outfielder Chuck Bruno, shortstop Rick Faggioni and senior co-captain John Corbin each stroked a double in that inning to insure Villanova its second win of the year.

The very next day, the Wildcats slaughtered hapless Philadelphia Textile, 16-6, to make it two wins in a row. Junior third baseman Jerry Holtz paced the Villanova offense, going four-for-four and scoring two runs. Ray Paparella, a senior second baseman, collected four RBI's, while catcher Jim Kane, a sophomore, batted a strong three-for-three.

Tom Gmahle, a righthanded freshman, picked up the win, his first, in six innings of work.

It was another doubleheader which was the Cats undoing, however. On Saturday, Temple trounced the Villanova nine, 10-0 and 18-4. A power shortage was the problem in the first game: the Wildcats just did not hit the ball.

The second game was slightly different. Villanova made contact and scored some runs, but it just was not enough to make any difference. Holtz continued to hit well, batting three-for-four, and driving home two runs on a home run in the seventh inning. The 360-foot shot to right center was Holtz's fourth of the season.

St. Joseph's dealt Villanova their 13th loss of the year Monday, as they defeated the Cats 9-6. A late-inning rally once again came up short; until the seventh inning, the Hawks were owners of a no-hitter. But in the eighth, Villanova touched on the Hawks for four runs, keyed by a three-run homer by Corbin and a solo blast by junior leftfielder Jim White. Corbin drove home two more in the ninth, on a single, but it was too much, too little, too late for a win. Rich Moore took the loss; the junior lefty is 1-3.

Tuesday, the Quakers were not quiet visitors. The University of Pennsylvania put five runs across the plate in the first inning, and three more in the second. Villanova had to play catch-up from that point, but did not quite pull it off. White hit his second solo homer in as many days in the second inning, and Kane sent three runs home on a double in the fourth, along with a homer in the seventh, but Penn still came up winners, 9-7.

The one highlight for the Cats in this long, hard March has been the hitting of Holtz. Since the Seton Hall contest, Holtz has batted 14-38, a strong .350 batting average.

Jerry Holtz

Despite Villanova's baseball team having a rough start, Jerry Holtz a co-captain of this year's squad, has managed to produce some impressive statistics in the early season. Holtz, a junior, has already hit four home runs, driven in nine runs and stolen seven bases. Holtz' power and speed have been invaluable to the team thus far.

Holtz was instrumental in the Cats' victories last week over LaSalle and Textile. In last week's play, Jerry went 12-24 for a .500 average at the plate. In addition he scored eight times, drove in three runs and hit two home runs. Holtz commented, "It was good to get a few wins for our confidence. We have a young team with a lot of talent that should get stronger as the season goes on. We just have to get some momentum going." Villanova's youth is apparent with just one look at the roster, which is composed of four seniors, eight juniors, five sophomores and six freshmen.

Villanova has posted a 2-5 record since coming back from spring training in Florida. Thus far, Holtz has accumulated an outstanding .433 batting average and is only two home runs short of breaking the all-time school record for home runs. This record is currently held by Bill Duryea '81 — who hit 16 home runs while attending Nova.

A starter at Villanova since his freshman year, Holtz has produced some excellent figures: he appeared in all 20 games last year, batted .257 with three doubles and two home runs. As a freshman shortstop, Holtz had his best year to date, batting a healthy .352 and nailing nine home runs, one short of the single-season record. Holtz, however, is reserved when it comes to statistics: "The only statistic that counts is winning. Our goal is to get a winning attitude, because despite our record, this is a very good baseball team."

It wasn't too long ago that the Cats' baseball team was a participant in the ECAC South post-season tournament. In both 1980 and 1981 Villanova won playoff berths for the first time in almost 20 years.

Holtz, a fourth round pick in the 1981 amateur draft, was selected by the Philadelphia Phillies. While at Atlantic City High School, he earned All-State, All-South Jersey, All-County and All-League honors.

Looking at Student Government

Candidates Debate Issues

By PAULA SOLLAMI

A debate among student body presidential candidates was held April 3 in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall. The four candidates — Mike Ryan, Mark Rupprecht, Luke Nolan and Dennis McKithen — were questioned by three representatives of different Villanova organizations.

After a brief introduction by the current Student Body President, Patrick Leahy, the panelists — Patrick Connell, an Arts senator; Marianne Lange, communications representative for the Resident Student Association (RSA) executive board; and David Poma, the business director of WKVU radio, fired questions at the four candidates.

Nolan emphasized his plans to implement a "Villanova Association of Students" that would meet once a month before the senate meetings "so that the students could talk to their senators and convey their feelings to the Senate before they vote on issues." Nolan stated that "too many students are unfamiliar as to who their senators are and their office hours." He added, "This is the foundation needed to be a community of students rather than many separate entities."

Ryan, the former vice president of the student body to Paul Tufano for the 1982-83 academic year, and currently a Commerce and Finance senator, stressed that his experience in the student government would help him to be a strong president. He mentioned, among his accomplishments, that he worked to achieve the reinstatement of football, the extension of campus library hours and the new visitation policy.

Ryan added that he would work hard to meet the demands of the growing number of Villanova students. "The major problem around here is space. We need more. There is a humongous demand for on-campus housing, classrooms, teaching facilities and research facilities. We need to increase in that area. If they made a change to increase the student-faculty ratio, I would definitely do something about that," stated Ryan.

> "The students need to get more control of our money for student activities."
> — Mike Ryan

> "Now is the time for constructive development of the alcohol policy."
> — Mark Rupprecht

Ryan also said, that "the students need to get more control of our money for student activities." He felt, "Student leaders should be more involved in where the money is spent. The newly implemented communication system [between student groups] should help this to be taken care of."

> "You must have a good relationship with the administration in order to do a good job."
> — Dennis McKithen

> "The single most important issue is the social aspect at Villanova."
> — Luke Nolan

Rupprecht, coordinator of the Student Government Committee to Restore Social Life, offered several proposals that he feels would be "constructive changes." Rupprecht stated that he would work for a bussing system for off-campus residents at Villanova. He also stated that, "now is the time for constructive development of the alcohol policy. We have made some inroads already."

McKithen throughout the debate emphasized the importance of open communication between the administration and the students.

"You must have a good relationship with the administration in order to do a good job," he said.

A question addressed to each of the candidates regarded the issue of the alcohol policy on campus.

"The single most important issue is the social aspect at Villanova," said Nolan. "We need to well-round the atmosphere on campus. This is a fine academic institution, but if nothing goes on here on the weekends, students will take 'road trips' to schools with more social atmosphere. We don't want to lose these students to other institutions."

In response to this question, Ryan stated that, with a more efficient security system, "We can control alcohol on campus so that the L.C.B. and the neighbors have no reason to come on campus."

Rupprecht agreed that since the school must watch out for liability, "on paper maybe it's a good idea to leave the school policy the way it is; but, acquiescence of these in terms of enforcing the rules may allow those who wish to drink the opportunity to drink as long as they do not get out of hand or out of control."

Problems Ahead For New Leaders

By NICK ANASTASIO

What issues will Villanova's new student government, elected yesterday, face in the coming year? Following are comments from several members of the outgoing student government on just this question.

Student Body President Patrick J. Leahy said, "I think the next student government has a challenge to improve the alcohol policy."

Leahy also called for more support for the change in the structure of the student activities office. "I've no regrets in pushing for [the bill to change the structure of the student activities office]. In fact, I urge the next student body president to do so. I think it's something that is needed at Villanova. There are too many groups that do the same thing, that compete with one another. I think there has to be a consolidation of groups and that's one thing I would like to have seen.

"There's always a new challenge coming up every day. I can't guess what the unexpected will be, but there are some things I would like to see them work on. One is perhaps the implementation of students on the security force at Villanova. I think that would enhance the atmosphere of the school.

"I think the biggest challenge facing the new student government is that they see the implementation of subsidized bus service provided at Villanova," Leahy said. "Every sort of university that I know of has some kind of busing for their off-campus residents. Since half of our students do live off campus, it is a necessity. It would help the students in their transportation.

"It would also help the school with parking problems. If we had a bus you could depend on, not only for just school hours, but also at night, then the kids wouldn't need a car here, and it would save on the big parking problem that we are having."

Arts senator Daniel Capodilupo touched on the need for a bus service, as well as improved social life. "I'd like to see the students throw more frequent parties on campus. Maybe we can set up a bi-weekly thing to integrate the surrounding colleges around here and have integrated Rosemont dances or some kind of mixers on a regular schedule.

Dan Capodilupo, arts senator

"I think we should let them in with just optimism and give them a chance to prove themselves."

Engineering senator Jon Meisel foresees funding problems for next year's student government. "Field house problems, money allocated to [the new dorms] — there is not going to be as much money around as there has been, due to all this funding. Thus, they are going to have a hard time trying to get major things done or passed that cost anything."

Coaching Selection Begins

By JAMES H. DeLORENZO

According to Dr. Ted Aceto, Villanova's director of athletics, "We have over 100 applications for the head football coaching job, and another 50 letters from student athletes."

The deadline for applications was March 28, and the last letter, noted Aceto, "arrived Tuesday."

"We posted the job officially on March 5, and the notice appeared in the March 14 issue of the Chronicle of Higher Education and the NCAA News," Aceto said.

The applicants for the head coaching position "include college head coaches, professional assistants, college assistants and a slew of high school coaches," stated Aceto. "We have also received 25 applications for coaching assistants."

The job announcement stated that, "Possessing a strong football tradition with excellent facilities, Villanova will play initially as an independent at the NCAA Division I-AA level.

"There is to be a strong preference for coaching experience at Division I-AA level in a program [illegible] football [illegible] traditional [illegible]

Dr. Ted Aceto, director of athletics

Also included in the qualifications was a statement that the prospective head coach "must recognize and accept the football program as part of the educational mission of the University with its [illegible] and [illegible] full University Community participation and the educational, recreational and social benefits to be derived therefrom.

"We have answered all the letters, and we met Tuesday, the day the last letter arrived, and will meet again Thursday [yesterday] as a group to review and narrow down the candidates for interviewing purposes," Aceto said.

"We would like to start that interviewing process soon," he added. "Interviews won't take that long, but the toughest part is to review the applications and narrow them down.

"Several Villanova graduates have applied for the job," Aceto revealed. "There are five who applied for the head coaching job, and two for an assistant's job.

"Officially, we will not begin playing football until 1985," continued Aceto. "At that time, we will schedule five division III teams, and gradually phase in a division I-AA schedule, building the number of opponents, with seven games in 1986 and 10 in 1987.

"They won't all be I-AA schools at first, since we won't have our records at the start," Aceto concluded.

Library Cooperation

Socializing and talking in the library continue to disturb students who want to use Falvey for serious purposes. The Library Director, Dr. Mary Ann Griffith has arranged with Security to more effectively monitor building use, especially in the evenings when noise problems occur more frequently. Mr. Rowan Kelly, Director of Security, explains that his staff members have been instructed to approach students whose behavior is inappropriate to the library setting. Both Mr. Kelly and Dr. Griffin ask everyone to cooperate in the attempt to create a library environment conducive to quiet work and reading.

Library to Control Noise

By MARIA C. GREEN

Dr. Mary Ann Griffin, director of Falvey Memorial Library, in cooperation with the Director of Security, Rowan Kelly, has decided to initiate a more active program to reduce the noise levels in the library.

According to Griffin, library noise had been a concern of faculty members when she assumed her position in January, and since that time, she has also received complaints from students.

"What I'd like to be sure of is that the students are aware that they are causing some problems for other students who are using the library," stated Griffin. She explained that these problems occur when "fairly sizable groups of students" meet in the library and begin to socialize. Griffin noted that when this socializing spreads throughout various parts of the building, "you will find that students who are trying to study can't concentrate." Griffin also remarked that the Connelly Center exists to accommodate such socializing.

In the past, the library has been monitored by a security guard whenever it is opened. According to Griffin, the problem has been that "these people were not visible enough." She said that now the security officers who are assigned to the library are being asked to monitor more actively the use of the building so that the students will become more aware of them. She hopes the very presence of these people walking around the library will let the students know that the policy is trying to be enforced.

In speaking of the silence policy, Griffin stated, "It has always been our policy; however, it is difficult to enforce." One reason for this difficult is the large size of the building. Griffin also cited the fact that the library staff is too busy doing their own work to effectively control noise levels. She explained that in light of these reasons, a more consistent monitoring system was needed.

Griffin continued, "I think everybody should bear a bit of the responsibility for ensuring that we don't have a rowdy library." She urged that students who are finding it difficult to concentrate in the library make the extra effort to tell the other students to be quiet. Griffin stated that "students shouldn't take these actions as a personal affront so much as that we are trying to ensure more effective use of the building."

In conclusion, Griffin remarked, "I think the important thing is that the students realize that our actions are for the overall benefit of everybody."

Busing Service Approved

By CARROLL GARVEY

A $4,000 grant has been approved by the University's administration to allow a trial period for a busing system providing transportation to some 1,800 off-campus students.

Janine Alfano, a nursing senator, explained that surveys were sent out over the Christmas break to both off-campus and commuting students. "We received a 26% response," she said. "Of the surveys returned, 96 percent were for a busing system that would run on specified routes to and from Villanova. The survey also showed that 70 percent would use the service if it were provided."

At present, plans for the system are incomplete. A private bus company or private agent has not yet been chosen. Originators of the program envision September as a possible initiation date of a successful bus service for Villanova students. The trial route may be changed. Currently, the trial run will consist of stops at [illegible] between the areas of Stadium, Main and Bryn Mawr Courts.

The idea for the bus service has been considered for some time. "The system has been implemented recently at Syracuse and [illegible] Alfano. Dr. Sterling Delano

As now structured, the Faculty Council draws it representatives from five major colleges and schools of the University — Arts and Sciences, Commerce and Finance, Engineering, Nursing and Law. The 20 councilors, who are elected by the full-time faculty of their respective divisions, serve three-year terms, with one third of the Council elected each year. No member may serve more than two [illegible] Council, was created in its place. The Council, a 20-member group proportionally representative of all faculty at the University, today continues to play a role in faculty matters and is viewed by many of those involved as a more than adequate replacement for the old Assembly.

Dr. Justin J. Green, a political science professor, chaired the Assembly at the time of the transformation and is currently on the Council. He recalls, "In parliamentary [illegible] the Assembly was [illegible] for only the people who showed up at every given meeting . . . [illegible] it was very difficult, I think, for the University to give much credence to the views of 30 or 40 people as representative of what the faculty wanted."

Dr. Robert W. Langran, also a political science professor and former Assembly chairman, noted that the Assembly wasn't very powerful. It really had very little

[illegible] Council had objected to I-AA," said Langran. "I know the faculty is rather disappointed that football is coming back at I-AA, because they think that it's an expense the school doesn't need, [illegible] Council has also examined such other issues as early retirement and the evaluation of teaching effectiveness.

In the past, among other things, it took a stance on football. "The

The Channels for Change

Student government, despite its relatively weak role in the football issue this year, turned into quite an effective body under Patrick Leahy, one which seems to have met student needs in several areas of concern.

Granted, many observers felt that the government's participation in the football question did not fully express the student body's voice. Some, including the Villanovan, pointed out that a rally or some other show of support would have better convinced the administration of the students' desire for football's return.

However, this issue aside, Leahy and the government effected positive change in several ways, including:

- the institution of a new on-campus alcohol policy. Although many constituents still feel that the revised regulations are too conservative, it cannot be denied that the social life here has improved significantly since September, when absolutely nothing of interest was taking place on weekends. In addition, the new policy provides a better situation for everyone involved — one which is a vast improvement over the original BYOB proposal. Further strides in this area must be taken by the next student body president; Leahy, however, laid the foundation for any further action.

- the implementation of a fall break for the upcoming academic year. A poll conducted by student government indicated overwhelming support by the students for such a plan. Student government should be commended for making this much-needed break a reality.

- the establishment of extended visitation hours. Student government continually pushed for such a change, and, although the extension is still not viewed as adequate by this paper and others, at least some inroads were made.

- the recent working out of details for a busing service for off-campus residents. As reported in this week's Villanovan, a $4,000 grant has been approved by the administration for this program, which might very well begin next September. This service also carries support from students. About 99 percent of those off-campus residents responding to an early-semester survey indicated the plan would be of value to them.

This particular issue, like that of the alcohol policy, requires additional study by next year's student government. Leahy, though, opened the channels for change, thus paving the way for future action. All in all, the 1983-84 student government met student concerns by producing results.

The next "administration" would do well to follow the same course.

New Attitude on Drinking

To the Editor:

On the commentary page of your March 23 edition there is an editorial concerning underage drinking signed by your news director, Amelia McGovern. In that editorial, Ms. McGovern refers to the recent arrests at Sugartown Mews, points out the fact that drinking by students under the age of 21 is against the law and then states, "students will continue to drink — nothing is more obvious," and "the law (establishing the drinking age at 21) as it stands, though, should be questioned."

I congratulate Ms. McGovern and the Villanovan on taking the public stand that underage drinking is a crime and students will have to pay the consequences. Too few students seem to realize this fact. I believe, however, that the other positions taken by the editorial are dangerous and are based on emotional rather than factual considerations. There is a move afoot throughout the country to increase all states' drinking ages to 21 rather than reducing those that are already at that age. This move is based on cold facts. In Pennsylvania, where nine percent of the licensed drivers are in the 16 to 21 age group, almost 25 percent of the drunk driving fatalities are caused by this group. In the first six months under the increased age, drunk driving deaths of drivers between the ages of 19 and 21 dropped from 34 to 13.

While there is no question that many persons in this age group can responsibly handle alcoholic beverages, (and on the other side of the coin many persons over that age cannot), it is clear that as a group, college-age students cannot responsibly deal with the consumption of alcoholic beverages. It is for this reason that the drinking age is at its present level, and is not likely to be reduced.

We are constantly reminded that "students will continue to drink — nothing is more obvious." This is, unfortunately, a self-fulfilling prophecy. If the Villan-

To Support or Not to Support

To the Editor:

How can the "editor-in-chief," Joseph Marusak, circumvent the entire election process by endorsing Mike Ryan for student body president? I did not realize Mr. Marusak was an expert on what is best for Villanova. I also did not know that candidates were able to run free quarter-page advertisements under the title of "commentary."

The candidates are limited in the amount of money they can spend for the election. This is to eliminate someone from outspending his opponents and thereby buying the election. This ensures that people win elections on the basis of ability, not publicity. Yet one person is able to avoid all of this and communicate his feelings, on the election, to the entire university. Where does he get the right to influence any election, other than through his one vote? Who is Joseph Marusak?

Another fallacy perpetrated by Mr. Marusak is that experience is the most important quality of elected officials. Richard Nixon had six years of experience. Adolph Hitler had 12. I would not want either to run our student government. In reality, the most important element for election is exposure. Mr. Marusak has used the Villanovan to give Mike Ryan the exposure.

As I continued reading the Villanovan, I found an article condemning one of Mike Ryan's opponents, Mark Rupprecht. The article was written by a "reporter" for the Villanovan, James DeLorenzo. In the attack I found two things which were very enlightening. First, Mr. DeLorenzo is unable to write properly. He ended one paragraph with a preposition (of) and another with a linking verb (is). Anyone who has had an eighth grade English course knows better. Secondly, Mr. DeLorenzo explained that Mr. Rupprecht had attacked the Villanovan and therefore should not be taken seriously as a candidate. I did not realize we were voting for the Villanovan's honor.

Finally, I realize a "big-time" editor-in-chief like Joseph Marusak and a "big-time" reporter like James DeLorenzo feel compelled to endorse candidates, just like their colleagues from the Washington Post and New York Times. However, I believe they should work on their editing and writing instead of attempting to determine the outcome of an election.

Joseph E. Curci
C&F, Economics
Class of 1984

The article in question does not necessarily represent the views of the student body. In the final paragraph, the article expressly states that it represents the view of the Villanovan staff. WHO ASKED YOU?? In addition, we fail to see the reasoning in the endorsement of Mike Ryan, while in the same issue of the Villanovan, candidate Rupprecht was the subject of, to put it lightly, a "character critique." This "critique" came in the form of a letter to the editor written by former Villanovan editor Jim DeLorenzo. In this particular article, Mr. DeLorenzo's opinion seems in light of his prior position with the paper and the content of the letter, to correspond to those held by the Villanovan. If you are going to endorse Ryan and offer a critique of Rupprecht in the same issue, why not say something about the other candidates as well? It is supposed to be a fair election, after all.

As a result, the endorsement of Ryan is not only unfair for Ryan's opponents, but it is also unfair to the student community which reads the Villanovan. Thank you, but the students do not need your opinion in order to make the "right" decision on election day.

In closing, we feel that these two articles presented in the Villanovan do not reflect the professional quality of the paper, for which it has won numerous awards. The student body deserves an explanation.

Character Assassination

To the Editor:

An issue which has been debated and disagreed upon endlessly is exactly how far the press can go before having limitations placed on what it prints. The newspaper is an instrument by which the public is informed about the events taking place in the world and occasionally inform its readers, through editorials, of what the press feels its readers should know. When the press is used for these purposes, it is at the height of its service and usefulness to its readers.

When the privileges offered to a person in the press are abused, however, it can become an instrument of oppression. The Villanovan was used this way last Friday by James H. DeLorenzo, whose Op-Ed appeared more than just an informed opinion, but rather, a fulfillment of his own personal vendetta against Mark Rupprecht.

Mr. DeLorenzo's character assassination of Mark Rupprecht has no place in print. Who is he to be the final judge of Rupprecht's character, especially after their disagreements in the past? The paper is no place for a personal attack by one person on another, with no other obvious motives behind it than to hurt Rupprecht's chances in the upcoming presidential debate. And you claim Mark Rupprecht is the one with the personal vendetta?

It is obvious that you and Rupprecht have had your disagreements in the past. You complain about Rupprecht being " . . . too quick to attack the very system he now seeks to become a part of." Well, maybe that is what student government needs — a person who is not afraid of criticism or Fair Election?

To the Editor:

Regarding the article titled "Mike Ryan" in the commentary section of the March 30 Villanovan, we were wondering . . . exactly what warranted the endorsement of candidate Ryan by the Villanovan? In a university newspaper, we feel that articles of this type have no place. If the Villanovan were a privately-owned publication and represented the views of a particular group, perhaps some justification could be found for such a blatant endorsement. However, the Villanovan does not fit this bill. It is supposed to be the school paper and is supp[illegible] views of all students.

No Alternative Vegetarian Meal Plan Offered

By ANTHONY EDWARDS

The question of vegetarian meals in resident cafeterias will be decided by the students' preferences, according to J. Leslie Gies, director of Food Services, and Gail Steck, chief nutritionist at the University.

"There are many different types of vegetarians," said Steck, "ranging from those who are very strict to some who eat eggs and dairy products such as milk and cheese."

One current example of a vegetarian meal is the Lenten meal plan. On Fridays during Lent, no meat is being served in any of the residence hall cafeterias. To offset the absence of meat, two entrees are being offered at lunch instead of one, and grilled cheese sandwiches are offered instead of hamburgers and hot dogs.

However, Gies was quick to point out that vegetarian meals would only continue on Fridays through Lent. It was decided by the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., that, when the menus were prepared about six weeks ago after consultation with Gies and many other student organizations, the traditional Lenten meal program would be followed.

"If students wanted meat only two or three times a week, fine; unfortunately, we couldn't offer them a large variety of meals," said Gies.

The food needed to meet a student's daily nutritional requirements is available in the various cafeterias. However, "It is the student's responsibility to eat the necessary food," stated Gies.

The addition of a salad bar has increased the variety of meals for both vegetarians and non-vegetarians. "It has been very successful, especially since women came on campus," said Gies.

So far, there has been no great demand by the students for vegetarian meals. Gies assures that if there is enough student feedback on the matter it will be acted upon. "We get a lot of feedback about the meals in general from the students. They come up to my managers and me all the time," says Steck.

J. Leslie Gies, director of Food Services.

Steck asks that, if any students have questions about the food, they call her at 645-4170 or come to the Food Service office on the first floor of Dougherty.

Signs Stolen

By TIM HANLON

For the second time this semester the clearance signs on the P&W bridge above South Ithan Avenue have been vandalized, as, during the week of March 12, the clearance signs reading 10'6" were removed. One of the signs was found on the tracks of the P&W by a SEPTA driver. That sign has since been replaced; however, the other is still missing.

Daniel Malloy, assistant director of public works for Radnor Township, said, "The cost of one sign to be mounted and replaced is approximately $80. Last February we had to replace two." As for that interim when the signs were missing, Malloy said, "Several accidents involving drivers being injured occurred." These signs are the only warning that the bridge is unusually low. By law, the township must provide information to passing trucks.

In the Feb. 3 issue of The Villanovan, Ernest L. Marmer, director of public works for Radnor Township, stressed the township's concern over the vandalism of clearance signs, especially on this particular bridge.

"Precautions have been taking to prevent the removal of the signs," according to Malloy.

It is virtually impossible to tell who took the signs on this occasion, or who had painted over them in the past. It is allegedly assumed that these acts were committed by Villanova University students because of the bridge's proximity to Stanford and Good Counsel Halls.

Malloy and Marmer hope students will realize the importance of these signs staying in place and remaining legible for all parties concerned. Another sign, again, will replace the missing sign within the next week.

High Income Student Loan Program Announced

By ROBERT M. JORDAN

Pennsylvania Governor Richard Thornburgh last week announced the establishment of a $300 million student loan program aimed at families with relatively high incomes who currently do not qualify for federal student loans.

The loans will be made available this summer for the 1984-1985 school year, Thornburgh said. An estimated 50,000 students whose families earn more than the federal government's $30,000 per-year ceiling will be eligible for the program, state officials said.

According to Kenneth Reeher, executive director of the Pennsylvania Higher Education Assistance Authority, which runs the program, it is possible that a family earning $80,000 with two children in college could qualify for the program.

The program will provide eligible students with college and graduate school loans of up to $5500 per year, officials said. The average interest rate will be 10 percent, and the flexible repayment period can be as long as 10 years.

A spokesman for State Senator Joseph Loeper (R-Delaware County) explained that applicants must first fill out the normal loan application at their local bank, and, if rejected for a financial reason, apply a second time for the new loan program.

Only Pennsylvania residents going to colleges in this state or certain reciprocal colleges in nearby states may take part in the student loan package.

Faculty Council

Committee, another faculty body, in quite a different light.

According to Langran, "The Faculty Affairs Committee wears two hats, as do most Senate committees. The one hat is that they can hear problems of the faculty and address them. On the other hand, if the Faculty Affairs Committee has a policy needing approval, then it's got to run that through the Senate."

Additionally, there seems to be some overlapping among the Council and the Senate committee on certain issues. According to Gallen, "Sometimes there's a problem between the two groups, both of which are Senate-related. So at times, we don't know whether to go to the Council or the Faculty Affairs Committee. There's a little bit of ambiguity there."

"I can understand why," said Delano. "I'm not sure that the Faculty Council and the Faculty Affairs Committee aren't duplicating a lot of efforts . . . Hopefully that won't last too much longer. I think it's being caused by the fact that the Faculty Council is only a year and a half old and is still establishing its identity and credibility. The administration, I think, is going to see very soon that the place to go on these matters is the Faculty Council."

Given such circumstances, just how effective has the Faculty Council been?

"I really don't know," Langran said. "I believe it has more clout than the Assembly did, and it seems to be listened to more. But on the other hand, we get no more support as far as attendance than you did with the assembly.

"But the administration seems to be receptive to it. Certainly, Fr. Gallen seems receptive to Faculty Council proposals."

Delano said, "It has exceeded my original expectations. I've also been very pleased to see that the administration has responded to the kinds of things the Faculty Council has said are important."

ovan were to state editorially that "students will continue to abuse cocaine — nothing is more obvious," the newspaper might well be run off campus. It is just as illegal to drink when under 21 as it is to use drugs. The problem is that attitudes in our society toward the commission of this crime (underage drinking), are rapidly changing. Laws that have heretofore not been enforced are now being enforced, as the Sugartown Mews thirty have learned. It is incumbent upon the Villanovan and the University to change their views and to advance the position that students need not drink and that life, even on college campuses, can be quite enjoyable without drinking. I urge you to do so.

U.S.S.R. Talk

To the Editor:

In response to your article titled "Professor Talks on Visit to U.S.S.R." one is left with a feeling of confusion and distrust. What was Dr. Goldstein's point in regard to "lack of freedom" in the U.S.S.R.? That people are not allowed to go certain places in that country is hardly a new or original insight.

Perhaps he was trying to point out a condition which exists in that country that does not exist here. If so, I would like to point out that a recent Philadelphia Inquirer article dealt with just this issue. It seems that there are certain areas of the United States to which our Russian visitors are asked not to visit.

Among these areas listed were the Silicon Valley in California, the greater metropolitan Boston area and right here in our own backyard, Valley Forge, Pa., is off limits albeit for some extremely good reasons, but it is still banned. So that any Russian with a burning desire to see the birthplace of the United States cannot do so.

All countries, companies and basketball teams do what they have to do to protect their own interests. So why do we insist on making these inane comparisons between our two countries in the hope of putting the other down?

It seems to me that a better use of your newspaper space would have been to have an article stressing open and fair dialogue and some constructive ways to go about it.

I have not great love for the Soviet Union, but I also cannot sit still for what seems to be biased opinions and reporting. I thought that unbiased reporting was what newspapers were about. It seems we have lost sight of that principle.

R.A.'s as 'Narcs'

To the Editor:

This letter is in response to the recent meeting concerning the incident in which a beer bottle was thrown through an R.A.'s window at Corr Hall. We feel the meeting did not address the true issue behind the incident. Although we are not condoning this act, we believe that it is obviously the result of the archaic policies of the administration which make the R.A.'s direct adversaries of the Villanova students.

We are referring to the ultra-conservative attitude and visitation policies. The administration expects R.A.'s to work with the Villanova students but then they have no parked his truck between the field and St. Thomas, and turned his stereo on a very conservative volume which we felt was legal on our own campus. I guess we were wrong.

After an inning or two of fun, a dark Villanova administration cloud hovered over the playing field — the music stopped. I was playing third base at the time, and my immediate reaction was to glance over at the truck. A priest, who never even looked at us, let alone said anything, was walking from the truck back into St. Thomas.

I could not believe my eyes. You would have thought it was his truck. He not only turned the stereo off, he also took the keys with him back indoors. Where does a human being derive such authority? If one is disturbing the peace, (although I want to re-emphasize the music was on a very modest level) don't the police even give a warning or ask you to turn things down? Why couldn't he have said something? As seniors and a few juniors, I think we know how to cooperate. It's too bad we weren't given the chance.

Several minutes later, a security guard arrived and began writing a ticket for the truck. We were all waiting to be called and arrested. The owner of the truck asked the guard if he could retrieve the keys. The guard checked in St. Thomas, but came out empty-handed. He said the priest was busy eating and would not be disturbed.

At this point, the sun was down and it grew quite chilly. Although some of us had shorts and t-shirts on, we could not leave because "Father" was dining.

I have lived off-campus since sophomore year and cannot think of any special event on campus since then that I can consider remotely successful. Is the Administration promoting a policy to smother any attempt by students to use the limited facilities Villanova offers, or does the college experience on Villanova campus end outside the classroom?

In a month and a half, Villanova will be a part of the past. It's a shame that I have such bitter feelings toward the University, but this episode is not the first time I have seen an individual treated as if a child from the third grade. I will miss college and the various personalities I have had the pleasure of knowing, but the Villanova administration will strike few fond memories.

Compromise is the Answer

To the Editor:

The purpose of this letter is two-fold. First of all, we are hoping that the administration would better understand the students; and secondly, we hope that the students can also come to a better understanding of the administration. For us to say that the communication gap is all the administration's fault is ridiculous, and there is nothing farther from the truth. We all know that for our Villanova community to grow and prosper we all need to stand on the same side of the fence, or at least make an effort to.

An example of this communication gap was the recent "Radiation Day" party that took place 2 weeks ago. Instead of collaborating and trying to work some kind of compromise out, both sides became stubborn. We will be the first to admit that we were some of the stubborn ones. The administration might say that they need no compromise, and they don't. The point is that they should want to.

There is a problem that needs to be remedied, and the longer this problem goes on, the worse off we'll all be. The students want

Let me comment on the first letter written by the junior class E.E.'s. After reading it, I almost felt sorry for them. They were kind enough to point out that they take between 17-18 credits per semester. So what? I take just as many. As a chemistry major, I take between 12-14 science courses and between 4-6 core requirements in credits. But, that does not change the dean's list requirement of a 3.5 G.P.A.

To answer the question, " . . . is it not possible that a 3.0 G.P.A in engineering is just as fine an achievement as a 3.5 G.P.A. in other colleges?" No, it is not, for reasons that I will explain later.

About the second letter, Mr. Pawloski and Mr. Moroney were kind enough to place a wager of $3 saying "that there are fewer engineers per capita on our dean's list than yours." It was a foolish wager, Mr. Pawloski and Mr. Moroney, because obviously you too are ignorant of the facts. The fall semester of 1983 had 34.9 percent of all the engineers at Villanova on the dean's list. Out of all the Arts and Science students, only 18.4 percent achieved the same status.

These figures clearly show that the prestigious reputation of academic excellence meant by the words "dean's list" is very much lost in the college of engineering. So, I think I have answered the wants something completely different: it is becoming a game. There has to be solutions that can make both sides content.

Right now is a good time for us all to make an effort to correct the problem that has grown over the past months. We all would like Villanova to be a better place in which to live, and this tension between the students and the administration only hinders our attempt to reach our goal. Whether we like it or not, and most of us do, Villanova is our home. It's about time both sides get together as one, because it has become obvious that we will get nowhere if we are both pushing in the opposite direction.

Engineering Dispute

To the Editor:

I am writing in reply to the letters of the junior class E.E.'s and Mr. Pawloski and Mr. George Moroney. I can only assume, after carefully scrutinizing both, that both were written hastily and without much thinking on the part of both parties.

About the question of the authorized withdrawal date, Mr. Pawloski and Mr. Moroney came up with the following answer: "More credits, more time to withdraw — big deal." Are you trying to be comical? Am I also to assume you think engineering has it so much rougher than we non-engineers, that it only comes natural that engineers get an extension? I hope not. Is it because the extension gives the engineers more time to drop the course which they may be doing poorly in in order to earn enough credits to become one of the "elite members" of the excessively inflated engineering dean's list? I doubt that also.

I can only wait for an intelligent, reasonable and rational explanation.

Policy Enforcement

To the Editor:

The way in which the candidates who are running to be your representatives to the university administration advertise their candidacy brings to light some unpleasant facts about the enforcement of policies set forth by the Office of Student Activities.

The reason for my dismay stems from an incident which occurred this past February when the Engineering Joint Council, in an attempt to advertise an upcoming function, hung flyers around the halls and in the classrooms of Tolentine Hall. Upon coming into Tolentine the next day, I found, much to my surprise, all of the flyers which had been hung the night before had been removed by an unknown party. I contacted Student Activities and received from them the policies which all student organizations are to follow when hanging flyers and posters.

In particular, the policy for Tolentine Hall is as follows, "Post flyers on bulletin boards (not departmental) only. No posting on tile or glass or walls. Posters/flyers must have SAO stamp." So now my curiosity about why EJC posters disappeared was satisfied.

I would like to know if for some reason the parties involved with enforcing the policies are of strike, or whether it is just that the student government receives special consideration and other student organizations (not just the engineering ones) are the only ones subject to the policies set forth by SAO. Just possibly someone could clear up the confusion which allows the student government to do as they please.

Too Much Stress Can Take Its Toll

By ROBERT O'MALLEY

Your mind is going a mile a minute, your body is tense, your hands are clammy, your heart is beating wildly and your stomach is churning. What is wrong? Are you experiencing love? Anger? Frustration? No, chances are that if you are experiencing these symptoms, you are suffering from stress, according to Dr. David Bush of the psychology department.

What is stress? It is a level of physical and psychological arousal, notes Bush. The trouble is that stress is like a double-edged sword — it can increase your level of performance but on the other level, too much stress can cause wear and tear on one's mind and body.

Bush, an associate professor of psychology who specializes in communication, decision making and stress management, gave a talk last Wednesday on "How to Manage Stress," as part of the Union's "Talks of the Times" lecture series.

In his lecture, Bush pointed out that we need a certain amount of stress in our lives to maintain our optimal performance level. Whenever we drink coffee or tea to keep awake while studying, we are trying to increase our stress level so that our performance will be at its best.

"Some people even chew No-Doz, take diet pills, other things. For what purpose? To move you up in terms of arousal . . . give you energy," says Bush.

We do more than drink coffee and take drugs to increase our stress level, however. Entertainment, says Bush, is also a way by which we try to increase our stress level to achieve an optimum performance level. Even a day at an amusement park can help put us at a level of "eustress" where we are at our physical and mental peak. Eustress is the good type of stress.

Unfortuntely, most of us are familiar with the bad side of stress. That is, when our level of stress is too high, we experience distress with unfortunate results for our minds and bodies. Often, people make the mistake of taking drugs to decrease their level of stress to acceptable levels — and end up see-sawing between being over-aroused and under-aroused.

"As a matter of fact, some people get into trouble with taking too many things that put them up and down, because they never end up [at a level of optimum stress/peak performance] . . . so they alternate going back and forth between tranquilizers and things that are going to boost their level of arousal. It doesn't work too well and usually they end up with problems of drug abuse," adds Bush.

"Most of us have performance standards [where] we have to perform, [but] if we can't perform, we have stress."

We can, however, intervene in the stress cycle, says Bush. One way to eliminate harmful stress is through relaxation exercises. Bush states that stress causes us to react physically, to get ready to either fight or flee. Relaxation and breathing exercises counteract these reactions and eliminate harmful stress.

"There are all kinds of statements people make to us about things in life that create (stressful) reactions," he says. . . "What you need to do is to come up with a new interpretation. . . of things that are going on, in other words re-think them."

Another way of controlling stress is through "cognitive restructuring," which is where you look at the structure of an emotional response. Bush says that the way in which we interpret events determines whether or not our stress level will reach harmful levels.

Bush stated that problems with stress usually work in a cycle. The cycle begins with our being over-stressed by one or more things in our lives. These stress-creating factors, be they social or physical stressors, such as air or noise pollution, cause emotional and psychological distress. This in turn leads to poor performance in things we wish to accomplish, which in turn becomes another stress-creating factor in our lives.

"There are all kinds of statements people make to us about things in life that create [stressful] reactions," he says. However, this reaction is caused largely by our interpretation of what people have said.

"What you need to do is to come up with a new interpretation . . . of things that are going on, in other words re-think them. That's why we call this cognitive restructuring. Come up with a new way of processing or understanding things that other people say to you." So, if one learns to control his interpretations of what people say, he will be helping to keep stress at the proper levels.

Through relaxation techniques, breathing exercises and cognitive restructuring, we can help keep ourselves from having too much stress in our lives, which is especially important with final exams coming up.

It is important to learn to manage harmful levels of stress, because if we don't, these could lead to poor health.

There's a lot of research to suggest that, Bush says, "not just ulcers, [but] all illnesses."

Panel Discusses Theatre

By MARIANNE DAINTON

Contemporary musical theatre was the topic of a panel discussion held on March 28 in Dougherty Hall. The discussion was the final event of the Honors Program's spring symposium titled, "An Exploration of Popular Culture."

Panelists Joseph Leonardo, associate professor of theatre at Temple University; Terry Fimiano Guerin, instructor of theatre at Villanova University; and Claude White, director of bands at the University of Pennsylvania discussed the state of the art of musical theatre: its history, where it is and where it's going.

"The sublime message of musical theatre is that life is worth it — people want to know the pain is worth it. The musical is a celebration of life," said Guerin. Traditional musical theatre is concerned with making people happy. Guerin thinks, "That's terrific!"

But the musical comedy derived from the vaudeville formula no longer exists. In fact, White expressed his fear that the musical "may be nearing a dead end.

"We are so overexposed to the human condition, especially through TV, that there is no need to go to the theatre," White said.

Leonardo disagreed. "We've seen it all, but there's still something exciting about being in the same room when magic occurs."

Guerin added, "Theatre is theatre because it is live." She believes there is a need to re-educate the public about what theatre is all about.

"People believe that the more you pay, the better it is." At $45 for an orchestra seat, people walk away from a play convinced that they had enjoyed themselves.

The panelists agree that contemporary musical theatre places too much emphasis on commercialism and "hi-tech."

The problem is that "the people who put money out are not interested in art," Leonardo said. The Shuberts, major financial backers of contemporary theatre, are real estate people.

Current hits such as "Cats" and "La Cage Aux Folles" have production costs reaching $5 million.

Those in the industry face a dilemma. Ideally a play should provide both entertainment and education. With today's emphasis on monetary success, many in the industry choose to ignore the educational aspect of theatre.

"Do you really think you learned anything from 'Cats'?" asked Guerin.

She conceded, however, that people don't want to have to think during leisure, although a good play usually only gets its message across subtly.

Leonardo called for a return to the artistic aspect of musical theatre. He believes that musicals

Electronic News Network Keeps Students Posted

By SUZANNE BRUSTMAN

Electronic News Network, the new and free campus news medium, has been at Villanova almost one year. Contracted in February 1983 by Marc Tuchman, director of the Connelly Center, the ENN message board will most likely remain in the Belle Air Terrace permanently.

"It was a concept of interest to me," said Tuchman, of his decision to bring ENN to the Connelly Center. "It doesn't cost anything and it provides a service." he added. The service is the delivery of national news, sports scores and show-biz happenings. The fact that ENN is solely responsible for the maintenance and all costs of the board is an added attraction.

To say that ENN worked to bring itself to Villanova is not untrue. The company, based in Dallas, Texas, contacted Tuchman by mail during the fall of 1982. Tuchman eventually consulted others, including Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president of Student Life, and a number of colleges. "I checked around with other campuses that had it," said Tuchman.

The terms under which ENN desired to operate were both flexible and attractive enough to Tuchman. A 12-month contract was negotiated, under which the Connelly Center has no cost obligations and the right to "get out" at any time for any reason.

The electronic board, which is not to be confused with the Villanova Union's moving message board above the elevator in the lobby, was installed at the end of the spring 1983 semester. It was placed in the Belle Air Terrace because Tuchman and others consider that to be a heavily trafficked area, but one with a relaxed atmosphere. "It's an area where people tend to sit for a period of time," Tuchman said. "They're not in a hurry."

News is broadcast 24 hours a day. ENN programs the news from their main-frame computer in Dallas and sends the information to Villanova through a phone line. Though updates are issued daily, a problem or an interruption in the power line may delay their reception.

ENN allocates a certain amount of memory for campus programming, but Tuchman avoids this, noting that the Union's board is already very campus-oriented.

Because Villanova doesn't add its own programming, the broadcasts are slightly shorter in length than those of other schools. The average broadcast runs eight minutes, with about 80 percent information and 20 percent ads.

Advertisements are ENN's only source of income and possible profit. For this reason, the company is selective about each campus it contacts. Because ENN charges advertisers "per impression," or, number of times an ad is seen, smaller campuses are avoided. The reason is these campuses don't have a large enough number of students to see the ads, so the number of impressions is smaller, and ENN cannot charge enough to make a profit.

With the exception of campus programming, Villanova has no control over the broadcasts. Tuchman, however, is not worried. Although he gets an occasional complaint about outdated news, he's had no problems with or concerns about the content of the broadcasts. "They (ENN) are certainly very sensitive to it, since they are in a college market," he observed.

At this point, Tuchman sees only one potential reason to discontinue using ENN. "If we had to start paying for something, I'd [illegible] because [illegible]

Did you know . . .

• If you have any problems with your landlord or your lease, you may receive aid from the Pennsylvania Consumer Board? To receive help, call (215) 898-6000.

• That to prevent foods from being infested by insects, various means are used, including food additives and fumigants? During the 1981 Mediterranean fruit fly infestation in California and Florida, when chemicals were the only approved effective means of control, the Food and Drug Administration and the food industry became particularly interested in whether irradiating foods would be a better alternative.

After three years of study, the FDA has proposed a rule that would allow food processors to use irradiation to destroy insects and extend the shelf life of fresh fruits and vegetables.

Unlike chemical pesticides, irradiation leaves no residue in food, according to the FDA. The agency also says that the process neither makes food radioactive nor does it pose any radioactivity danger to consumers, and has no effect on nutritional value.

The FDA already permits irradiation of spices, and low-dose irradiation is used on foods taken into space by U.S. astronauts. In addition, some hospitals serve irradiated foods to cancer patients with problems in their immunity systems.

The FDA's proposal would allow the use of up to 100 kilorads to kill insects in fruits and vegetables and to inhibit ripening and spoilage. A rad is an amount of energy absorbed from radiation. A kilorad (krad) equals 1,000 rads and a megarad (Mrad) equals 1,000,000 rads.

Up to one Mrad for spice irradiation is already permitted for controlling bacteria and killing insects. The new proposal allows up to 3 Mrads for spices. The FDA is currently reviewing other data to determine if doses above 100 krads are safe for meat, poultry and fish. Such use would require a separate regulation.

The agency has not proposed a retail labeling requirement because "any changes in food are of no safety concern at the proposed doses, and because the agency is not persuaded that special labeling is necessary." They note, however, that there is information that irradiation causes some changes in foods in taste, color, smell or texture that could make a particular food more or less pleasing to consumers.

This proposal is a major concern to the food industry, to consumers and to the FDA. Prior to becoming a regulation, a public forum is open for comments until April 16, and the FDA would like to hear from consumers. For details, check the "Federal Register" of Feb. 14, page 5714. Send comments to: Dockets Management Branch (HFA-305), FDA, Room 4-62, 5600 Fishers Lane, Rockville, MD 20857.

WWII and Literary Culture

(Second in a two-part series)

By GARY R. DYER

Paul Fussell believes that wartime writing is "the quintessence of popular writing."

"Propaganda in wartime must be mass culture or it is nothing," Fussell explained in his Honors Symposium lecture on March 27. "One of the bad things about war, in addition to all the other bad things, is that it tends to insist upon one culture, instead of encouraging two cultures — that is, high, witty or subversive culture and mass culture.

"In wartime you find one culture, and that culture is usually not very complicated emotionally or psychologically."

Fussell noted that, in his observation, "Although all wars are alike, each is conducted in a different 'style.'"

One factor in the literary style of the Second World War was My Sister and I: The Diary of a Dutch Boy Refugee, a book which was supposedly written by a young Dutch boy Dirk van der Heide, but was actually written by Stanley Preston Young, an editor at Harcourt, Brace publishing in New York.

My Sister and I, in Fussell's view, tapped into and exploited the image of the bewildered child as "a representative human being," an image that is prevalent in many American novels, most notably Mark Twain's Huckleberry Finn.

The young person who is overwhelmed by surrounding evil was also used in William Saroyan's The Human Comedy, which was published during the war, as well as in J.D. Salinger's The Catcher in the Rye. "I'm sure you all remember Holden Caulfield's little sister Phoebe, and how Holden wants to remove the obscene graffiti from the walls of her school." This concern parallels Dirk's concern for his sister in his account.

This view of young people is a distinctively American one. Fussell contrasts it with that of William Golding's The Lord of the Flies, in which children's basic evil tendencies surface under the right circumstances.

Such works as My Sister and I, which exploit literary archetypes for sentimental value, demean everyone, in Fussell's opinion. In the single culture of wartime, this narrowing of literary power spreads quickly.

The effects of the Second World War literary mentality that Fussell sees are the "sentimentality, emotional monomania and moral simplification found in such writers of the time as Thornton Wilder, John Steinbeck, John Hersey, Archibald McLeish, James Gould Cozzens and Herman Wouk.

"After they enlisted literature in the cause of victory — they actually used language like that — the allies won the war, but literature lost.

"It was the domination of these writers that sparked the reactions in the work of [Norman] Mailer, [Kurt] Vonnegut and [Thomas] Pynchon."

Fussell commented that Marxist writing is never popular culture, even when aimed at the masses. To Fussell, though, popular culture is a certain giddy style which deadens responses and three-dimensional perceptions.

Fussell feels that today we are more susceptible to propaganda because of "the improved efficiency of the media," along with the advent of television and the decline of reading.

Fussell's lecture was drawn from material for his work-in-progress, tenatively titled The Cultural Form of the Second World War.

Although My Sister and I was a hoax put forward by Young and the pro-British publishing firm under influence of the propaganist "Bureau of British Security Coordination" in New York, the press could not have been more easily duped. Even the Atlantic Monthly and the Times Literary Supplement were respectful in their criticisms.

Voting and Values

By BARBARA HAENN

Lowering the voting age to 18 has meant that virtually all of our Villanova community is eligible to participate in the primaries and elections of 1984, provided each of us is registered to vote.

Our votes (or lack of votes) have a profound effect on where our country is going. It is essential that we realize the link that exists between our faith and the political process.

For years we have heard the outcries of "mixing politics and religion," as though these two worlds were mutually exclusive. However, we now find ourselves at a turning point in history with issues such as nuclear disarmament and arms control, military spending, economic justice and American presence or intervention in foreign governments.

The issues are far from simple in themselves, and yet can be considered from a "simple" point of view — the Gospels.

What would Christ tell me about:

— the primary right of a person to have simply enough food to survive?

— the rights of a people to determine for themselves, their form of government?

— the right of a person to live free of the fear, of the reality, of nuclear destruction?

— the right of a person to a job?

Reagan has supported major cuts in governmental spending for human services; supported a 1.6 trillion dollar defense budget over the next five years; supported the use of the MX missile as a bargaining chip with the Soviets; supported development of chemical weapons; opposed the nuclear arms race freeze; supported military aid to El Salvador and has backed covert guerilla activity in Nicaragua. At this point in time, our country is spending more money for military defense than at any other time in history, except World War II.

We are an intelligent, educated population here at Villanova. Let us use these gifts, along with our faith, at the polls.

White thinks that much of the difference between traditional and contemporary musical theatre lies in the music itself. "It used to be that the hit songs were theatre songs," he said.

In the 1950s, however, rock-and-roll changed all that. Unfortunately, musicals have been slow to embrace this music phenomenon. "The real talents in music are not working in the theatre," White noted.

Alumnae Focus on Women

By BARBARA LUCAS

Villanova women have come a long way since 1951, when the first 10 females enrolled in this school. Then the choices were few; it was either education or nursing.

But now, women may choose from any of the five colleges of their choice. However, when it comes to the competition of the job market, have Villanova graduates been fully prepared for the challenges they face?

The Villanova General Alumni Association, in cooperation with the office of Adult Services of University College, will be sponsoring "Alumnae Day" on April 7. The seminar is designed to examine current trends in the work force and provide insights into ways women can adjust.

Students, administration and alumni are all invited to participate in the day's events.

The morning session will continue with two lectures. Dr. Marguerite Farley, president of Farcom Inc., and a member of the Villanova University Board of Trustees, will speak about "Villanova Women of the '80s: Challenges and Opportunities." Rosa Gatti, vice president of communications for ESPN Cable Sports Network, will then speak on "Unchartered Careers."

After lunch and campus tours, the afternoon seminar will present a panel of Villanova alumni to give five short talks on various topics, with a question and answer period following.

Patricia Wiedinmyer, director of adult services, University College, will offer closing remark and a wine and cheese receptio will follow.

The seminar has been offered i response to graduates' expresse need for assistance in the area job searching. The lectures wi address the past successes of Vi lanova women and illustrate ho they were able to achieve their c reer goals. Other areas covered b the panelists will include a proaches to deciding upon a c reer, management skills and bas survival skills within the mal dominated job market.

The cost for the day will be $1 for alumni and $10 for studen Registration will be from 9 a.m. 10 a.m. in the Connelly Center C nema. For further informatio contact the Alumni Office at 64 4580.

Shakespeare Comes Alive at Vasey

By JOSEPH McALEE

The current attraction at Villanova's Vasey Theatre is William Shakespeare's romantic comedy, "A Midsummer Night's Dream." The play takes place in an enchanted wood where fanciful fairies play mischievous tricks on young lovers and bungling play actors with hilarious results.

This production of "A Midsummer's Night Dream" is unique in two ways. Director William Hunter Shepard has decided to take an "environmental theatre" approach in which the audience participates in the production of the play. This is ingeniously done by having the seating section of the theatre become part of the stage with the performers running in and out through the audience and resting (or acting) on platforms built above the audience. In this way the environment of the play is not just limited to the stage, but to the entire theatre as well.

Also introduced in the play is Body Music, which was developed by composer David Schoenbach. The mischievous fairy Puck wears electrodes and a bio-feedback muscle-tension monitor as part of her costume on stage, which sends audio signals to a computer and synthesizer. These then turn her dance into music.

The acting in "A Midsummer's Night Dream" is excellent throughout the play. Special kudos go to Raymond A. Jacobs as Oberon and M. Daria Newenhouse as Puck, the two fairy pranksters.

Shakespeare, despite his brilliance with words, makes for relatively dull reading. However, the actors used their voices and gestures to breath life into Shakespeare's words (which were mandatory reading assignments for most of us when we were in high school).

The lighting was well done, with the humorous scenes bathed in a soft, bright light while the "heavier" scenes (which usually involved Puck and Oberon plotting some treachery) were suffused in darker, richer shades. The costumes were in keeping with the tone of the play: bright, simple, and well-done.

Under normal circumstances, Vasey Theatre is a very good place to see a play, with every seat only a few rows from the stage. It is structured like the theatres of Shakespeare's time, with the audience bordering the stage on three sides. However, Shepard's use of the "environmental theatre" improves on this, and makes the play a pleasantly personal viewing experience.

In all fairness to the excellent production, the fine costumes and lighting, and the outstanding acting, it is the playwrite who steals the show. Shakespeare's deft use of language, his humorous characters, and the timeless theme of ephemeral quality of young love make the pastoral comedy of "A Midsummer's Night Dream" as enjoyable and revelant today as it was 400 years ago.

A word to the wise: live theatre is unlike television or the movies in that listening and concentration are very important. Although the actors do an excellent job of bringing home the work's message through the use of gesture and voice, the spectator must hang on every word to fully enjoy the production. After all, the play is the thing. And if your thing is witty, engaging entertainment in a new and totally different environment, they you might want to check out "A Midsummer's Night Dream."

"A Midsummer's Night Dream" will be presented at Vasey Theatre tonight and tomorrow night, and again April 10-14. Showtime is 8 p.m. Tickets are $6 tonight and tomorrow, $5 April 10-14.

Aisle Seat for The Ballet

By ERIN GALLAGHER and KELLY O'NEILL

The Pennsylvania Ballet's program of Dance Festival '84 is a production which no dance enthusiast should miss. Under the leadership of artistic director Robert Weiss, the company provides an excellent performance complete with two premieres in addition to two favorite classics.

The show opens with a production titled, "Dvorak: The Slavonic Dances." Dvorak composed and orchestrated a set of dances for piano duet, and upon request, wrote a second set. Each has eight dances, and the Pennsylvania Ballet has chosen selections from each set for this performance.

The second portion of the show is "Swan Lake," act II (with music by Peter Ilych Tchaikovsky), which was first performed by the Pennsylvania Ballet in 1980. The Pennsylvania Ballet's new production has been restaged in the tradition of the Royal Ballet.

"Don Quixote pas de deux," with music by Ludwig Minkus, was first performed by the Pennsylvania Ballet in 1965. Based on the Cervantes novel, this pas de deux has challenged the greatest ballet dancers throughout history.

The Western Symphony was a company premiere. It is a formal Ballet which derived its flavor from the west, while remaining within the framework of the classical school. The symphonic music by Hershy Kay maintains this same form.

One of the highlights of the program is the company's version of "Swan Lake," act II. "Swan Lake" is the story of Princess Odette and her companions, the swan maidens, who under the spell of a vile sorcerer, are allowed to assume the human form only at night.

Prince Siegfried and Odette express their love, and, as dawn approaches, the Prince is powerless against the spell and is left heartbroken on the bank, gazing after the flight of swans.

Tamara Hadley's portrayal of Odette is inspiring, while William DeGregory complements her in the role of Prince Siegfried. The fluidity of movement almost seems to transform the dancers

Heavy Pettin' Gets ——A Pretty Heavy Rating

By TOM BARAN

A band with the name of Heavy Pettin' might turn some fans off, because the name sounds like the band would be just a bunch of mindless screamers. This is far from true. Heavy Pettin produces music that is going to make them a popular figure in the American music scene. Their debut album, produced by Queen's Brian May, contains songs that both pop music fans and hard rock fans will enjoy. Heavy Pettin' is a five-man band from Scotland, who, with little public exposure, have attracted a major record label to produce their album and build a loyal following of fans throughout England.

The first song on the album is a catchy tune titled, "In And Out of Love." At first, the song sounds similar to something the band Def Leppard might produce, but as the song continues it loses any similarity to that group. Lead vocalist Steve Hayman has an extremely powerful voice that is the major part of each song, but which does not overpower the listener. The song "In And Out Of Love" has a simple rhythm backed by a strong drum beat and the smooth, wide ranging vocals of Steve Hayman. This song will bring the band airplay in the United States.

A personal favorite on the album is "Love On The Run." This song is a hard-driving one that highlights the guitar playing of Gordon Bonnar and Punky Mendoza. The guitar solo is nothing extraordinary, but it shows that Bonnar and Mendoza can do a rock guitar solo while at the same time not turning pop music fans off. The backbone of this song is the drumming of Gary Moat, who sets a powerful beat complemented by some good fill-ins. This song [illegible] a fast pace which is sometimes overlooked by listeners. The two voices in the band mix well together and produce a sound that is pleasing to the ear.

The best hard-rock-rocking songs on the album are "Shout It Out" and "Hell is Beautiful." "Shout It Out" is one of the finest metal songs around. It's a complex rhythm backed, once again, by the powerful drumming of Gary Moat. This song also contains two excellent guitar solos, one each by Bonnar and Mendoza.

"Hell Is Beautiful" follows in the same pattern of "Shout It Out," without becoming too boring. What makes these two hard-driving songs special is that they are much more than just screaming guitars and loud vocals. Heavy Pettin' has succeeded in writing heavy metal songs that are not just for the avid metal "head."

Heavy Pettin's album is one that has combined melody with muscle. It is hoped that the band will continue making albums like this one and not take the road toward pop music. Heavy Pettin' has toured England with Ozzy and Kiss, and look for them to tour the United States this summer with either the Scorpions, Judas [illegible] Iron Maiden.

The Festive Pennsylvania Ballet

into graceful swans and provided a truly impressive interpretation.

One of the most exciting pieces in Dance Festival '84 is definitely the Pennsylvania Ballet's premiere of "Western Symphony," choreographed by George Balanchine. With a flavor of the old west, the dancers take the stage by storm, complete with hoots and hollers.

The energy emitted is obviously generated to the audience and makes for a superb finale.

Throughout the entire performance the Pennsylvania Orchestra maintains a fine level of excellence, while accompanying the dancer's every move. Directed by Maurice Kaplaw, these instrumentalists successfully move from Tchaikovsky, in "Swan Lake," to the music of Hershy Kay, in the "Western Symphony." This diversity is admirable, and adds to the total enjoyment of the production.

It seems that much of the success of this performance, and the overall success of the Pennsylvania Ballet Company, can be attributed to artistic director Weiss. Prior to his appointment in Philadelphia, he was noted for his work as a principal dancer for the New York City Ballet.

In addition to his dance career, Weiss is quite active as a teacher, administrator and choreographer. It has been more than a year since he began taking charge as the company's artistic director. Before this time, the Pennsylvania Ballet had been suspended from performing in the face of a large deficit that threatened the company's existence.

Although the Pennsylvania Ballet Company is only 31 members strong, its real strength lies in the enthusiasm and vitality of its members as a whole. Collectively, they provide for a most entertaining performance.

Villanova Boxing—the Unrecognized Sport

By MARION CAVITO

While the Villanova sports such as basketball and football receive all the attention of the students, there are several other clubs on campus which practice with as much dedication and enthusiasm as the rest, yet receive much less attention. One of the least-publicized sports at Villanova is boxing.

Boxing, a club sport, has done very well at Villanova despite its relative anonymity. To be eligible for collegiate boxing, a boxer cannot [illegible] than three AAU or Golden Glove bouts under his belt. This is intended to create parity on the boxing scene. But according to Villanova boxing captain John Kelly, "Generally, a lot of coaches will look past or downplay the experience of their fighters. This is to give their team an edge in competition."

Kelly, a sophomore, is probably the best of the Villanova fighters. Competing in the 132-pound weight class, Kelly won a decision over the Eastern Champion in a fight at Penn State, and at West Chester, also beat a two-time national champion who will be going for three in a row this year.

Unfortunately, Kelly lost a split decision in the first round of the Eastern finals to the eventual winner of the finals, who goes on to the NCAA Finals. The only fights Kelly has lost have been to fighters from military schools where all students must box and are well-disciplined and trained.

One major problem the team faces is continuing despite the lack of a coach. Last year's coach could not continue as a result of outside obligations. To help out, Chris Atkinson, a graduate from Dickinson, has trained with the team and acted as a coach, giving tips to the fighters whenever needed.

However, without a coach, much of the motivation must come from within. "The discipline has got to come from yourself. There is no coach to push you, especially in doing the track work," added Kelly.

Aside from Kelly, Chris Hamilton in the 139-pound weight division and Marty Kennedy in the 165-pound weight division also competed in the Eastern Finals. Unfortunately, they were both defeated in their first matches to the eventual Eastern Final champions in other respective weight categories.

Laxmen Celebrate Two Wins

By ELIAS PAPSON

This past week, the Wildcat's men's lacrosse team competed in two matches, the first against Drexel on March 28 and the second against Georgetown on March 31, and the Cats came up winners in both matches. These two victories gave the Wildcats a solid 4-1 record, their only loss coming two weeks ago against Boston College, 6-3.

In the first match, against the prevailing inclement conditions last Wednesday, the Cats comfortably defeated Drexel by 7-4. In this match, the Cats possessed a very balanced attack with seven players contributing one goal apiece. Along with their goals, Kenneth Delgatto and Mike Ruopoli both assisted on two goals. For Delgatto, this performance increased his personal scoring records to six goals and six assists. Goalie Drew Cunningham made eight saves while allowing the four goals. His goals-against-average dropped from 5.0 to 4.75, while his saves-to-total shots ratio decreased from .750 to .736.

In the second match, the Wildcats walked away with a convincing 10-1 victory over Georgetown. John Haggarty was instrumental, scoring three goals, while Paul Campanelli added two more. This year, Haggerty has scored in all five games — and has averaged 2.2 goals per game in accumulating a team-leading 11 goals. Ruopoli contributed a hefty four assists while also scoring one goal.

Cunningham, who has also played in all five games, made 11 saves this game while allowing just one goal. This performance enabled his goals-against-average to drop to 4.0 per game, while his saves-to-total shots ratio increased to .762.

Powerlifting—The Morning After

By MARY AGNES MATYSZEWSKI

Villanova's powerlifting team was recently the proud host of the 1984 National Collegiate Powerlifting Championships. Various members of the men's team competed in this prestigious event. Recently, they shared their thoughts and reactions about the contest.

The various members of the squad were psyched up for the championships and, although they eagerly awaited the competition, the Nova squad faced a tough two days in which they were subjected to many ups and downs, lows and highs.

Lee Gallagher competed in the 242-pound weight class and received a fifth-place finish, but did not make the qualifying totals — a feat which only three other athletes in his weight class accomplished.

In the 165-pound weight class, sophomore Rick Nelson for the second year in a row was hurt on his first squat and had to withdraw from the competition. His injury was a result of the aggravation of an injury which he had incurred over Christmas.

Also in the 165's was Marty Murphy. Here, too, was disappointment, as the junior was disqualified from the squatting competition. According to Murphy, "The judging was tough. My first squat was poor and that was my fault. My second attempt my coach said was fine, but the judges said no, and for my third try I moved my weight up to ensure that I'd make the qualifying total for the meet, but I couldn't lift it, so I was out."

Competing in the 114-pound weight class was former Budweiser Athlete of the Week John Padova. This talented athlete received a third-place finish. However, according to Padova, "I thought that I could have done better. I could have gotten second place if I'd gone nine-for-nine (nine completions out of nine attempts), but I didn't get all of my lifts in." Padova also commented on how tough the judging was.

Finally, in the 220-pound weight class was captain Pete Aninos. Here is a story of a true athlete in every sense of the word. This senior is one who doesn't believe in settling for second best; he believes in "going for the gold." However, he learned the hard way the disappointment that can also occur when striving for his high ideal. Aninos' major competition was a junior world champion, and so he knew that the best he could hope for was second place. But, he did not wish to compete in an event with this attitude. He wanted the gold, or he wanted nothing at all.

As a result, he began to lose weight to drop down to the 198's. However, losing this weight hurt him more than he had expected, and three weeks before the championships, he injured his back. This injury placed him in traction and out of competition in the crucial weeks preceding nationals. According to the senior, "I was never able to sink my squats after hurting my back; I just could never go low enough. In addition, the night before my lifts, I lost too much weight and this really threw my whole system out of whack. The whole reason I attended the championships was because I wanted to place first, but it didn't pay off. It was an expensive lesson."

Also in the 220's was Brian Nibbelink, who placed seventh, and Dan Wagner, who took sixth place in the 180 weight class.

Overall the squad had very favorable reactions to the competition. In their opinion, "It has opened a lot of people's eyes up to what the sport of powerlifting is all about. Most people don't realize the concentration that is involved, and this demonstrated it to them."

They were also very pleased with the Villanova community's reaction. "We received a lot of cooperation from everyone. The athletic department was really great, and the fan support was fabulous. Our coach did a great job. Head coach Joe Slabinski really knows how to organize, and our meet was very well run."

And about next year? "We're only losing one lifter (Aninos). The team has a strong foundation and there's no reason why we can't win next year."

Rugby Plays In To

Beat Lafayette in Finale

By JOHN CHAMBERLIN

The Villanova rugby team once again proved that it was a force to be reckoned within tournament play, as it defeated Lafayette by 13-3 this past weekend at Penn's first annual April Fool's Tournament. The tournament was comprised of four teams: Penn, Lafayette, West Chester and Villanova.

"We were a team united; we knew that even before we started playing."
— Senior Flanker Dmetrius Kalamaras

In the first round Villanova was pitted against a young but solid West Chester side. As the morning wore on, so did the game for the West Chester ruggers, and it was clear to see that Villanova was in complete control. Brian Fisher, an explosive outside center, continually smashed his way through the opposition for a total of two tries. The speed of Greg Bernocco remained unchallenged all game as he scurried for two tries as well. The mid-morning thrashing continued with fullback Bo Minogue and flanker Tom Murphy each scoring tries. By high noon the 36-6 rout was over.

With an impressive opening victory, the Villanova ruggers settled down to watch a quick Penn side battle an aggressive Lafayette team. It was Lafayette's size and endurance that proved to be the decisive factors in its win. It was decided; Villanova would meet Lafayette on the worn-out pitch.

The first half was marked by close hard play and ended with the score at 0-0. Although the Villanova forwards were outsized, they played together as a tight and strong unit. The backs also played a superb defensive game, matching the Lafayette backs throughout.

During the second half, things started happening for Villanova. Kroter Ritz, a speedy winger, broke a tackle and shot across the try line for the first four points.

Flyhalf James Verner was definitely not happy with the marginal lead. So with less than seven minutes left he shook off a Lafayette defender and scampered in for another four points. Mark Elia converted penalty kick and the other conversion points. "We were a team united; we knew that even before we started playing," commented senior flanker Dmetrius Kalamaras.

Softball Wins Opener

By JOE KELLER

After having their first two games postponed because of the weather and bad field conditions, Villanova's women's softball team opened their season on Monday against the Engineers of Lehigh University, soundly defeating them 8-0.

The Wildcats got on the scoreboard early in the second inning. One-out singles by Dona Hurley and Andrea Lair and consecutive walks to Noreen Cygler and Cathy Ford produced the first Wildcat run. A Lehigh error, a single by Lori Bukaty and Kathy Byrnes getting hit by a pitch helped produce three more runs for the Cats to give them a 4-0 lead.

Nova added two more runs in the fourth inning, which started off with a walk to Cygler and a single by Ford, which moved Cygler to third. The Wildcats then attempted a double steal and were successful, as Cygler stole home and Ford took second, giving Villanova a 5-0 lead. Another Lehigh error scored Ford.

Another successful double steal in the fifth inning produced the seventh Wildcat run. Andrea Lair singled with one out and stole second. Another single by Ford moved Lair to third, who then stole home while Ford stole second.

The Wildcats scored their final run in the seventh inning on a walk to Lair. A pinch runner, Katie McEvoy, was brought in for Lair and promptly stole second. A single by Alix Zuckowsky moved McEvoy to third. McEvoy then scored on a passed ball by the Lehigh catcher to make the final score, 8-0.

Junior pitcher Bonnie Bell

Villanova pitcher Bonnie Bell had a fine outing, allowing just four hits the entire game. The Engineers were never much of a threat throughout, getting a runner as far as third only twice, only to have the Wildcat defense shut them down. "It was a good defensive game," commented assistant coach Cheryl Massaro. "The team played very well."

Men's Tennis Jars Jersey Foes

By RODGER VAN ALLEN

If April is anything like March, the Villanova men's tennis team will have difficulty finishing up the season. However, the Wildcats' already grueling schedule has been eased by the rain, as they now set off on a 16-match series.

Nova started things off right with two recent wins over Rutgers-Camden — 6-1 on March 31 — and Trenton State — 9-0 — on April 2.

The Cats dominated Rutgers, winning the first through the sixth singles and losing only the first doubles. Leading the Cats was junior Larry Gallen, who won in two sets by 6-1 and 7-5. Senior captain Jon Lee led the second singles position, also winning in two sets by 6-4 and 6-2. Other winners for Nova were Mike Parks, Pete Russell, Jim Mattutat and Anthony Amendolo, capturing the third through sixth positions respectively.

In the doubles, the Cats took the second and third positions behind the combinations of Amendolo and Pat McClone and Nick Montfort and Stan Sydnor.

"We're definitely stronger in the doubles than we were last year," commented sophomore Pete Russell. "Whenever it's going to be close in the singles, we'll probably do well in the doubles."

"The season has gone very well and the guys have worked hard."
— Coach Langran

The Cats then rolled on to a clean sweep over Trenton State, 9-0. Leading Nova once again was Gallen and returning senior Bill Harahan.

Other winners for the Wildcats included Lee, sophomore Wayne Simone, Parks and Russell.

Nova swept the doubles as well behind the duos of Harahan and Miller, Amendolo and McClone, and Montfort and Sydnor.

Coach Robert Langran commented: "The season has gone very well and the guys have worked hard. It's a tough week for us. But once we get through it, the bulk of the season will be over."

The match against Trenton St. began a series of 10 straight contests that will not be completed until right before Easter break. It includes such top schools as Lehigh, St. Joseph's, West Chester, not to mention Fordham and St. John's, who offer scholarships.

"We've had an unusually rainy season, but still a very promising one," said Langran. "We're very optimistic."

Pete Russell added: "The changes in the line-up are for the better and we should definitely continue to win more."

Villanova Nine Tames Lions

By JAMES H. DeLORENZO

Winning isn't everything. But when you haven't won a ballgame in a week, it sure counts for something.

Villanova's varsity baseball team, finishing up a brutally tough month of March, took two straight victories earlier this week to improve their record to 5-14.

Last Saturday, the Nova nine tamed the Lions of Trenton State in a come-from-behind 9-8 victory.

Trailing 7-2 in the sixth inning, the Wildcats collected five runs to tie it up. Junior rightfielder Dan Mostardi's single started the rally; he was followed by senior second baseman Ray Paparella's single. Then, Chuck Bruno, also a junior outfielder, singled them both home.

Catcher Jim Kane, a sophomore, walked, and senior third baseman Steve Fay singled; then Jerry Holtz' double cleared the bases.

In the eighth inning, Holtz, a junior shortstop, stepped to the plate with Fay already hugging first. On the first pitch, Holtz drove the ball 390 feet to dead centerfield for a two-run homer. Nova took the lead for good, 9-8.

Steve Zolner, a sophomore righthander, picked up the win, while rookie righthander Bob Craskey notched the save. Zolner boosted his record to 1-4.

Mostardi had a great day at the plate, batting three-for-three, with a double, two walks and a stolen base, while Holtz collected five RBI's.

The Wildcats started April on a winning note, as they slew the Dragons of Drexel, 8-1. Sophomore hurler Russell Gianforcaro, a lefty, gained his first collegiate win, striking out nine, and allowing seven hits in nine innings. Gianforcaro's record is now 1-4.

Bruno's bat was again a factor for Nova, as he hit three-for-four, with four RBI's. Junior outfielder Jim White also went three-for-four against Drexel.

Villanova put it all together in the two games — the pitching was strong, the Cats hit well, and defensively, only commimtted two errors.

And while winning isn't everything, the Main Liners now know that it can't hurt, either.

MAIN LINE DIAMOND DUST: Holtz, after 18 games, still leads the Villanova nine with a .402 batting average . . . His homer versus Trenton State was the fifth of the season, and the 16th of his career . . . Holtz is now tied with former great Bill Duryea for the all-time Villanova home run record . . .

The Cats were scheduled to play Lafayette and St. Joseph's earlier this week, and will play Georgetown tomorrow at home . . . Game time is 2 p.m. at Charles A. McGeehan field.

Lacrosse Competes in Delaware

By MICHELE NAPOLI

Last weekend the women's lacrosse team traveled to the Delaware Tournament, whence they came home with a 5-5 record.

The tournament lasted the whole weekend and consisted of a series of "mini-games" played on both Saturday and Sunday.

On Saturday, Nova won four out of the six mini-games played. Victories came against Lock Haven (4-2), East Stroudsburg (6-3), Washington Club II (4-1) and North Club (1-0). Nova defeated the North Jersey Club on a result of a forfeit. The team then ended their first day with a 4-2 record.

With much anticipation for Sunday's games, the Wildcats went in with a very positive attitude. However, despite Villanova's efforts, the Cats won only one of their four games. This victory came against Oberlin College by a score of 2-1.

According to team manager Bob Heller, "The team played very well throughout the whole weekend."

The tournament then lost on forfeits against Lock Haven, Washington Club II and North Jersey Club players. The Wildcats even managed to score against the United States' A squad's goalie over the weekend. The Baltimore Club consisted mostly of United States' players, which might account for Nova's loss on Sunday against the Baltimore Club I team.

In weekend play, the Cats gave up 25 goals, while scoring only seven. Their opponents scored 27 goals against Villanova. Of the seven goals scored by the Wildcats, five were scored by freshman midfielder Kathy Hoffman.

The season's improvement over the season is obvious, though. Only a few weeks ago, the Cats were losing by double digits to Villanova student-athletes.

This week's honored Budweiser Athlete is John Haggarty of the lacrosse team.

Looking at his performances, one can see why Coach Marks calls him a "quality player." "With a 4-1 record so far, the team is off to one of the finest seasons of its history, and John has definitely been a contributing factor," said Marks.

In the first five games of the season, Haggarty has accumulated 11 goals and one assist, scoring three goals in games against Western Maryland, Michigan State and Georgetown.

Last year, Haggarty received the Cat's Most Valuable Player award. His 38 goals and scoring average of 3.455 ranked him ninth in the NCAA statistics. But what does the future hold for this junior? To date he has 69 recorded goals and may possibly break the 100-point career goal mark set by Bill Hook from 1977-80. Coach Marks believes in this athlete's potential, but he and Haggarty stress the importance of team goals and not individual performances.

"Even though it's an honor to be named Budweiser Athlete, I feel as though I am representing a team effort. Without the team, goals don't mean a thing," says Haggarty.

Making the dean's list as an engineer and leading the team in most goals scored, Haggarty has quite a load on his shoulders. But he seems to handle it well. Villanova student-athlete.

Luke Nolan Elected in Run-Off

By GARY R. DYER

Luke Nolan was elected student body president in the April 10 run-off election, taking 1,096 votes (55.63 percent) to Mike Ryan's 874 votes (44.37 percent).

Nolan, a junior finance major from Kensington, Md., won 668 votes (34.83 percent) in the April 5 election, while Ryan took 671 (34.8 percent). A candidate must receive a 40 percent plurality to be elected.

Dennis McKithen received 359 votes (18.72 percent). Mark Rupprecht took 220 votes (11.47 percent).

Concerning his victory Nolan said, "I was very surprised. I knew it was going to be very close. I felt very confident last week, and was surprised that it turned out with only a three-vote difference. But I put in my platform in the Villanovan, 'Your vote is significant.'

"I think the weather was on our side today," Nolan commented. "I think Balloon Day helped the campaign a great deal. We were fortunate to receive such a high voter turnout, which for a run-off election you wouldn't expect.

"I think people saw how my people work and saw how I will carry myself as future student body president."

The candidates were granted $25 budget extensions for the run-off election campaign.

Senate Election Results

Elected Arts senators were Doug McKeever (331 votes), David Thieman (312 votes) and Mike Carberry (286 votes). A write-in candidate, Banita Wilson, received 67 votes after a two-day campaign.

Joseph F. Conlan (265 votes) and Tom DeVita (189 votes) won seats as Commerce and Finance senators. Mark T. Elia received 132 votes and was followed by Nancy Sue Smith (114 votes), Stephen J. Hanley (100 votes), John M. Burgess (98 votes), Michael Mirabelli (92 votes), Suzanne Mitchell (86 votes), Tim Hanlon (81 votes), Ed Walton (79 votes), David Kniffin (56 votes) and David Steele (18 votes).

Jimmy Bergin took the Engineering senatorial seat with 148 votes, followed by John Bishop (61 votes) and Tom Cahill (33 votes).

Janine Alfano was re-elected as Nursing senator with 130 votes.

Student Body President-elect Luke Nolan.

John Hickey won the seat as Science senator with 127 votes.

John McGee was elected University College senator with 32 votes. A write-in candidate, Esther Cavanaugh, received 20 votes.

'The Proper Channels'

Nolan plans to institute a Villanova Association of Students (V.A.S.), a monthly information session. "The Villanova Association of students would be a forum for senators and representatives of the various student organizations, as well as students who aren't really represented by any of those organizations."

"Although the senators have hours posted, many of the students just don't wander up to the second floor of Dougherty Hall," Nolan observed. "Offices do tend to turn people off. It would be better if they could just go to the Villanova Room, or the Field House, or some other place."

"I think students should get involved, and we can change the apathetic attitude that students have presently," Nolan said.

"If students want things done, they have to be done through the proper channels," Nolan said. "The V.A.S. would be that one more channel for them to communicate their feelings."

During the next week Nolan will be conferring with the current officers of the student government. "I'll be talking to the people in office, seeing how they feel about what they've worked on, seeing what things they feel need to be finished."

Nolan will be preparing for his new position during the summer. "I'll be on campus attending summer classes, so I'll have a chance to make up for the time I've lost in the experience aspect of how the actual procedures are."

Nolan plans to name his vice presidents within the week. He has high expectations for the new student government. "I think the senators, although a few of them won uncontested, are willing to do the work."

Social Life

The main issue Nolan sees ahead is social life. "I would like to see it if the students didn't have to fall back on traveling around for parties," he explained.

"Ninety-five percent of the freshmen next year will be living on campus, and the freshmen really can't get around, because they're not allowed to have cars."

"I would like to see the two-party-per-wing social program re-enacted," Nolan said, stressing that all social functions must observe the Pennsylvania age requirements for the serving of alcohol. "We're not asking the administration to break the law; then again, we're not asking them to police the law."

Luke Nolan	668 votes (34.83%)
Dennis McKithen	359 votes (18.72%)
Mark Rupprecht	220 votes (11.47%)

Nolan is Grand Knight of the Villanova chapter of the Knights of Columbus, a member of the men's rugby team and the assistant coach of the women's rugby team.

Nolan gave much of the credit for his victory to his campaign workers, some of whom had been planning with him since the beginning of the academic year. "Greg Noone and Kim Kramer really committed themselves to the campaign, as did all of my supporters."

No penalties were assessed against any of the presidential candidates, and there were no major irregularities confirmed.

Tunnel Flooding Continues

By ANTHONY EDWARDS

Questions concerning the commuter tunnel linking St. Mary's to the rest of campus have once again been raised in the wake of the recent heavy rainfall in the region.

After the recent storm, over one and a half feet of water remained in the tunnel, prompting the Southeastern Pennsylvania Transportation Authority (SEPTA) to close the tunnel and forcing students to cross the Route 320 bridge to reach St. Mary's and the Law School.

Leo Baldwin, SEPTA supervisor of suburban stations, said his men were working to alleviate the situation. "[SEPTA workers] were out there pumping from 8 a.m. on for twelve and one-half hours on Thursday, and they're out there again today [April 6]."

The problem, according to Baldwin, is twofold. First, there is insufficient drainage in the tunnel. "Even though we have two pumps working, they aren't nearly enough to get the job done quickly or effectively. Right now, we just don't have the money to order newer, bigger pumps."

The second involves the location of the water table, which lies below the tunnel. "We don't know exactly where the water table begins," said Baldwin. "When and if we find it, we can try to prevent any other occurrences like these from happening again."

The problem is not a new one, according to Baldwin. "This has been happening for the past two years. Last Easter Sunday, for example, we had men out there pumping for over twelve hours trying to remove the surface water," he said.

The maintenance of the tunnel itself is the responsibility of SEPTA; however, Amtrak, which owns the property and leases it to SEPTA on a thirty-year basis, is responsible for any other problems, including the flooding situation, noted Baldwin. Amtrak refused to comment about the situation.

The railroad pedestrian tunnel.

Some repairs were done earlier in the year, but none of them were related to the flooding problem. "We painted the walls [of the tunnel] and did some other things, including the installation of signs on the platforms. We wanted to try to handle the flooding problem, but the money just wasn't there," said Baldwin.

SEPTA's plans for the tunnel include locating the water table and then the installation of some larger pumps. According to Baldwin, "This would take, maybe, $60,000, but it just isn't in the budget this year. Maybe it will be in the 1985 budget, maybe it won't."

For now, though, the pumping continues. "The current plan is to pump the surface water in the tunnel to the bank of the nearby creek and let it run off into the creek," explained Baldwin. Still, even after work on Friday, the tunnel was not free of water. (Continued on page 3)

Villanovan

The Villanovan's final edition of the school year will be on April 27, the second reading day before finals. Be sure to pick up a copy at the usual locations.

Secretary's Day Mass

On April 25 at noon in the Main Chapel there will be a Mass for the secretaries on campus. All are welcome.

New Courses

The Department of Classical Studies wishes to announce the following course offering for Summer 1984: Latin, 153-1001-20 and Latin, 153-1002-20, worth three credits each. Elementary Latin I and II taught consecutively July 5-25 and July 26-August 15. One or both courses may be taken; together they constitute a full year of introductory Latin. Courses will be taught by Dr. Effie Coughanowr.

Computer Society Elections

What do you and Walter Mondale have in common? On April 17 at 12:30 p.m. in the West Lounge, Dougherty, you may be able to say that you are both seeking elected office. At that time, the Villanova student chapter of the ACM will be holding its first election meeting. As this is a new organization, no previous experience is necessary. All that is required is dedication to a cause. Positions to be filled include chairman, vice-chairman, treasurer and secretary. Anyone interested in running for a position is asked to present a short, informal speech. For more information, contact Steve Johnson at 525-9151.

Sunshine Day

Tomorrow is our annual Sunshine Day. It will be held at St. Mary's, rain or shine. All volunteers should be at St. Mary's by 9:30 a.m. to prepare for the arrival of the children. Thanks for your cooperation.

Lifeguard

Two lifeguard positions available at a local hotel pool, Memorial Day to Labor Day. Includes weekends. Hours great for summer-school students. In-person applications with Daniel Unger, athletic trainer, in the field house.

Commencement Ushers

Anyone interested in ushering for any of the commencement ceremonies on May 12 and 13, contact Christine Stark in the Villanova Union office or call 645-7220 by April 18. First come, first serve basis.

Pulsations

Villanova night at Pulsations! Senior Week, May 9, four days until graduation. The evening begins with a sit-down dinner (including choice of entree), followed by Pulsations very own Broadway show. Then from 9:30 p.m.-2 a.m. there will be Pulsations' famous night club featuring free buffet and two for one refreshments for Villanova students only. All this plus free round-trip transportation for only $20. Tickets must be purchased before April 25 and are available in the Connelly Center ticket office.

Semester in Spain

There will be an informational meeting for the Villanova 'Semester in Spain' program this Monday and Tuesday. This short slide show and answer period is open to all interested majors and will explain how to earn 15 credits as well as a minor in Spanish. (For information on the time and place drop into the Modern Language Department, second floor, St. Thomas Monestary).

Help Wanted

Any underclassmen interested in being hired to assist in the distribution of caps and gowns for the 1984 graduation ceremonies, please contact the Dean of Students Office, Dougherty 213. Assistants will be paid for their services.

Spring Review

Villanova's NROTC Unit will have its annual Spring Review on April 14 at noon in the stadium. The unit's drill team, Whiskey Company, will be performing, as well as the Band Company. Anyone interested in the ROTC's are encouraged to come out and see the unit!

Library Cooperation

Socializing and talking in the library continue to disturb students who want to use Falvey for serious purposes. The Library Director, Dr. Mary Ann Griffith has arranged with Security to more effectively monitor building use, especially in the evenings when noise problems occur more frequently. Mr. Rowan Kelly, director of security, explains that his staff members have been instructed to approach students whose behavior is inappropriate to the library setting. Both Mr. Kelly and Dr. Griffith ask everyone to cooperate in the attempt to create a library environment conducive to quiet work and reading.

Debate on Policy in Nicaragua

By BRIAN D. WEBB

The International Law Society and the National Lawyer's Guild sponsored a symposium April 5 at the Villanova School of Law to discuss the legal and political aspects of Nicaraguan and U.S. policy.

"The Reagan administration thinks everything is communist; and we are not a communist country," said Amilcar Navarro, the first secretary of the Embassy of Nicaragua to the United States. Navarro added that he would like to see all U.S. aid to the anti-government Contras stopped immediately.

"We cannot fight bullets with the Bible," said Navarro in an interview after his presentation. "We must fight the same way that [the Contras] do. This is the reality." Navarro feels that the war will continue to escalate on both sides unless the United States stops aiding the Contras.

According to Navarro, the Reagan administration is too concerned with special interest groups. Navarro feels that there would be a "much better chance of communication" between Nicaragua and the United States if there were another administration now in control.

The second speaker was Allan Gerson, special assistant to Jeanne Kirkpatrick, the permanent representative of the United States to the United Nations. Gerson began his presentation by stating that Navarro was "way off base. Any reasonable observer can see that the situation is more complex."

"There are three basic premises of U.S. policy for Central America," said Gerson. According to the U.N. representative, the first premise is a bipartisan belief, supported by the Kissinger Commission, that the "Central American and Caribbean regions are vital to U.S. national security."

The second premise is that it "would be bad for the United States and Central America if the countries of Central America are forced into defeat by guerrilla movements."

The third premise concerns the fact that there are "insurgencies into El Salvador, [illegible] foreign governments.

"The confines of law are different than the confines of politics," stated Gerson. According to him, there are four political parties involved in the struggle for Nicaragua: the U.S.S.R., Nicaragua, the Contras and the United States.

According to Gerson, the Soviets want the countries of Central America to "integrate into the Soviet formula."

Gerson added that the government of Nicaragua apparently wants the same thing. He disagreed with Navarro and said, "Look at the facts . . . 95 percent of the time Nicaragua sides with the Soviets in U.N. voting."

According to Gerson, the United States and the Contras both have a common goal: democracy in Nicaragua. Gerson said, "The guerrillas in Nicaragua want first and foremost free elections." Gerson does not believe that the current Nicaraguan government is receptive to this plea. Gerson said, "Mr. Navarro did not point out the fact that Nicaragua has not had free elections yet."

The third speaker was Dr. Arthur Schmidt, an associate professor of Latin American history at Temple University. Schmidt tried to look at the facts of the Nicaragua situation from an impartial perspective.

"Central America is a young region," said Schmidt. Half of the population of Nicaragua is less than 15 years old." Schmidt feels that the civil war has left the country "handicapped."

"It is important to realize that this is a revolution region," stated Schmidt. "Arms flows are not the cause of the insurgencies."

Schmidt added, however, that the Contras "would not be alive today without aid from the United States."

Schmidt feels that the situation in Central America comes down to the basic question: "Who do you believe? What do you think?"

No Charge for Campus Mailboxes

By PAULA SOLLAMI

Villanova will be implementing a new mailroom policy next fall. There will no longer be a five dollar rental fee for post office boxes, which will be assigned to all on-campus residents upon the students' arrival at the University.

All current residents will retain their boxes, and new summer residents will be able to obtain them for the summer, free of charge.

"The University was just not in time with other colleges and universities in the country with this rental fee," stated Harry D. Gray, director of central services at Villanova.

The Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, gave additional reasons for this change. Some students were apparently discouraged by the five dollar rental charge and decided to forego obtaining a box. This made it difficult for the school and for friends and relatives to contact these students.

Gray added, "Charging for the boxes was a general inconvenience to everyone. The money the school received did not compensate the effort put forth by the post office and by the students in applying and re-applying for boxes, so we decided to do away with the charge altogether."

Along with the no charge policy and instant assignment to a mailbox upon residency, Stack stated that the University is going to crack down on the non-residents who hold on to their boxes after they have moved off-campus. He stated, "There are problems with this because there are not enough boxes for all of the residents when this occurs.

"I would like to see all O.C.R.'s and residents with boxes on campus in the near future so that the University and relatives of the students will be able to contact them immediately in time of an emergency," said Stack.

He added that this will possibly happen if new Post Office boxes are installed along with the new dining facility to be built on Villanova's south campus.

Gray added that this is a good idea. However, "presently there is no place to put the boxes in the new dining hall," he remarked.

"As it now stands, students move off-campus their junior year and change residency senior year without informing the University of this change," noted Stack. These problems would be alleviated if there were enough boxes for all students on-campus.

The steering committee for the 1984 New Student Orientation Program is hopeful that, with the new mailroom policy, freshmen will know their college addresses before they leave for Villanova. This proposal is expected to be submitted to the Residence Life office in the near future, according to Stack.

Seminar on Lebanese Crisis on Monday

By ROBERT M. JORDAN

Although Lebanon has been involved in a civil war since 1975, the situation becomes more complex with each passing day. Villanova's Institute for Contemporary Arab and Islamic Studies is holding a free public seminar on the Lebanon crisis at 3 p.m. on Monday in the library of St. Mary's Hall.

The program, entitled "A Seminar on Lebanon: Crucible or Crossroads," will feature the varying perspectives of six experts on the Mideast political situation, following an opening welcome by the Rev. John O'Malley, O.S.A., dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

George Siam, counselor of political affairs at the Embassy of Lebanon in Washington, D.C., will explain the situation in Lebanon from the Lebanese government's point of view.

Marius Deeb, a representative of Georgetown University's Center for Contemporary Arab Studies, will discuss Syria's role in Lebanon and its strategic interests in the embattled land. Palestine's role in Lebanon after the withdrawal of the PLO will be addressed by Rashid Khalidi, also of Georgetown University's Center for Contemporary Arab Studies.

During the final presentation, two speakers will address the topic, "United States Policy in Lebanon: Two Perspectives." Two participants will be Judith Kipper, of the American Enterprise Institute in Washington, D.C., and William Stanton, Lebanon Desk Officer, Bureau of Near Eastern and South Asian Affairs, U.S. Department of State.

Kipper is a Resident Fellow at the American Enterprise Institute (AEI) "think-tank" in the capitol. She serves as an emcee in a series of seminars that have been giving the AEI an increasingly visible role in the public debate over the United States' Middle East policies. Bruce Stanley, representing the University of Pennsylvania Middle East Center, will make the closing remarks.

According to the Rev. Kail Ellis, O.S.A., director of Villanova's Institute for Arab and Islamic Studies, the purpose of this seminar is to shed some light on the happenings in Lebanon and inform the public about events there. Ellis, whose parents were born in Lebanon, said, "The situation is very confusing. In the newspapers there is a lot of talk as to who is to blame for the United States' failure to bring peace to Lebanon — the president or Congress. The speakers will expand on this and the other issues involved."

Villanova established the Institute for Contemporary Arab and Islamic Studies in September. Dr. Hafeez Malik, professor of political science at Villanova and a faculty member of the Institute, said the program was developed because the University has a "nucleus of faculty with expertise in the area of Arab and Islamic Studies. We wanted to give the undergraduates an opportunity to be exposed to this knowledge."

Villanova Student Wins Journalism Fellowship

Joseph Marusak, the editor-in-chief of the Villanovan, has been chosen to participate in this summer's program in News-writing and Editing at the Poynter Institute for Media Studies in St. Petersburg, Fla.

The program runs from June 11-July 20 and is tuition free. Additionally, Marusak has been offered a fellowship of $1,250 by the Institute.

The course will involve both classroom sessions and writing assignments. The Institute owns the controlling stock of the St. Petersburg Times publishing company. Because of the Institute's special relationship with the paper, students in the news-writing program can utilize the Times' library, as well as call upon the editors and reporters of the newspaper as professional resources.

In addition, students will be able to offer their best work to the Times for publication.

The program and its relationship to the newspaper offer students a mix of theory and practice felt to be unmatched in [illegible] according to the [illegible] of the Institute, Ray [illegible]

Special Olympics Officials Named

By AMELIA McGOVERN

The vice chairpersons and Games Committee chairpersons for the 1984 Special Olympics were announced this week.

The adviser for Special Olympics is Gary Bonas, assistant director of Student Activities. The student chairperson is Sil Lutkewitte and the alumni adviser is Maria Rullo.

The vice chairpersons are Marie Foody, John Hartner and Mike Guarnieri.

"The primary purpose of Special Olympics is to give the athletes a sense of accomplishment for their hard work and dedication, which they have invested in preparing for the games. This program enables the mentally retarded to grow spiritually and emotionally," explained Foody.

Foody continues, "The athletes are provided with an opportunity to develop a healthy relationship between themselves and their family, friends and community."

Hartner commented, "It is not a one-way affair. The students grow in the feeling of camaraderie and feeling of helping his fellow man."

Foody said, "Villanova has a secondary purpose for Special Olympics which we feel is of equal importance. The purpose is to allow V.U. students to develop community awareness and to appreciate the unique talents of an individual. These talents may vary in degree and completely, but each is nonetheless a thing of value."

"I'm very happy; I think I can do a lot to organize and help the event to be a great success as it has been in the past," said Hartner.

Tunnel Flooding

Saturday, wooden boards had been placed there to allow people to walk in the tunnel. the boards covered approximately three-quarters of the tunnel, while the rest of the distance was walkable.

The tunnel is now damp, but people can normally pass through it. Baldwin expressed concern about the problem, but again pointed to the fact that there is a lack of money to alleviate the situation.

Problems with the tunnel began when it was built. Since then, these have worsened annually. Adding to the problem is the fact that no one remembers who built the tunnel. According to SEPTA's public relations department, the city of Philadelphia constructed the tunnel. However, a representative of the city engineers refuted that claim, stating it was built by Montgomery or Delaware counties.

Amtrak, which owns the property, denied that they are responsible for its upkeep. According to an Amtrak representative, "[the tunnel] is leased, but no one knows who runs it, even though we own the property."

SEPTA, which is responsible for the day-to-day maintenance of the tunnel, is not responsible for the long-term repairs, according to Baldwin. That category of repairs falls under the [illegible] and construction committee of Amtrak.

Voter Apathy

In the April 5 student government election, 1,918 votes were cast for the four presidential candidates. There were about 9,200 students eligible to vote. That means only about one fifth of the students bothered to exercise their right to determine the path of student government for the next year.

That's disappointing. Maybe not surprising, but disappointing. This apathy is not some abstraction, but has concrete effects on all of us. The knowledge that only 1,970 people voted in the run-off April 10 doesn't help much, either.

It's also disappointing that so few people ran for office. There were three names on the ballot for the three Art senatorial seats, one for the Engineering position, one for Nursing and one for Science.

In the "On Campus" section of the March 30 Villanovan several students were asked to assess the effectiveness of the current student government. With the exception of one student, all demonstrated their apathy toward the governmental process at Villanova. Is this attitude an indictment of the Leahy administration? No. "On Campus" one year ago recorded similar reactions to Paul Tufano's administration.

The main misconception about student government is that, to the average student, it makes no difference who fills the positions. Many people think the jobs are simply resume-fatteners for a few overachievers. But Patrick Leahy, Paul Tufano and Bob Rosengarth have had different issues, different concepts of their job and different effects on the students.

This year's election presented the voters with a choice for student body president. The serious candidates did not have the same opinions, the same background or the same leadership ability.

The issue of student non-involvement was brought up, albeit indirectly, by the candidates. Luke Nolan stated, "Too many students are unfamiliar as to who their senators are and their office hours." He mentioned the need for "a community of students rather than many separate entities."

Communication — in some way the theme of all the candidates — is the product of a sense of involvement and commitment. This sense is a bit too thin at Villanova.

GARY R. DYER

Food Service?

If we examine Villanova's food service, we will undoubtedly come up empty-handed. By considering the amount of money spent and the limited variety and poor quality of the food offered, we will be convinced of its many deficiencies.

The service provides little or no alternative to the traditional "meat and potatoes" dinner meal. At many other schools, both large and small, it is customary to have a vegetarian cafeteria or at least a vegetarian meal as an alternative.

Secondly, the salad bar lacks many staple items to compensate for the meat alternative oversight. There are no beans or nuts to substitute for the protein lacking in a vegetarian diet.

The vegetables are often rotten or beyond the point of semi-enjoyable consumption. It may seem trivial, but to the salad-eater, a choice of six creamy-style dressings simply defeats the purpose of eating salad: watching calories.

The meat problem occurs again at lunch, during which beef stock soups are served with luncheon meat sandwiches. In addition, one flavor of jelly for the "old stand-by" peanut butter and jelly is offered. Pity the person who does not like grape jelly.

Eating habits formed when one is 18-22 are often ones likely to remain throughout life. The amount of butter used on everything from vegetables to fish alone far exceeds the necessary cholesterol level of the average adult. One should consider the amount of salt dumped on everything that is cooked in the kitchens.

It is not asking too much, for $3,430 a year for room and board, to be able to decide how much butter or salt one wants on one's vegetables. It is not asking too much for cereal to be available for dinner. Neither is it asking very much for something as simple as two flavors of jelly, non-creamy salad dressing or edible vegetables.

We are what we eat; does the V.U. Food Service realize that?

Letters to the Editor

The Sandinista Question

To the Editor:

Since the 1979 revolution in Nicaragua, an increasing and disturbing number of that country's civilians have been systematically oppressed by the ruling Sandinista government. This regime, which is becoming increasingly allied to the Soviet Union, originally promised to be a broad-based representative government. Instead, it has followed the classic Communist approach and become a totalitarian government serving only a select minority in the country.

We here at Villanova have been exposed, through the classroom and the general media, to the dangers of this Soviet-allied government. However, little coverage or attention is given to the blatant human rights violations the Sandinista government internally perpetuates against its own people.

On April 16 at 8 p.m. in the Haverford Room of the Connelly Center, Alvaro Montalvan, a young Nicaraguan whose family's home was burned by the Sandinistas, will speak on the domestic and international situation regarding Nicaragua. He will be joined by Jose Baldizon, a student leader from the democratically governed country of Costa Rica, who also will speak on the situation in Central America.

This is a rare opportunity for students to hear first-hand the situation of what's going on in our neighboring countries.

Response

To the Editor:

I am glad that people read my recent op-ed on Mr. Mark Rupprecht's campaign for student body president. However, I would like to respond to some recent letters printed in this paper.

Why shouldn't the Villanovan endorse a candidate? It is every newspaper's right, in fact its obligation, to present news and editorial opinion relevant to its audience. The Villanovan endorsed Mike Ryan for what I am sure were valid reasons.

I did not use this paper for any personal vendetta I may or may not have with Mark Rupprecht. I have nothing against him personally. But in my experience with him, both as a writer and as a reader of his letters to this paper, I felt it necessary to remind others of certain things he had said and done. My opinion was indeed an informed one, as I had reported on the "social life" issue as a reporter for this paper. But I did not abuse the privilege or purpose of an op-ed, anymore than the three writers who appeared in last week's op-ed did. An editorial is an opinion, which is what my op-ed expressed.

I am not a "big time" reporter, nor am I a "hotshot," as one member of the Villanova community has referred to me. I am merely a reporter, and part of my job is to make you stop and think. My op-ed was a success because so many people took the time to read it and form their own opinion, whether they agreed or not.

Finally, to the sophomoric satirists responsible for last week's

The Idea of a University

It is late April, and roughly 75 percent of the students at Villanova will return in four months for more study. Yet, 25 percent of the students will take their degrees and not return; they are, like myself, graduating seniors who will (one hopes) take a degree and enter the "real world."

One supposes, then, that this is a good time to take stock of the last four years and see how Villanova has changed us and (one hopes further) improved and prepared us for what lies beyond the near horizon of commencement ceremonies.

To do this, it suits us to use the English prelate John Henry Cardinal Newman's treatise, The Idea of a University, written in 1853 and 1858, as a measure of Villanova's attributes.

Newman writes that the main purpose of a university is to instill in its students "a philosophical habit," a way of life which encourages them to seek knowledge for its own sake. Also, Newman believes that a liberal education as we know it is the best path for a student; it is "simply the cultivation of the intellect."

Newman postulated that the natural result of a solid liberal education is knowledge. Here it is necessary to understand Newman's definition of knowledge. It is not simply "two times two is four," or that "as price rises, quantity demanded falls." Knowledge, like education, must be our ability "to reason upon what we see," thus knowing "the relative position of things" in the world.

The Idea of a University examines the relationship of knowledge to professional skill. Newman neither denies nor embraces fully John Locke's proposition that the only suitable, non-wasteful education is one which grooms and prepares students for particular, specialized roles. Newman assures us that education for a profession is fine, but a truly liberal education fosters an open mind and brings added facility to every occasion; it "gives a man a clear, conscious view of his own opinions and judgments, a truth in developing them, an eloquence in expressing them and a force in urging them."

Now that we are equipped with these fundamental definitions and principles set forth by Cardinal Newman, we must relate them to our experiences at Villanova.

Has Villanova fulfilled its duty to uphold Cardinal Newman's time-honored ideas? Inasmuch as the University maintains approximately twenty-five Bachelor of Science major subjects in the four colleges, it is a liberal institution.

The 1983-84 Villanova Bulletin yields the following information as substantiation. (An Arts and Science case will be discussed later.) Surprisingly, Bachelors of Business Administration had the most flexibility in selecting non-C&F courses, with a total of 18 open courses. Open courses refers to non-major requirements and free electives. Close behind were the Bachelor of Science in Economics, who had 17 open courses. Bachelors of Science in Accountancy had the fewest open courses in C&F with 15.

Nursing students had only 12 non-nursing open courses slotted into the four-year curriculum.

The lowest non-major course ration is in the College of Engineering. It is tragic that chemical, civil and electrical engineers have only nine open courses outside the engineering curriculum in four years of higher education. For some unstated reason, mechanical engineers have only seven non-engineering open courses. Only one is a free elective.

These figures are still more disturbing when we realize that the minimum number of courses in the engineering curriculum totals an unofficial 51, compared to an unofficial 40 for other students. In percentages, the lowest ratio in the non-engineering university is in the college of nursing. With 12 open courses out of 42, nurses may fill 28 percent of their education with liberal courses. The C&F students fill 45 percent of their studies with liberal education. Engineers fill a maximum of only 19 percent of their schedules with open courses.

In contrast, my own major, Bachelor of Arts in Economics, has allowed me to take a full 11 courses in economics, leaving ten requirements and nineteen open electives (72 percent of the schedule) to fill the schedule.

Through no fault of its own, the University has been flooded by a high tide of profit-seeking firms and students chasing the almighty dollar; to the detriment of the liberal tradition of which Newman wrote, there has been a tendency toward specialization and limitation of options for some students.

The information offered by the University Bulletin shows an alarming trend away from the arts and humanities. Only minimal attention is proffered to studying great historical and political movements, great philosophical ideas and great literature. One

Political Rhetoric

To the Editor:

I would like to commend Barbara Haenn for her very interesting article last week in the Villanovan.

[illegible] the usual political rhetoric. Yet this time under the auspices of campus ministry.

If Ms. Haenn had taken the time to research her article, she would be amazed at what cold, hard figures can reveal.

Fact: Actually, the "cuts" that a Democratic-controlled House of Representatives and President Reagan made were not cuts, but rather decreases in the Carter budget projections, which called for much larger increases than the Congress finally approved.

Fact: Under President Reagan, in real dollars, social programs increased. A fact that our media and the author fail to mention.

Fact: Military spending is lower than welfare spending. Indeed, when measured as a percentage of GNP, military spending [illegible]

senior, political science

"Yes. But you just have to know who to talk to . . . Can I please talk to Fr. Driscoll."

Marianne Lange

On Campus

By PAUL O'DONNELL

After getting absolutely no response from faculty members on this question, the Villanovan decided to put it to the students: "Do you feel the faculty's voice here at Villanova is being heard by the Administration?"

"Yes. And it's time to recognize ours. Why not build us a club behind St. Mary's?"

Mark Abel
freshman
commerce & finance

"Sure. No mandatory attend[illegible]"

Mark Gillespie

"No. One reason is the Administration is not listening to Fr. O'Rourke's proposed alcohol policy. Also, not putting enough emphasis on Father Stack's Alley Cat basketball."

Andrew Norris
senior, biology

"No. I think the faculty should go on strike."

more than Pentagon outlays.

Fact: The government is spending $236 billion to keep people from falling through the safety net. Yet, all we ever hear are features that show the disproportionate few who do fall through.

Finally, the author seems to infer that President Reagan does not actually believe that "People do have a primary right to have simply enough food to survive."

Next, we are led to believe Reagan is against "the rights of a people to determine for themselves their form of government."

Surely such statements have no place in our campus paper. There is no obligation by any paper to report falsehoods.

Perhaps the author should have spoken with someone in Poland, East Germany, Hungary, Czechoslovakia or any part of the 80 percent of the world that are not free. Yes, Ms. Haenn, 80 percent of the world are not free. They don't worry about registering because they can't vote. If you ever get a chance to, Ms. Haenn, ask a person behind the Iron Curtain about the rights they have. Then, Ms. Haenn, come and speak to me about defense spending. Then let's discuss who the "intelligent people" are at Villanova.

Computer Help

To the Editor:

A journey of a thousand miles begins with the first step. During the past two months, the Villanova community has witnessed the first steps of an organization that is planning to complete that journey many times over.

It is an organization which signals the changing times and has grown out of the needs raised by a changing campus. The organization is a student chapter of the Association for Computing Machinery (ACM), a nationwide professional and educational society with over 65,000 members. The need was caused by the creation of a computer science program at Villanova which has swelled in class size from 25 seniors graduating this semester to over four times that many computer science majors in this year's freshman class.

The organization was formed by a small group of computer science students who worked closely with Tim Wall and Dr. Jim Solderitsch of the computer science department. The purposes and goals of the organization are as varied as the people it intends to reach. This will not be an organization catering only to computer science majors. Time magazine signalled the direction that contemporary society will be taking, with its selection of the computer as the man of the year. Nearly everyone may have to deal with computers in some way, and the ACM will strive to be an informational-educational organization designed to address a variety of issues, ranging from computer anxiety to personal home computers. It will sponsor lectures by Villanova's own professors, as well as by major researchers in the field, provided by the ACM.

At the same time, it will also provide great benefits to computer science students. Through the ACM, a student will be able to obtain information about graduate schools, summer jobs and career opportunities. A job fair, where companies are invited to come and explain career opportunities for computer science majors, is in the planning stages for next year, as are efforts to bring more recruiters on campus and planning for more extensive internship programs. The ACM is also planning lectures and mini-workshops on interviewing techniques, given by personnel managers of computer industries.

Furthermore, the ACM is planning to implement a tutoring program of some form, to aid those who find computers to be a harrowing experience.

The ideas are here, but it takes people to make them work. If you like what you've read above, and you want to be a part of the ACM, you are more than welcome to become involved and to voice your opinions. There are problems to be solved and there are goals to be reached, but this requires work. Elections for all executive positions will be held on April 17, and further information can be found in this week's FYI. Run for a position and take the first step on your journey of a thousand miles.

One More for Bill Hurley

To the Editor:

I am writing on behalf of the junior class of chemical engineers in response to the attacks made by Bill Hurley on the College of Engineering in his recent letters in the Villanovan. Mr. Hurley cites misleading statistics which he claims represent the "inflation" of the dean's list for engineers. He doesn't tell us that 12.4 percent of all engineers would make the dean's list if the required G.P.A. were 3.5 rather than 3.0.

He also doesn't mention that chemical engineers, for instance, take 147 credits, only 27 of which are non-technical electives. I'm sorry Bill, but you don't take that many, even in chemistry.

Also, Bill, check out the statistics on incoming freshmen. S.A.T. scores in both math and verbal areas are significantly higher among engineers. If engineers don't have it rough, how come only 12.4 percent make a 3.5 G.P.A. while 18.9 percent of Arts & Science students make that grade? "Puzzling questions" indeed, as you might say. What's your beef, Bill? Did the College of Engineering turn you down when you applied? You're carrying on a lonely crusade against engineers. Have you noticed that no one has written to agree with you, only to disagree?

Don't worry, Bill. If you're still puzzled and feeling all that stress, you can probably take an elective in "Coping with Stress." If you're still puzzled after that, try sitting in on some engineering classes. You'll be surprised how fast your mind clears.

Greek Week

To the Editor:

On behalf of Pi Kappa Alpha and the entire Greek community at Villanova, I would like to thank Cathy Poillon and her staff for organizing and running Greek Week.

This year's Greek Week was the best in Villanova's history. Everyone involved in the Greek system here should be proud. Participation was fantastic, and the competition was both fun and intense.

I hope that the activities and memories of Greek Week '84 will serve to show the value of the Greek system at Villanova. Activities such as the Easter Egg Hunt indicate that Greeks at Villanova do more than party: we care. Congratulations once again to Cathy Poillon, and good luck to Jim Condolff and his staff for Greek Week '85.

Michael Saulino
vice president
Pi Kappa Alpha Fraternity

To the Editor:

We the seniors of PBD would like to thank the sisters of PBD for making our last Greek Week special. Above this, we hope that this shows the Villanova community that we are a strong, local sorority. The locals are tired of being taken lightly by the nationals.

Congratulations to TKD on their second place and to PBD for their first place, for the seventh year in a row.

hopes that Cardinal Newman's ideals will not be totally forsaken.

Villanova's academics and students present and future should do all they can to expand and preserve the pursuit of knowledge — all knowledge — at Villanova.

You among the 75 percent returning next fall can begin this effort and take advantage to the fullest of your chance to learn — get your money's worth.

The 25 percent graduating also have a duty to show Cardinal Newman, Villanova and ourselves a clear, conscious view of our own opinions and judgments, a truth in developing them, an eloquence in expressing them and a force in urging them.

Show that four years here were well-spent.

Comedy Works in the Day Hop

By BARBARA LUCAS

It was all laughter and cheers last Friday night in the Day Hop, which was transformed into V.U.'s own Comedy Works. The Villanova Union successfully sponsored the appearance of comedians Sean Morey and Chip Franklin.

The evening's entertainment began with Franklin's routine. Along with a clever sense of humor, Franklin also displayed his musical talent on the acoustic guitar. He sang in a new style he coined "acid country" and donned a mohawk wig and punk glasses for a unique rendition of "Amie."

Franklin also gave some unusual impressions. His imitation of Elvis had an original twist where, instead of singing and dancing as Elvis would have, Franklin sang "Jailhouse Rock" as Elvis would today — on his back!

Other musical selections performed were songs from his soon-to-be released album, with titles such as "That's Why I Hate the Beachboys," and "Stupid Little Punks" and "Tragically Hip."

Franklin attended Georgetown University as a physics major, but decided to change after his parents kept saying "get out of physics and get into the money, entertainment." Franklin confided.

He considers his act almost vaudevillian, where he blends together music, comedy and various props.

However, comedy is not always as light as it seems. "Comedy is funny, but there is also a very serious side to the act. Timing is very important for a show that flows. I enjoy comedy, but consider myself a musician first."

After Franklin's performance, there was a 15-minute break, followed by Sean Morey's arrival on stage. Morey's creative routine consisted of a mixture of banjo playing, juggling, improvisations, and the expected one-liners.

The audience responded enthusiastically to Morey's sharp wit and contemporary sense of humor.

Morey is from the South Jersey shore and attended Northeastern University, where he graduated with a B.A. in speech communication. Starting as a street entertainer on the Boston Commons, his career took off rather quickly. His credits range from television appearances such as the "Tonight Show," to opening for many stars in Las Vegas, Lake Tahoe, and Atlantic City. He is now traveling the college campus circuit.

"In the future, I hope to improve my material and get a comedy album together. I write my own material and have been writing for TV shows. I would also like to write movies," he noted.

As a stand-up comic, Morey is fulfilling a dream he's had ever since childhood. "It's a great field; it's something I wanted to do since I was a kid. It's very rewarding."

For his finale, Morey juggled a rubber chicken, a head of lettuce and an M&M, eventually catching the M&M in his mouth.

About 150 students attended the Comedy Works, where members of the audience sat around candlelit tables. Beer was served to whose who showed proper proof of age.

UCIS Discounts Computers

By SHARON KELLY

Villanova University faculty, students, and staff have the chance to get up to 50 percent off the purchase of a sophisticated microcomputer. The price break is part of the "Microcomputer Fair," sponsored by the University and the University Computing and Information Services (UCIS), which will begin on April 17 and run through May 17.

The five companies participating are IBM, Digital Equipment Corporation, the Pennsylvania Computer Store, Today's Computers, and Automated Office Systems, which will be demonstrating and explaining their equipment and prices in the Connelly Center from 11:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.

These microcomputers range in price from $800 to $7,000 and are "price protected" during the program. This means that a customer will benefit if the price is reduced, but will not have to pay more if the company decides to raise the price.

To buy a microcomputer through this program, a student, staff or faculty member must go to the UCIS office in Room 63, Mendel hall, and show a valid I.D. card. He will then be issued a personal-computer form that he must show to the vendor in order to receive a discount.

By launching this, the University is recognizing the importance of microcomputers as the "wave of the future" in academics, as well as showing they are valuable assets."

One advantage of owning a microcomputer is that it eliminates the inconvenient wait that students often encounter in the computer center.

Dr. Hartmann, chairman of the mathematics department, explains that microcomputers, also called "personal computers," do not have to be connected to a main computer, so a student can have his own computer facility set up in his room. This facility could include a CPU (central processing unit), a video display terminal, a keyboard and a printer.

Although a microcomputer can be independent, it is often to the student's advantage, Hartmann believes, to have access to the main computer, which generally has greater power and memory, so that it can solve extremely difficult problems easier and faster.

A hook-up to the main computer can be accomplished through the use of a modem, which is a device attached to the telephone. By dialing a special number and access code on the keyboard, the microcomputer communicates directly with the main computer.

But "microcomputers will eventually have about the same capacity as the main frames," says Hartmann. He believes that the "age of the main frame" is in its "twilight," and sees in the future, "networks of micrcomputers that communicate with each other over phone lines or special computer lines."

A greater advantage that the microcomputer offers the student is its word processing abilities. A student can type his paper on the computer, make all the necessary corrections and revisions and even interchange or merge sentences and paragraphs. When the paper is completed, it can be printed, either on his own printer or on a University printer.

Up to 300 pages of typing can be stored on most microcomputers, which can be recalled any time.

In addition, the student can purchase software to further aid him in the perfection of his paper.

Software can be purchased to drill the student in almost any discipline. There are programs that do biology experiments, math exercises and even nursing practicums, to name just a few.

The cost of this software is a drawback to owning a microcomputer; however, Hartmann sees for the future, the creation of a facility to lend out software at the University.

If a student purchases a personal computer at the upcoming fair, he may be able to get up to $2,000 worth of software for free, from some of the vendors.

Clearly, the microcomputer is an important tool that has something to offer everyone. It can add distinction and sophistication to research papers and essays producing neater, more organized and more correct assignments. Computer science and engineering students can write and run their programs in their rooms, while still having access to the main computer. Finally, for business, science, math and nursing students, the microcomputer offers programs that drill them in specific concepts and applications, thereby enabling them to increase their understanding of and proficiency in course material.

By initiating this program, Villanova acknowledges that the microcomputer is becoming an essential device in the educational world. Through it, a student can purchase a microcomputer at an excellent price, which will give him sharper academic skills and [illegible]

Alumni Association Focuses on Women

By ARTHUR J. WEINKOFSKY

Have you ever arisen on a Saturday morning and decided the perfect thing for you to do was to attend a seminar? Well, there was one person who more or less experienced this academic miracle — me! What I expected would turn into an endless rally of speakers and boring conversation turned into one of the most interesting and mind-opening events of my life.

The seminar called "Villanova Women in the '80's" was conducted by the Villanova General Alumni Association in cooperation with the Office of Adult Services of University College. Robert J. Capone, director of the Villanova General Alumni Association, issued his welcoming address to all alumnae, who together comprised the overwhelming majority of the audience. It was anticipated that more students would attend. Commented June Lytel of the English department, "I told my students in class about this weekend, but there is only so much you can do to get the students interested."

Topics of discussion included changing the stereotypical and ideal roles of women, how a woman can build a successful career and techniques that are effective in finding a job in today's changing market. Among the speakers and panelists were Marguerite M. Farley, Ph.D., president of Farcom, Inc.; Rosa Gatti, vice president of communications for the ESPN Cable Network; Catherine V. Barr, director of Media and Special Programs, U.S. Government; Robert Stokes, Ph.D., director of the career development center; Angela Cerino Esq., assistant professor of business law at Villanova; and Lytel.

The overall theme of success conveyed in the presentation was the concept of networking, a system in which individuals band together, adding their good intentions, helpful tips and other beneficial suggestions that might help one another in the group to make connections for jobs or other career opportunities.

As Barr said, "Networking is a great way to make new friends and help yourself at the same time. You never realize just how many people you have business connections with until you sit down and think about it."

The method requires active work of the person seeking employment. That means phoning contacts, setting appointments with them, discussing — not asking — about your career and the persistence and perseverance of the individual to keep searching and learning.

The power of women, as well as men, to succeed is within themselves. Just a short decade ago, as Cerino pointed out, "Women were restricted from attending law school. Quotas were set at levels of three percent. Today, thankfully, there are no such restrictions."

Comments from the audience included "smashing" from Lillian Jackson, a graduate of University College in 1983. Other people said it was "inspiring," and, as Marie Norton said, "It went far beyond any expectations. It was very worthwhile and should be done every year."

On "Magic by 'Magic'"

By JENNY CATALANO

In the bright sunshine of Tuesday afternoon, amid a magic carnival of clowns, concerts and cream pies, an extra bit of "hocus pocus" shone on the Villanova University campus when magician Craig "Magic" Schneiders took command of the stage. The occasion was Balloon Day, an annual festival sponsored by campus ministry of the University to raise money for the homeless of Philadelphia.

Schneiders, a junior majoring in mechanical engineering, performed his illusions before a large crowd of students, faculty, area residents and underprivileged children who flooded the campus mall to play games, eat sweets and support the cause.

A skilled magician, Schneiders runs a professional business. His ad "Magic by Magic" appears in the classified sections of The Main Line Times and The Suburban and Wayne Times, and this kind of publicity, in addition to word of mouth, enables him to do two or three shows a week, on an average. He performs mostly at children's birthday parties and various club functions; however, Schneiders also has performed his half-hour magic act on stage at different schools, and performs frequently for charities. He will be performing "Magic by Magic" this week on Villanova's Sunshine Day.

Schneiders became interested in magic when he was about 7 years old, and has been practicing for 15 years. Living in Chicago at the time, he met a famous, professional magician, Jay Marshall, who sparked his interest and sponsored monthly meetings for a club of people who enjoyed magic.

At age 14, after he had moved to Connecticut, Schneiders joined the Society of American Magicians and became its youngest member. It is through this society, other magicians, and books about magic, that he learns his tricks.

With a heavy course load in engineering, one might wonder how Schneiders finds the free time to practice his magic and polish his act.

"I make time," the tall, thin junior asserts, clad in a royal blue t-shirt with the slogan "Have a Magician for Your Next Affair."

"As an engineering major, I'm taught about things that are impossible to do. I like to show that some things that people think are impossible are really possible."

What Schneiders likes best about being a magician is working with people. In his magic shows, he always involves the audience in his tricks, calling individuals on stage to assist him with different tricks.

"I never embarrass anyone," he smiles. "But it really gets the audience going when I get someone up there who is doing, step by step, the same thing as I'm doing. Only at the end, the trick works for me and it doesn't for them. The audience finds stuff like this funny.'

Balloon Day '84.

Schneiders believes that in order for him to put on a successful show, he must "read the audience." If they do not look as if they are in the mood to be entertained, then he has to get them excited with a few quick, amazing tricks. When they discover just how good he is, they are usually anxious to see more.

The difference in audiences is the reason that "Magic" does not have a set routine that he performs for all occasions. Instead, he has a set repertoire of various illusions from which he chooses the ones he will do at that time, after judging the audience.

"Magic's favorite tricks to perform are "restoration tricks," in which he magically puts back together a shredded newspaper or mends a broken thread with a wave of the hand. However, Schneiders is quick to add that he is not a typical magician. Most magicians are either cardmen, ropemen, escape artists or other narrow specialists. Craig likes to call himself a "G.P. of magic," or a general practitioner of a variety of magic tricks. His repertoire includes all kinds of illusions.

"Magic's" most memorable performance came when he was in high school, doing his act at a Pops concert.

"It was a large audience, about 250 or 350 people, and I had never done this particular illusion for a crowd that size. It involved an assistant from the audience and between the two of us, we did quite a comedy act! The people in the audience were literally rolling on the floor laughing. Although I've come close, I have yet to get that unbelievable response. It makes

Study in Spain Offered

By MARK HOPEMAN and CHARLENE PARDOE

For the first time last semester, 12 Villanova students spent their fall semester studying in the beautiful seaport of Barcelona, Spain. They studied and lived in a rented building and went to classes in a building which they rented out next door.

The city's environment was similar in some ways to Bryn

The Plaza Real in Barcelona, Spain.

Mawr and the rest of the Main Line. Bill Parker, a senior majoring in international business, noted, "We lived in a very nice residential area in the northern section of Barcelona. It's a lot like the Villanova of Philadelphia," he said, although it's not quite like most American cities. "It's so old."

But the city also has many educational benefits. As Parker noted, "They have some of the best MBA programs in Barcelona. It is more international than other cities. They say it is the most European city in Spain."

"It's really an annex of Villanova over there," added the Rev. Anthony Roman, an associate professor of modern languages. "We just rented a building. You move from here to Spain but you are still learning at Villanova." The one difference is that studying is limited to the fields of Spanish or art history, he noted.

The program's cost includes living arrangements, round-trip air fare from New York, tuition, three one-day excursions to various cities in Spain, room and board in Barcelona and lodging during the three-day visit in Madrid. An open-ended return ticket also permits one to stay longer and travel through the rest of Europe if he wants.

Most of the students last semester, in fact, did just that. Only four out of 12 of them flew back to the United States, while the others opted to continue traveling. Some of the places they visited included Monaco, Nice, the Italian Alps, and an island just off the coast, Palma de Mallorca.

The program is ideal for Spanish majors, but it is also practical for non-Spanish majors. Five of the 12 students last semester, in fact, were in the college of commerce and finance. Noted Parker, "It has been one of the best experiences in my life. It is tough because you are experiencing everything for the first time, but at the same time it's so rewarding."

Ann Murphy, who is also an international business major, signed up for the summer program. "I'm minoring in Spanish and would like to learn the language over there. And I've heard from people that have gone there that it's a great time," she said.

Roman, who is the coordinator for the program and also a native of Spain, noted, "It opens students' minds and lets them see another culture, and I was very pleased to hear how well they learned to speak Spanish."

The rate of exchange in Spain is a big benefit, too. As Roman pointed out, "The rate of exchange for the American dollar is so high in Spain that the money you spend over here you can do much more with over there."

But some of the food is noticeably different there. Parker said that they have such fast-food restaurants as McDonald's, Burger

Naval Reserve Officer Training Corps

Forty Years Old and Going Strong

Yesterday and Today

By BILL CARPENTIER

Contrary to popular belief, the NROTC Unit has not always been a part of Villanova University. It all began back in the dark days of World War II. The navy was in need of trained officers to fill its empty ranks. Finding the men wasn't the problem, where to train them was. The Naval Academy was filled to its highest possible point, so where could we train the men? The Navy turned its eyes to the nation's colleges. And in 1943 the V-12 Officer Training Program was begun. The V-12 program was described as "a means of ultilizing the valuable assets of the nation's colleges in a way in which colleges could aid the war effort."

And so, on May 30, 1943, Commander Milner, U.S.N., took command of the Villanova Naval Training Station. This was the beginning of a long and fruitful relationship between the navy and Villanova Universtiy. It is an association that has lasted for 40 years, as of May 1. However, both the unit and the University have changed since that moment in antiquity. In 1946 the V-12 program was discontinued and replaced by the Naval Reserve Officer Training Corps (NROTC).

During the V-12 program and the early portion of the NROTC program, the offices and training facilities for the Navy were located in Tolentine, Austin, Fedigan and Alumni Halls. A supply office was set up in the Alumni gym, a 'sick bay' was opened in Middleton Halls and the navy had just begun its stay here at Villanova. The once quiet campus was now the place of wartime training and later of the weekly drill of midshipmen learning to march in the grand tradition of the U.S. Navy.

Although the V-12 program eventually became the NROTC program, the training schedules of each are quite different. The V-12 program was undertaken at the peak of World War II, so its training program reflected the urgency of the times.

The typical day for a 'trainee' began at six in the morning for a half hour of calisthenics, then on to breakfast at 7:15. At 8:30 they began classes just as today. At the end of the working day, the trainees ate dinner at 4:45, then they had free time until 7:30 when the study period kept them at their books until lights out at 11. On the weekends there was a Saturday drill period from 11:15 to 1:15, then the men had liberty. This lasted until 10:00 on Sunday. Then

While the uniforms may not have changed much, ...

For anyone acquainted with today's midshipmen, they will know that their schedule is much like that of a regular Villanova student. Aside from Tuesday drill and naval science classes, today's NROTC students lead a less demanding life compared to those in the V-12 program.

This typical day has changed through the years as the program has matured, but the basic principles have remained undiminished. Other unit functions also developed during this time. The rifle and pistol teams were formed and began competing, and winning many shooting matches. Also getting its start was Whiskey Company, the unit drill team. At the time of its inception, the team entered competition in the Pershing Rifle Association.

As part of this drill team program, the team became a force to reckon with. After several years Whiskey Company placed first, three times consecutively, requiring that the Fourth Naval District Championship trophy be retired. This superior quality has continued to be passed down, as the present team has continued to win the competitions it has entered. This winning spirit has been preserved through hard work and dedication.

There were other ROTC functions that began early on as a member of the Villanova community. There are the traditional military functions, the spring and fall Reviews, the navy's birthday, the Marine Corps birthday, as well as the military masses. Other events include various social gatherings, such as the Spring Formal Dance and the Fall Semi-Formal Dance.

During these developmental years, the program was moved into its present headquarters, John Barry Hall. The building of John Barry was begun in 1947 and completed in 1949. In attendance, to dedicate the building, was Secretary of Defense Louis A. Johnson. All naval facilities were now located in one place, instead of scattered around the campus. The building was designed with other features to augment the existing training equipment. Added were: a firing range, an armory, an electronic training device for simulation of anti-submarine warfare, as well as offices and classrooms for the staff and students.

Many of the aforementioned unit activities have since become recognized student organizations. Whiskey Company and the rifle and pistol teams were among the first. Those that came after were: Wildcat Publications, and the Quarterdeck Society, which is an organization of senior midshipmen.

As the years have passed, the history of the unit has had many memorable moments to highlight its passage. The main purpose of the program is, first and foremost, the commissioning of young men and women into the Naval Service. There have been many distinguished graduates of the Villanova NROTC unit. One of great importance, and of whom you may have heard, is the current Commandant of the Marine Corps, General Paul X. Kelly.

Many of our alumni have received numerous citations for acts of heroism and bravery, as well as meritorious service and numerous other awards. This is a quality that will continue to be a part of the Villanova unit. It is an intangible portion of our training due in part to the fine and well-rounded education that we receive from the University. The remainder comes from the people, their characters and wisdom.

... the programs and the people have.

Although this has been a brief summary of the history of the NROTC unit here at Villanova, the total theme and essence conveyed the message — that message being that the NROTC is a vital and strong part of the Villanova establishment. It has grown from a small seed into a blossoming giant, ready to supply the needed support and maintain this country as a proud and strong nation in today's world.

What is Navy ROTC Anyway?

By R. FINKELSTON

Have you ever wondered who these people are who materialize on Villanova's campus on Tuesday, clad in Navy uniforms, scurrying from class to class? Have you ever been curious as to who joins the Navy ROTC and why they join? What kind of commitment do they make? How long do they serve?

Villanova has had a ROTC Unit for 40 years and although most students are aware of its existence, few are aware of more than that. If for no other reason, they recognize a ROTC student, or midshipman, by his short hair. But who are these men and women in uniform? On the surface, midshipmen seem like typical college students, they eat, sleep, study and go wild on the weekends like everybody else. At the same time though, they don't just seem to fade into the college scenery. They seem to be a breed apart.

The battalion of midshipmen consists of a rare breed of men and women who have chosen to earn their bachelor's degree while simultaneously working towards a commission in the United States Navy or Marine Corps. They join the Naval Reserve Officers Training Corps (NROTC) for a variety of reasons. Some join because they have been awarded academic scholarships. Others join in the hope of winning a scholarship. Most join because they feel the NROTC Program is a good stepping stone to a great career in the Navy.

If a midshipman accepts a ROTC scholarship, he is obliged to go on a summer training cruise and, after commissioning, to serve for four years on active duty. A non-scholarship, college program ROTC student goes into the Naval Reserve upon commissioning for three years of active duty. However, before graduation and commissioning day comes, a midshipman puts a lot of work into his undergraduate studies.

As part of their undergraduate studies, NROTC students take a Naval Science course every semester, as well as attending Naval Professional lab on Tuesdays from 3 to 5 o'clock. The Naval Science courses are technically oriented, three credit courses taught on a level that a variety of majors can understand. The courses deal with Naval topics and credit for taking the courses appears on a midshipman's transcript.

Naval Professional lab, better known as drill, isn't as bad as it sounds. A drill period is broken up into two parts; the first part is company meetings and the second part is class meetings. Company meetings can last as long as an hour and consist of company muster, roll call, announcements of upcoming events, marching on Mendel Field (weather permitting) and occasionally, a dreaded inspection. Run by the midshipman officers, these meetings are usually informative and down to earth.

Once company meetings are over, the midshipmen go to their class meetings, for example, freshmen, or fourth class midshipmen, go to one room, sophomores go to another and so forth. Class meetings are conducted by the class advisor, usually a lieutenant, and are a good chance to get administrative matters taken care of, to go over unclear Naval Science notes and just to ask questions in general.

Midshipmen are required to wear their uniforms all day Tues-

Life of a Freshman ROTC

By MARK SANFORD

Just when I thought the rush of orientation was over, little did I know what was ahead of me as a freshman midshipman in the NROTC Unit at Villanova. Although the first few weeks were trying and disoriented, we were gradually inducted into the Battalion. Those first few weeks included learning to march, physical fitness training and military indoctrination. While we did all of these things to prepare us for our military life at Villanova, we still had full academic schedules to contend with. Our schedules included Naval Science classes which gave us an additional orientation to the Navy. Even though we had rough schedules to deal with, it has been stressed to us from day one that "academics are the number one priority."

For those of us who so desired, Whiskey Company (drill team) and Band Company (battalion band) provided another way to become part of the battalion. These two groups also entailed extra drills, but to those of us involved in either group, the extra work has paid off.

As the year has continued, we have gained a deeper understanding of the unit and the Navy. We have received our uniforms and actually began to look like the rest of the midshipmen. Activities began to include freshmen and we finally became "official" members of the unit.

As freshmen midshipmen, we also had to include in our Saturday morning schedule a series of field trips to naval installations. While the rest of the midshipmen and women were treated to "liberty call" on Saturday afternoons, we traveled to Philadelphia Naval Base, Lakehurst Naval Air Station, the Naval Air Development Center in Warminster, PA, and the Naval Air Station in Willow Grove, PA. These trips were designed to familiarize us with the various aspects of the Navy.

All of this hard work has been worth it . . . In just little over one month we will begin our second year in the unit. The year has been one of learning and also one of adventure. We have finally gotten "our little brain housing groups" in order and the "third herd" has made it through their first year.

A Future Navy Professional

By BILL CARPENTER and JOE MIHAL

Paying for a college education is never easy and often some type of scholarship assistance is required. Although most people are generally aware of the four-year NROTC scholarship programs available to high school seniors, there are a variety of other scholarships available to qualified, motivated college students. A truly remarkable example of this has been demonstrated by a Villanova University sophomore, Lisa Perrota.

Lisa joined the NROTC unit as a college program student. This is a non-subsidized NROTC Navy-Marine Corps program for college students who wish to be available to serve their country as reserve officers of the Navy or Marine Corps. Applicants for this program are selected by the Villanova University Professor of Naval Science, Captain E. A. Tansey, USN, from students already in attendance or selected for admission by the university.

College program students who join the NROTC in the same year as their contemporaries in the scholarship programs take the same courses, wear the same uniform and graduate with them but attend college at their own expense.

They take all naval science courses offered and, upon successful completion and graduation, are commissioned to serve on active duty for three years. (Scholarship graduates are obligated to serve four years of active duty.)

College program students also receive government-furnished uniforms and all books required for naval science courses. During the junior and senior years, they also receive $100 per month for a maximum of 20 months.

College program students also may gain scholarships by competing for one of the Chief of Naval Education and Training scholarships, normally offered semiannually, by obtaining a professor of naval science nomination.

Scholarships are offered to eligible men and women, but the fraction awarded to women is much smaller than that awarded to men. This being the case, the competition for these scholarships is fierce and demanding.

College program students normally enter the unit either as freshmen or juniors. Lisa joined the NROTC program in the fall of this academic year with the intention of receiving an NROTC scholarship. In a dedicated effort, she doubled up on Naval Science courses, taking those she missed as a freshman and those that are taken as a sophomore. This was added to her already difficult schedule. Lisa is an honors major with an overall cumulative GPA of over 3.50.

Upon graduation and commissioning, Lisa is interested in the area of Naval intelligence. Having taken German for the past five years, she is hoping to be sent abroad to work in a foreign embassy in a German-speaking country. Though Naval Intelligence is a difficult and complicated field, Lisa has the determination, capability and enthusiasm necessary to do an outstanding job.

"It is always a tremendous privilege and a great source of personal pride whenever a Commanding Officer can recognize top performance within his command. The below listed Midshipmen are top performers — the best among the best — congratulations are certainly in order."

Farewell to a Commander

By R. FINKELSTON

Villanova's ROTC Unit will soon be saying farewell to one of its most dedicated Naval Officers. This man has served 25 years in the U.S. Navy and has twice been stationed at Villanova University. He takes an active interest in the unit itself and especially in the First Class Midshipmen who he teaches. This man is, of course, Commander Johnson, and as most of us are acutely aware, he will be completing his last tour of active duty at the end of the year.

Commander Johnson's face is not a new one to Villanova's campus. In fact, James R. Johnson attended Villanova in the late 1950s and graduated in 1959 with a Bachelor's degree in economics. As a young graduate, Commander Johnson entered the Aviation Officer Candidate Program and within four months was commissioned an ensign in the U. S. Naval Reserve. He began flight training at Pensacola, FL., and in November 1961 he was designated a naval aviator.

After two months of instruction at the Fleet Air Electronics Training Unit, Commander Johnson was assigned to Patrol Squadron 18. During his tour with Patrol Squadron 18, Commander Johnson was designated a patrol plane commander, participated in Cuban blockade operations, and was deployed to Rota, Spain, in support of the Sixth Fleet. In June 1964 the commander was promoted to Lieutenant and augmented into the regular Navy.

In January 1965, Commander Johnson served as flag lieutenant and aide to the U.S. Representative in Malta. Upon completion of that tour he was assigned to Patrol Squadron 21 in Brunswick, Me., where he served as training officer, NATOPS Officer, and was the Atlantic fleet P2V standardization pilot. In July 1969, he was promoted to lieutenant commander.

As a lieutenant commander, Commander Johnson reported to the Naval Air Development Center in Warminster, PA, and served as P-3C project officer involving research and development of advanced anti-submarine aircraft systems. After this tour the commander returned to school and earned his Masters of Science in International Affairs from George Washington University. Prior to his promotion to Commander in December 1975, Commander Johnson was assigned to the staff commander patrol and reconnaissance force of the Seventh Fleet in July 1972. He served in that staff in Okinawa and Japan as Air Operations and Current Operations Officer.

day since it is a drill day. This is good practice because as Naval Officers, they will be wearing a uniform daily.

By joining different clubs and activities within the unit, a midshipman can earn various ribbons and insignia which can be worn on his uniform. The unit's clubs and activities range from Whiskey Company, which is the battalion drill company, to the Recreation Society, which plans the Spring Formal, the Fall Dance and other social events. The Wildcat staff publishes the unit's yearbook, which comes out once a year, and the battalion newspaper. There is a rifle and pistol team for those with good aim and the 300 Club is for those who enjoy physical training. For any midshipmen with musical ability, there is a Band Company. There are many more activities, but in short, there is something for everyone in the NROTC unit.

In the Navy there are many career paths that a commissioned officer can follow.

If you want to get into nuclear engineering, start by getting into the Nuclear Navy.

The Navy operates more than half the reactors in America. Our nuclear training is the most comprehensive. You start by earning your commission as a Navy Officer. Then we give you a year of advanced nuclear training. During your career, you'll get practical, hands-on experience with our nuclear powered fleet.

If that sounds like the kind of responsibility you're looking for, speak to:

Union Plans Welcome Back

By CHARLENE PARDOE

During the first weekend back next year, the Villanova Union in cooperation with other organizations on campus is sponsoring Villanova's first ever "Welcome Back Weekend."

This weekend will tentatively be kicked off Aug. 30 with a mini-concert in the night. It will be followed on Friday with an entertainer outside in the day and a "Dance Under the Stars" during the evening.

Saturday, a bus trip to Ocean City is scheduled, with an outdoor movie planned (tentatively "Raiders of the Lost Ark") for the night. Sunday, they have planned a beach party at St. Mary's and an outdoor mass at 6 p.m.

On Labor Day, then, there is a picnic scheduled with an outdoor band (last year's was Alien) down on Fedigan field.

"This past year, we originally wanted something for the first weekend back, but all that we ended up planning was the picnic," noted Paul Ignas, a junior majoring in education. "But that was rained out for a few weekends in a row and had to be pushed back," he said.

"This year, since everybody's excited to be back and since it's a three-day weekend and we won't have much school work, everyone should be in the mood for a good time."

The other organizations which have shown some interest in this are the Resident Student Association, the Association of Commuting Students and the Greek organizations on campus. "I think this would be a good opportunity for the Greeks," he said. "It would also be a good way to show the freshman that Villanova does not have to have a dull social life.

"This year has been a year of innovation in the Union, and we hope to keep building on it," noted Ignas, who is the Union's festivals coordinator. "We'll start off next year with a new event and hopefully, keep building from there."

The weekend is going to be publicized further over the summer, with flyers and ticket information being sent out to all undergraduates.

Fun, Italian Style, in Dougherty

By BILL SANTOS

The Italian Club had its annual dinner Sunday in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall. The event was coordinated by Nicholas Corrado and Maria Santomo, co-presidents of the club, with generous donations coming from the Pastore family, Dr. and Mrs. Cefaratti and numerous friends and alumni of the club.

The organization was founded by Frank Ferrari and is moderated by Dr. Pastore of the modern languages department. Sixty members form the club.

"The dinner was a total success, and those who attended were thoroughly pleased . . . actually, they were amazed. "It is difficult to recruit help for such a project due to the apathy of students regarding the university's activities," Corrado stated.

The dinner consisted of several courses, beginning with an antipasto made with imported provolone cheese, prosciuitto and various other cold cuts. The main course included homemade lasagne, baked ziti and sausage and peppers. Marinated mushrooms were also abundant. For dessert, delectable cannoli (pastry tubes filled with smooth cheese and chocolate chips), lemon pudding-filled cones, cookies and almond nougat meringues. Everything was made from scratch.

The entertainment was provided by Nick Desiderio, an authentic, Italian professional who performs in the Main Line area and Eastern Pennsylvania. Currently, he is appearing with his accordion and synthesizer at Il Primo's Italian Restaurant in Wayne. Desiderio entertained the group with traditional Italian songs (Maria Mari is a personal favorite), as well as contemporary music.

Did you know . . .

• That recently the Consumer Federation of America (CFA) hailed a number of Senate and House heroes for their support of the consumer? This honor was given because of their voting record on consumer issues. The CFA follows, documents and publishes the Congressional Voting Record each year and has recently released the Record for 1984. Among the "heroes" in the Senate are Biden (D-DE), Lautenberg (D-NJ), Bradley (D-NJ), and Kennedy (D-MA). Among the House "heroes" are Dwyer (D-NJ), Minish (D-NJ), Roe (D-NJ) and Walgren (D-PA). Overall, nine senators and 29 congressmen qualified as "heroes."

CFA Legislative Director David Greenberg noted that the votes followed by the voting record were "tough choices." He praised the "heroes" for supporting the Consumer Product Safety Commission and the Federal Trade Commission, which save thousands of lives and billions of dollars each year, "yet face constant industry efforts to weaken their powers and reduce their funding."

Unfortunately, Congress as a whole could not be labeled "hero." On the voting record votes, the Senate carried the consumer position only 42 percent of the time, while in the House it was carried only 54 percent of the time.

•Pennsylvania has recently joined 19 other states with the passage of their "lemonade bill." While state-to-state variations in the law exist, they are all extensions of the Federal Magnuson-Moss Warranty Act's lemon remedies of replacement or refund to all vehicles. The new improvement in the state laws is that they specifically define a "lemon," whereas in the past it was up to the consumer to prove whether a car was a lemon or not.

Although passage of such state laws is increasing very quickly, there has not been any subsequent study of their effectiveness. Many states believe this is due to the lack of awareness, and therefore have incorporated consumer educational campaigns to get the message across.

• Sen. Bob Packwood (R-Or), the senate commerce committee chairman, announced today that the surface transportation subcommittee will hold a hearing on April 12 on S. 1407, which is a bill to protect purchasers of used cars from odometer modifications.

S. 1407 amends the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act. The bill's provisions are designed to create a record from which odometer tampering can be traced and the violators prosecuted. For further information, contact Karen Phillips of the Majority Staff at (202) 224-4852.

• If your luggage was lost on a domestic airline, you could have previously collected up to $750, but after April 10 you will be entitled to collect up to $1250, according to a new ruling by the Civil Aeronautics Board.

Airlines must give conspicuous notice of liability limits, and liability claims still require proof for the value of the lost items.

For further information on any of the above issues, contact the Board in Bartley 331.

Up-Close Look at Modern English

By MIKE MATHIS

Modern English is not another British band. As lead singer Robbie Grey explains, "Our working-class background and raw energy gives us a sound that sets us apart from everyone else. It's the Modern English sound."

The band, which hails from Great Britain, consists of lead vocalist Grey, guitarist Gary McDowell, bass player Michael Conroy, keyboardist Stephen Walker, and drummer Richard Brown. Their first American release, an LP called "After the Snow," yielded the hit single "I Melt With You," which reached the Top Ten of AOR (Album Oriented Rock/Radio) stations and received heavy exposure on MTV. An extensive tour which included numerous dates in North America during the spring and summer of 1983 included opening shows for Roxy Music and Tom Petty. The majority of dates on that first tour were in club-headlining acts. (Locally, Modern English performed at the Ripley Music Hall).

So far this year, the band is keeping very busy. They are currently touring in support of their latest LP "Ricochet Days" and intend on playing bigger halls as their popularity increases.

Success for the band didn't come easily at first. As most bands, they had to pay their dues. "We started the band due to the punk rock explosion in Britain in 1977," said Grey. "It gave us the incentive to start a group because none of us could play instruments." This also introduced the band to the idea that it was, as Grey says, "something we could do ourselves."

As far as the band's influences are concerned, they don't pinpoint a certain sound as influencing the group as a whole. However, Grey did mention the types of music that the band listens to. "We listen to Michael Jackson and a lot of the American black music," said Grey. "We also listen to music as diverse as classical music, early British invasion music like the Beatles and the Who, and bands that are popular today, such as Big Country, U2, and Culture Club."

Living close to London, the music industry's capital, helped the band relate to the music scene, especially the early punk movements. Grey stated that the band's home, Colchester, England, is a mere 60 miles from London. "This made the move towards a career in music more realistic for us," he added.

London in the late 1970's was much like the London of the 1960's. Styles in hair and clothes were conflicting with those of the establishment. New musical tastes took the city by storm. It was from here that the punk rock movement began, the same place where the "British sound" began 20 years earlier. "The Sex Pistols started the punk movement, but there have been other musical movements since then," Grey said.

"We were popular in our native land before we were known in England. When 'After the Snow' was released in Britain, we didn't have a record deal in America."

One year later, when "I Melt With You" was released as an import single, the group's popularity soared. "We were suddenly approached by virtually every record company in America after that," said Grey. "Before we knew it, we were a hit on both sides of the Atlantic."

As for the musical differences between the United States and Britain, Grey commented on unemployment and British culture as a direct influence on the music that British bands produce. "Unemployment, fashion, and other cultural changes viewed as outrageous in America are viewed as normal in England. The United States is the biggest country in the world in terms of music, and the British outrageousness is viewed as acceptable among Americans. Americans love the outrageous!" Grey said.

As for current tastes in music, Grey spoke of the music scene as a whole. "Today's bands are great, especially Culture Club and Big Country." The new musical movement gives bands like us the same opportunity to make it as we did."

As far as American bands go, Grey noted that "The Call and the Talking Heads are both great bands." He said that the "garage bands" that dot American cities must be discovered because "there is genuine talent out there."

Grey personally prefers a raunchy blend of music, much like that of The Alarm, who are sharing the bill with Modern English on April 19 at the Trenton War Memorial Auditorium. "I really admire the Alarm because they are very similar to how we were when we began."

Commenting on "Ricochet Days," the band's new album, Grey noted that the group continues to improve the Modern English sound. "It took us four weeks to record 'After the Snow' and it took six months on and off to record 'Ricochet Days.' " Grey stresses that unlike the Clash or the Alarm, the band's music doesn't have a particular message. "It's all done in fun."

Modern English is clearly a band for the 1980's. Their originality, scope, and delivery of their music will make them a viable force for the music of this decade. Grey concluded, "We're not in it for the money or for the message. We're in it for the fun." And fun it is.

'Declaration' is Alarming

By BOB BROWNE

"Declaration," the debut album of the English foursome the Alarm, is stocked with powerful and thought-provoking lyrics. It is a combination of acoustic and electric guitars, coupled with heavy drums. You'll find no top forty songs here — this is a band more concerned with topics such as truth, justice, and war than a typical commercial band. Musically, the Alarm brings to mind bands like the Clash, especially lead vocalist Mike Peters, along with U2 and Big Country, which are also guitar-based bands with interests in soldiers and war.

An added dimension in the Alarm is a Dylan-like influence seen in tunes such as "the Deceiver," a rant against falseness and "The Stand," a short song calling out to "come on down and make the stand." Both songs have the combining of acoustic guitar and soft harmonica so common with Dylan. The Alarm makes their stand with their feet firmly planted. They're not concerned with image and gimmicks, and their songs have an honest quality in their views of right and wrong.

The one song that is experiencing air time is the anthem-like "Sixty Eight Guns," a battle cry of unity and pride. With such songs as "Marching On" and "Blaze of Glory," featuring workhorse acoustic guitar, the band gets a little tedious in its intense desire to lead a march. They are a little too "gung-ho," but it comes from their strong attitude, and they are just as intense in what they do musically, which makes this a good album.

The Alarm have been on the road since January, opening up for The Pretenders and will be at the Tower on April 16 and 17. Their harsh vocals and busy guitar work along with their dedication on this first album should include them in the company of The Clash and U2 as powerful bands with a message.

Glee Club Gets the Gold

By ED DeMARCO

Last weekend, the Villanova Women's Glee Club won a gold medal in the Catholic Intercollegiate Women's Glee Club Association (CIWGCA) Invitational Competition. The four other colleges entered in this year's competition were Georgian Court, Immaculata, Marist and Molloy.

The CIWGCA was formed in 1963 and, as the name implies, was comprised solely of Catholic institutions. Any women's club is now welcome to join the association, although not all of the clubs were extended invitations to compete. Since becoming members of the CIWGCA six years ago, the Women's Glee Club has consistently finished in the top three positions.

Competition opened on Saturday night at Immaculata college with each club performing several lighthearted, popular selections of their own choice. The Haveners, a small, select group of the VU Glee Club, paid tribute to Jim Croche, the group's founder, by singing a special rendition of "I Have to Say I Love You in a Song."

The actual competition took place on Sunday as each club sang a required piece and one of their own choice.

Commenting on the new scoring system and competition weekend in general, Glee Club president Marya Liebezeit said, "The new scoring system is a better approach to the entire competition theme. Previously, the clubs competed solely against one another with first, second and third places [illegible] awarded."

The Women's Glee Club will have their final [illegible] season with the Villanova [illegible] April 14 in the Main Chapel.

Fun Romance With a Stone

By MICHAEL D. MANNO

The splintered door of a small dark room bursts open with a kick. In floods sunlight and an infuriated man wielding a rifle. A scantily-clad blonde woman is standing in the center of the room in amazement. The intruder wants to know where the gold is, and wants to know now. She says she doesn't know. Then he tells her to strip. She pulls up her skirt and quickly pulls a knife, hurling it across the room. The man staggers and drops to the floor in a heap.

This is the opening scene of the recently released movie, "Romancing The Stone." It actually occurs in the mind of a prominent romance novelist, Joan Wilder, played by Kathleen Turner. The viewer is brought back to reality as Wilder, teary-eyed, types out the final scene of her latest novel.

Immediately we see that Wilder is a very lonesome person. The pampering treatment her pet cat receives, along with the many momentos cluttered around her apartment, provide evidence that she is badly in need of companionship. Wilder is disinterested, independent and of course, single. She is in search of a man, not just any man, but that special man.

What this woman needs is a little excitement, a change of scenery, a little romance and adventure. Wilder's romance and adventure begins with a phone call from her sister, who has been taken hostage by treasure hunters in Columbia, South America. Wilder must fly to Columbia with a mysterious envelope sent to her from her sister's late husband. (He was recently murdered). Her sister's life depends on her getting the envelope to the kidnappers.

Against her better judgement Wilder catches the next flight to Bogota, where a Columbian policeman tricks her into taking the wrong bus to a remote province of dense jungles and deep ravines. The bus crashes and Wilder is left in the care of who else but the policeman. He promptly pulls a gun and demands that she hand over the envelope. It seems that everyone in Columbia wants that envelope.

Suddenly, up on the ridge appears Jack Colton (Michael Douglas), a scraggly looking adventurer who handles a shotgun like a water pistol. After chasing off the crooked cop, he makes a deal with Wilder. He'll get her back to civilization, but it will cost her $350.

From there, it's one pitfall after another as Wilder and her companion elude the Columbian army, her sister's kidnappers and the local bandits of the region. The chase is almost as good as the one in "Raiders of the Lost Ark," and is suspenseful and entertaining. The cliff-hangers in this movie will have you on the edge of your seat.

The smooth and quickly paced transitions between the scenes make the movie a success. Producer Douglas catapults the viewer from Wilder's fiction (the opening scene of the movie), through her domestic life and into her adventure in the wilds of the Columbian jungle.

Douglas can also be credited with selecting an excellent cast. Turner is perfect for the character of Wilder. Turner came to national attention as the co-conspirator in Lawrence Kasdan's "Body Heat" (1981). She was also in "The Man With Two Brains." Her roles in both of these movies gave no indication that she could successfully play the part of a middle-aged bookworm with a frumpish disposition. She does so quite successfully.

Douglas' casting ability also shines in his choice of leading men. He chose himself. Douglas plays the character of Colton, the adventurer who saves Wilder. On first coming upon the distressed heroine, he seems not to have much of a sense of humor or personality. As the movie progresses, Colton becomes more sensitive to Wilder's situation, and eventually falls in love with her.

The title concerns an oversized emerald for which everyone is searching. While the crooks are trying to steal the stone from Wilder, Colton is trying to romance it away from her. "Romancing the Stone" is light and entertaining and worth a look.

Kathleen Turner starred in "The Man With Two Brains."

Half is Royal, Half is Wild

By BILL SANTOS

"Half of me is the Earl of Greystoke. The other half is wild."

"Greystoke: The Legend Of Tarzan, Lord Of The Apes" is the latest movie depicting the story of Tarzan, from infant to adult. The Edgar Rice Burroughs novel has come to life many times before, but this is the best all-around representation of the legend.

Director Hugh Hudson ("Chariots Of Fire") formulated the novel vividly and thoroughly. He carries the audience from that first tragedy at sea, through Tarzan's growth with the apes, to his return to royalty and his final return to his real home.

Hudson uses graphic scenes of violence and mutilated flesh in many of the jungle scenes to show a deeper contrast between the savage wildlife of Cameroon, Western Africa, and the tranquil countryside of the United Kingdom, Scotland and England. This is not to say that all the African scenes were revolting. The best part of the film was the picturesque scenery of both Africa and the United Kingdom.

Two newcomers were introduced in "Greystoke." American-born, Paris-trained Christopher Lambert played the lead as John Clayton, Tarzan Lord of the Apes, later to become the next in a long line of Lord Greystokes. The other is Andie MacDowell, who plays the lovely Miss Jane Porter, the old Lord Greystoke's American ward, who falls in love with Clayton and who is abandoned by Clayton for his true love, the wilds of Africa.

Lambert does an excellent acting job considering the part he plays. It is not easy to jump around like an ape and be believable. The ape sounds (Oo Oo Oo, Aa Aa Aa) grate on one's nerves after a while.

Christopher Lambert plays a difficult role in "Greystoke: the Legend of Tarzan

Other actors include Sir Ralph Richardson as the Sixth Earl of Greystoke and Ian Holm as Capitaine Phillippe D'Arnot, the one who eventually finds Clayton and returns him to his "home" in Scotland. Elliot W. Cane and Ailsa Berk were highly convincing in the parts of the primate father (Silverbeard) and primate mother (Kala), respectively. The other primates were equally fascinating.

Credit should be given to the behing-the-scene contributers, also. Oscar-winning cinematographer John Alcott ("2001: A Space Odyssey" and "Barry Lyndon"), production designer Stuart Craig ("The Elephant Man" and "Gandhi") and film editor Anne Coates (an Oscar-winner for "Lawrence of Arabia" and nominee for "Becket") all strengthen the film.

"Greystoke" is not a film for the squeamish, but does include many beautiful shots of the African jungle with its greenery, waterfalls and sleek animals, and the English and Scottish countryside with its fields and regal castles. The acting, on the whole, was done rather well, although there wasn't much spoken dialogue until half way through the film. The movie does drag at various points however.

"Greystoke" provides a cogent interpretation of the Tarzan novel. If one can get through the explicit blood and guts without getting sick, then, by all means, go see it.

Nick's Knacks

The Spring Concert

By NICK ANASTASIO

After months of confusion, the 1984 Spring Concert will take place on Saturday, April 14. Eight bands, made up mostly of Villanova students, will perform all day down by the quad. Along with the concert, a barbeque is also planned.

For a while, no one was really certain whether or not there would be a Spring Concert this year, or who would sponsor it. As these questions were answered, the questions of what bands would be playing popped up. These questions were answered this week.

Hopefully, this year's Spring Concert will not have as many problems as last year's. Last year, the sound crew arrived two hours late (they had worked in Delaware the previous night). Then the second act of the day, The Avengers, suffered a power outage during their second song. This was compounded when the wind knocked over the sound baffles behind the stage.

Last year's Spring Concert was held near the Kennedy Center, with the stage set up in front of the building. This year, the stage will be located in the quad, near Bartley Hall.

The Oscars are getting easier and easier to predict. It seems as if the sentimental favorites always win these days. For example, Henry Fonda, always a respected actor but never a big Oscar winner, was the sentimental favorite in 1982 for his performance in "On Golden Pond." He won the Best Actor award. This year's sentimental favorite was Robert Duvall, another excellent actor. He won the Best Actor award this year, but not for his acting. As one critic said a few days before the awards were given out, "It's an all-American year, and Duvall's the only American nominated. Besides, he's never won before."

Well, he has now.

Robert Hazard will be at Great Adventure in early May to help kick off its new season. Hazard's career was recently saved by Cyndi Lauper, who turned a song written by Hazard ("Girls Just Wanna Have Fun") into a big hit. Had this not happened, Hazard would have probably been dropped by RCA, since neither his debut EP nor his album, "Wheels of Fire," sold well. But Lauper's success with his song has given RCA new confidence in the man whom they billed as "the next David Bowie."

King Crimson Not Perfect

By TAD FINNEY

King Crimson, an avant-garde band, formed in 1969, has just released its tenth studio album, "Three of a Perfect Pair." Crimson, a group who has undergone more personnel changes than most bands, still has founding member Robert Fripp at the helm. Fripp, considered a genius at making abstract music, is back with another vision of "your-guess-is-as-good-as-mine."

When Crimson first formed, it had Greg Lake, Ian McDonald, Michael and Peter Giles, and Fripp. They debuted with "In the Court of the Crimson King." A masterpiece, this album reached many different moods and colors and had some very beautiful music. Fripp's mellotron and Lake's vocals provided the needed touches to perfect the album.

Their follow-up album, "In the Wake of Poseidon," did not measure up to "In the Court of the Crimson King." Lake left during the recording sessions, and the original sound was lost forever.

Next, King Crimson produced its two worst albums, "Islands" and "Lizard," with Boz Burrell on vocals. These albums were disharmonious, to say the least.

In 1973, another personnel change added John Wetton (recently departed from Asia) on bass, David Cross on violin, and drummer Bill Bruford. The new lineup's first album, "Lark's Tongue in Aspic," was a good one, but "Starless and Bible Black" was just plain weird. "Red," their last album, was a powerful finale.

After breaking up in the mid-1970s, King Crimson reformed in 1981. The new lineup included Fripp, Bruford, guitarist and singer Adrian Belew, and bassist Tony Levin. This combination provided a departure from the old Crimson (indeed, they originally were going to call the band Discipline). Belew gave the band a new wave sound, which was welcome to the music of the 1980s. "Discipline" and "Beat," the follow-up, enjoyed moderate success.

Now comes "Three of a Perfect Pair," King Crimson's 1984 release. The lineup is still the same, and so is the sound. An open mind is required when listening to this album, as it is definitely mood music.

The album opens with the title track: "She is susceptible/ He is impossible/ They have their cross to share/ Three of a perfect pair." This song, as well as "Man With an Open Heart," sounds somewhat similar to a Hall and Oates song.

This is definitely new wave music, and thus it seems to lose its emotional impact. "Sleepless," however, is a catchy song (as well as King Crimson's first video), but not enough to prevent the album from falling short of expectations.

Two instrumentals, "That Which Passes, Passes Like Clouds" and "Industry," are worth listening to, but "Model Man" sounds like ELO, and "Lark's Tongue in Aspic, Part III" is creative but off the wall.

Do yourself a favor. Next time you are on a picnic, bring "Three of a Perfect Pair" instead of a frisbee.

Swinging Live

By BOB SMITH

The latest Dire Straits release is a two-record set titled "Alchemy," which was recorded in England last July. One supposes that it was released to fill the gap between "Love Over Gold" and the "Dance EP," which were released within three months of each other late in 1982.

"Alchemy" is somewhat more interesting than the average live set, if only because it marks drummer Terry Williams' first full-fledged exposure to the group. The former Rockpile drummer replaced original drummer Pick Withers after "Love Over Gold," and appeared on the "Dance EP." The latter resulted when lead guitarist/composer Mark Knopfler decided to record several Chuck Berry-style rockers into a five-song Dire Straits EP.

While Williams worked well on the EP, the music contained was an attempt to recapture the loose, fast-paced style of the fifties — precisely the idiom for which Rockpile was best known. However, this was far removed from the style prevalent on such recent Dire Straits works as "Making Movies" and "Love Over Gold." "Alchemy" is notable in that six of its 10 cuts come from the aforementioned LPs. This helps to reveal Williams' talents more fully than on the "Dance EP."

Williams shows himself to be a more assertive drummer than Withers on familiar materials such as "Sultans of Swing" and "Solid Rock." This can be attributed to his years on the road with Rockpile. He is at least as agile as his predecessor, and his straightforward style gives an added push to the music.

"Alchemy" is an enjoyable set, well-recorded and of high sound quality. Dire Strait's instrumental abilities overshadow the record's sloppy spots. One final note of interest: Warner Brothers has become the first label to print the list price on the jacket of a record. $11.98 appears on the spine of the record, just under the label's name.

One Who Stayed Behind

By LARRY GOANOS

In the spring of 1981, football coaches and recruiters from all over America swept down upon the Villanova campus in an attempt to snatch up some of the recently freed talent on the Main Line. The dropping of football at Villanova had given Wildcat underclassmen a chance to peddle their services to the most attractive bidder without the loss of eligibility. Indeed, an irresistible offer for a college athlete, but one which not all accepted.

"I had made a lot of friends here and it's a great school. I didn't want to leave," says senior Kevin Foye, a starter for the 1980 junior varsity team, who also suited up for varsity games. "I had a lot of ties at this school and it's a great academic institution, so I decided to stay."

While many of his teammates went on to play football at big name schools like Ohio State, Florida and Penn State, Foye chose to continue his education at Villanova. After three years, however, he looks back with some regrets.

"I regret staying, in a way, because I know I could've gone places and played. A lot of people looked down on me, both here and at home, because they felt I hadn't fulfilled my potential athletically."

But overall, Foye feels that his decision to stay on the Main Line was the right one. "I think that staying here has helped me more than hurt me," he observes. "Villanova is kind of special. You can see it by the number of juniors who left in 1981 to play their last year somewhere else but then came back here to graduate. That says something for this school."

An all-state selection in high school at Bayonne (N.J.) High, Foye chose Villanova over a number of other schools because he was impressed with the Wildcats' recruiting approach. While other schools offered illegal inducements, the Villanova recruiters played everything by the book. Once he arrived on campus, however, he was a little disappointed.

"I came down here expecting more because it was a Division I program," he says. "We worked hard in practice but we really could've worked a lot harder. The coaches here were more lenient than the ones I had in high school.

Looking at Villanova football as it was and as it will soon be, Foye has some advice for the new head coach.

"I think he should strive to get the full cooperation of the administration; that's essential. But he should also be allowed to handle problems within the program by himself without outside interference," he says.

As for the future, Foye's plans lie in pursuing a career in business; he'd have nothing to do with coaching Villanova football.

"He (the new head coach) is going to have to deal with the administration, the alumni who brought football back, plus worry about recruiting and scheduling. I don't envy the man at all," states Foye.

Tennis Team Skids

By JIM McCABE

Coming off a promising 3-1 start, the Villanova men's tennis team hit the road only to drop four straight matches to four very tough teams: Lehigh, Upsala, St. John's and Fordham.

On April 3 at Lehigh, Nova fell by 7-2. Although winless as a team, two singles matches were won. Junior Larry Gallen took his match in three sets: 3-6, 7-5, 7-5. Mike Parks was also able to come through for Villanova, winning his singles match in three sets: 7-5, 3-6, 6-3.

Last Friday the team was on the road again to face Upsala College, where it was defeated, 6-3. Despite that loss, the steady racket of Larry Gallen earned him another personal victory in three sets: 6-2, 4-6, and 6-3. Bill Harahan also produced another victory in his singles match in two sets by 6-4 and 7-6. Gallen and Harahan, who had each won their singles matches, combined in the doubles and won first position in two sets by 7-6 and 6-1.

Tracksters Run Well

By PAUL MACCHIA

The Villanova men's track team opened up its 1984 outdoor season last weekend competing in the Colonial Relays in Williamsburg, Va.

The Cats had an outstanding day winning seven out of 10 events and producing four IC4A qualifying standards, one NCAA qualifying standard and one meet record.

Sophomore Martin Booker competed in both the 110-meter hurdles and the 400-meter hurdles. Booker ran 13.8 in the 110s defeating his nearest rival and former Wildcat hurdler Rod Wilson.

Freshman Tony Valentine won the 400-meter hurdles in a time of 50.8, which was .54 better than he's ever run before. Valentine also placed fifth in the 110 hurdles open-consolation in a time of 14.6.

Senior Marcus O'Sullivan stepped up to the 5000-meter run and turned in a personal record in running 13:51.1. The time qualifies him for both the NCAA meet and the IC4A meet.

The Wildcats entered five relays and wound up winning three of them with one second place and one third. Outstanding legs were turned in by all the runners, which is a good indication of what is in store for later in the season. In the 4 x 800 meter relay, JJ. Clark (1:53.9), Kevin Davis (1:50.8), O'Neill (1:51.2) and anchor-man John Marshall (1:48.3) ran a spectacular race in a time of 7:24.2 to best second place Pittsburgh by 1.4 seconds.

The Wildcats set a Colonial Relays record in the 4 x 1600 meter relay. O'Neill (4:11.8), Kevin Davis (4:13.9), O'Keeffe (4:06.4) and John Keyworth (4:02.7) did an excellent job in baton passing and teamwork.

Continuing the Tradition

By N. JOHN CAVUTO

Marty Liquori. Eamonn Coghlan. Don Paige. Sydney Maree. The list goes on. These are just a few of the track stars who have given Villanova a name as one of the greatest track schools in the country. And now, there are three more expected to maintain the tradition — the tradition continued by Coach Charles L. Jenkins after Jumbo Elliot passed away in 1981. These three who hope to continue Villanova's success are freshmen Sean O'Neill, Gerry O'Reilly and Tony Valentine.

Middle distance runner O'Neill and distance runner O'Reilly both hail from Ireland. However, they had different reasons for coming to Villanova.

According to O'Reilly, "At home, Villanova is considered the number one track school in the United States. So I always thought about going here. Also, Eamonn Coghlan and I are in the same running club in Ireland. He didn't pressure me into coming. But he told me he would choose Villanova if he had to do it over again."

According to O'Neill, who lives in Ballymena, Northern Ireland, "When I didn't get into the British University I wanted to, due to the fact I was from Northern Ireland, I accepted what I felt was the best offer from the American universities which recruited me."

O'Neill noted the difference between running in the states as compared to back in Ireland: "The competition is tougher here than at home. In Ireland, there were some races where you knew you would have an easy time. But, every race I'm running here is against tough competition."

When it came down to the difference between Ireland and the United States, O'Reilly felt that the pace in life was the major adjustment for him: "The pace is much faster here, as compared to Ireland where the people are more lackadaisical."

Compared to O'Neill and O'Reilly, Valentine, whose specialties are the sprints and hurdles, is attending a school a stone's throw from home. I came to Villanova because the school's track history was very impressive. But I also wanted a school that stressed academics. Finally, Villanova being close to home also had a lot to do with the decision."

All three have easily made the transition from high school to collegiate track competition. In cross country, O'Reilly finished first in the 10,000 meters at the NCAA District II Regional Championships and second in the Philadelphia Big Five Championships and the IC4A Championships. In indoor track, he finished second in the 3000 meters at the Boston University Invitational, where he ran a personal best 8:07.2. O'Reilly finished sixth at the Big East Invitational in this event.

O'Neill has taken first places in the mile at the Lehigh Open, the 880 yards at the Eastman Invitational and the 1000 meters at the Big East Indoor Championships. In the 1000 meters, O'Neill finished sixth at the U.S. Olympic Invitational.

Valentine has taken second place in the 300 meters with a time of 35.5 at the Boston University Invitational and in the 440 yards with a time of 49.03 at the Eastman Invitational. At the Big East Championships, Valentine finished third in the 400 meters.

For O'Neill and Valentine, the 1984 Summer Olympics are in the back of their minds. O'Neill is planning to run in the trials and qualify for the Irish Olympic team. Although he is eligible for the British Olympic team, he feels that the British are just too talented. O'Neill is also fearful that the political situation in Ireland may hurt his chances for representing his country. "Many people in Ireland would not like to see a person from Northern Ireland on the team."

Valentine is not getting his hopes too high on the Olympics; "It'd be nice to make it. But if I don't, there's always '88."

And what is in store for these men when their school days at Villanova are over? "I'd like to run permanently for a while, year round and try to make a living of it," answered O'Reilly.

O'Neill is hoping that his schooling days would not end with Villanova. "I'd like to go to graduate school after this, try to stay at school for as long as I can."

Valentine is as yet undecided; "I'm not exactly sure what I'm going to do, but I'm positive I'm going to continue running."

As freshmen, Jenkins must be pleased to know that these three will be at Villanova for three more years. And there's a good bet that if they don't compete at Los Angeles this summer, rest assured they'll be in the Olympics in '88.

Tennis

without a victory in a discouraging 7-0 loss. On Sunday, the men's tennis team stayed in New York to face Fordham but again were defeated, 6-3. Taking the first position doubles was the veteran combination of senior Harahan and Gallen (8-7). Senior captain John Lee and sophomore Pete Russell also combined to take second position in the doubles (8-1). Also, sophomore Wayne Simone added his personal touch to get the Cats a third victory by winning in the singles in three sets: 3-7, 6-3, 6-3.

Although the team's record is presently 3-5, all five of their losses came in the face of fierce competition. Senior captain Jon Lee, in his fourth year on the team, gave his summary of the team's inconsistency in the earlier part of the season: "Towards the beginning of the season, some of the players had not been at the top of their game due to a long winter break. However, as the season has progressed substantial improvement has been made. And it appears in the next few weeks the team will finish out in flawless form."

Gallen also talked about the team's performance up through last Sunday: "Now that we got the toughest part of the season over, all we should be looking for mostly are victories from here on in."

Nova Nine Splits Doubleheader

Holtz Breaks School Record

By JAMES H. DeLORENZO

Shattered.

Although it wasn't exactly what Mick Jagger had in mind, the Villanova baseball team managed to shatter a few school records this past weekend, en route to two victories and a loss.

Last Saturday, the Wildcats hosted the Hoyas of Georgetown in a doubleheader. Game one resulted in a 12-10 loss; however, the contest was highlighted by the first of eight records broken.

In the seventh inning, following senior centerfielder John Corbin's grand slam home run, junior shortstop Jerry Holtz parked a homer to right center. The blast was Holtz' sixth of the season; but it was also the 17th of his career, breaking the old record of 16 once held by former Wildcat great Bill Duryea. And while the Cats lost the contest, the war was far from over.

Game two went to Villanova, 11-6. Sophomore southpaw Russell Gainforcaro picked up his second win of the week in nine innings, while another Wildcat record was met. For the fifth time in Villanova baseball history, the Cats hit three homers in one game. Holtz, along with junior first baseman Tom Sullivan and senior baseman Ray Paparella, were responsible. No Villanova team has ever hit four in one game.

Head Coach Larry Shane

Sunday, the Nova nine traveled to Iona; they returned home with a 17-13 victory, and another handful of broken records.

Holtz had another homer in the game, raising his career mark to 19, and his season tally stands at eight. Paparella was a strong 5-for-6 at the plate, with one run, five RBI's and two doubles.

Junior outfielder Dan Mostardi tied a Villanova record for individual at-bats in a game, when he went up to the plate seven times. It was the third time in Nova baseball history, the first time happening in 1951. In those seven at-bats, Mostardi collected five hits, two runs, two doubles and four RBI's.

As a team, the Wildcats went to bat 49 times and collected 27 hits; both are new Villanova baseball records, shattering the old marks of 47 and 24 respectively.

Villanova also collected eight doubles in the Iona game, breaking the old record of seven set in 1978. Individually, three Wildcats slugged two doubles — Paparella, Mostardi and junior outfielder Jim White. No one has ever hit three in a game for Villanova, while now there are 37 players in Wildcat baseball history to have hit two in a game.

The win Sunday was junior Phil Ortolani's first of the season; the righthander had come in to relieve freshman Bob Craskey. Another freshman, Tom Gmahle, picked up the save.

Villanova upped its baseball record to 7-15 after the weekend series, and with 18 games remaining on the schedule, things look to be improving for Villanova baseball.

MAIN LINE DIAMOND DUST: Junior designated hitter Rich Howden, in his first season as a Wildcat following his transfer from Lafayette, now holds the all-time Villanova record for stolen bases in a season . . . the old record of 11 was set in 1981 by Bill Duryea . . . Howden, after Sunday's game, had 15 . . . The Wildcats were scheduled to host Temple at home Tuesday, traveled to Princeton on Wednesday and on Sunday host LaSalle. . . .

Laxmen Destroy Two Foes

Extend Winning Streak

By ELIAS PAPSON

If the men's lacrosse games this past week are any indication, the laxmen are headed for a championship season. Last Wednesday, they hosted Lehigh at the Rugby Field and destroyed them, 13-5. They followed up that performance with a 20-8 shellacking of Montclair. With these two victories, the laxmen have outscored their opponents this year 78-36, extending their winning streak to four games while sporting an impressive 6-1 record.

Goalie Drew Cunningham

In the first game against Lehigh, the Cats' attack saw eight players contribute at least one goal. John Haggarty followed up his three-goal performance against Georgetown two weeks ago with a four-goal, one-assist performance in this game. Jody DeChirico and Ken Delgatto both added two goals to the Cats' total. Mike Ruopoli contributed his second consecutive one-goal, four-assist performance.

Goalie Drew Cunningham managed to save nine shots while only three goals slipped by him. His saves-to-total-shots ratio dipped from .761 to .760, while his goals against average fell from 4.00 to 3.83.

The second game against Montclair provided the laxmen with their widest margin of victory this year, 12 goals, and the most goals scored in one game, 20. In all, the Cats' attack took 54 shots on goal. Seventeen out of the 20 goals were assisted and 10 of the players entered the scoring columns with at least one goal. Of those, five scored two or more goals. Both DeChirico and Delgatto led the Cats' attack with four goals, while Haggarty, who is averaging 2.57 goals per game this season, added three more. For Haggarty, this performance was his fifth hat trick in seven games. Ruopoli, who is averaging three assists per game, amassed his third consecutive one-goal, four-assist performance.

Cunningham, who has saved 86 shots this year while allowing only 27 to get by him, yielded only four goals this game. His saves-to-total-shots ratio inched up to .761 and his goals-against average also rose slightly to 3.85 per game.

Lady Profs Inch Past Cats

By BOB HELLER

Last weekend the Villanova women's lacrosse team traveled to Glassboro to face the Lady Profs of Glassboro State.

The Wildcats jumped out to an early 2-0 lead on goals by Lauren Giordano and Andrea Martino four minutes into the first half. About a minute later, Glassboro added a goal of its own to make the score 2-1. Martino scored her second goal of the game at the 10-minute mark to make the score 3-1. Defensive lapses by the Wildcats enabled Glassboro to score three straight goals to take the lead, 4-3. The Wildcats tied the score at 14:26 with a goal by Robin Lucarini. Three more Glassboro goals sent the Wildcats into halftime trailing 7-4. "We eased up a bit, late in the first half," commented Nova coach Diane Moyer.

Things did not get much better early in the second half as Glassboro's Lisa Wilkins scored three goals in the opening five minutes to give Glassboro a 10-4 lead. Then the Wildcat defense toughened up and their offense slowly started to wear away the Glassboro lead, causing the game's momentum to switch in favor of Villanova. Lucarini added her second goal of the game to make the score 10-5, and Giordano then proceeded to score four straight goals, cutting Glassboro's lead to 10-9. Glassboro added another goal in the final minutes of play to send the Wildcats back home with an 11-9 loss, which placed their record at 6-6.

Giordano paced the Nova Wildcats with five goals, thus tying a school record. Freshman goaltender Sue Ruff played very well, recording 30 saves. "Both Sue and Lauren played very well for us," commented Moyer. "They [Glassboro] had a lot of fast players and we were missing a couple of starters due to injuries, but we came back very hard in the second half and turned what could have been a lopsided game into a close one."

In earlier lax action last week, the Wildcats played their first home game of the year against [illegible] Goals by Laura O'Shea, Giordano, Lucarini and Sue Farne paced the Wildcats to a 4-1 lead at halftime.

O'Shea and Farne each added another goal in the second half, while Bryn Mawr proceeded to score three times to make the final score 6-4, Villanova.

Coach Diane Moyer

"We had a well-played game," stated Moyer. "Bryn Mawr has a good [illegible] and we knew that we had to control them to make ourselves."

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Patty Bradley

Congratulations are extended to Patty Bradley for her outstanding performance in the Duke Relay Carnival April 5-6. In helping the Wildcats establish themselves as a force to be reckoned with in women's outdoor track this season, Bradley set two new meet records, two NCAA qualifying marks and two marks that surpassed the standards for the Olympic trials. For her efforts, Bradley has been named Budweiser Athlete of the Week.

In the 400-meter hurdles, Bradley was nothing short of stupendous as she finished first and shattered the old meet record in a time of 58.19.

In the 800-meter race, Bradley rose to the occasion once again with another first-place finish. She surpassed the old meet record in a time of 2:04.77.

With her performance in both the 400-meter hurdles and the 800-meter race, Bradley qualified for the NCAA Championship and the Olympic trials.

The team of Judy Palmer, Joanne Kehr, Debbie Grant and Bradley won the 1600 relay in a time of 3:44.38. Bradley anchored the team and added the fastest split, (53.9 seconds).

Bradley captured a second-place finish in the 100-meter hurdles in 14.24. Coach Bob Stoudt said that the 100-meter hurdles was just another example of Bradley's tremendous body control. She hit the ninth hurdle, yet was still able to retain her balance and finish in second place.

Coach Stoudt reiterated his belief that "Bradley is the most versatile athlete in the United States."

For the weekend, Bradley finished first in the 400-meter hurdles and 800-meters, second in the 100-meter hurdles and added the fastest split for the winning 1600 relay.

Research for Explosives Funded

By JOSEPH MARUSAK and AMELIA MCGOVERN

Villanova's administration recently approved funds for basic research leading to the potential development of a more efficient explosive for use in bombs, the Villanovan has learned.

The administration, through the Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., the University's vice president for Academic Affairs, reached its decision despite objections raised by the Faculty Research Committee, in charge of exploring the matter.

The research proposal was submitted by Dr. Walter W. Zajac Jr. of Villanova's chemistry department to the Faculty Summer Grants Program, which is overseen by the research committee.

"One of the jobs of the Faculty Research Committee is to review the applications for summer grants, faculty research grants," said Dr. Robert E. Beck, a mathematical science professor and a research committee member. "The committee then recommends these proposals in a particular order and sends them to . . . Fr. Gallen, who makes the final decision on which grants will be approved.

"There were objections raised to the nature of Dr. Zajac's research when his proposal was discussed by the committee, that it wasn't in line with the Mission Statement of the University," he said.

Dr. Bernard J. Downey, the research committee chairman and the director of research at Villanova, noted that "what we [the committee] do is send out letters to at least four people external to the University who are considered experts in the areas in question. We get their responses back, and then the committee members — the faculty members and myself — look at the proposal. We then come together and talk about it."

According to Downey, the committee ranked Zajac's proposal high on the list of research projects in need of funding. He further noted, however, that "at least one individual on the committee was concerned about the fact that there were references in the proposal to the fact that these chemicals involved in this research can be used possibly in the development of propellants and high explosives. They [the compounds involved in the research] are energy-rich compounds which can be used basically for explosives, and this individual expressed a concern.

"The committee discussed it and recommended to Fr. Gallen that we not support it because of that."

The Rev. Lawrence Gallen, O.S.A., vice president for Academic Affairs.

The committee expressed to Gallen its concern over Zajac's proposal in a March 13 letter. Three days later, Gallen responded to the committee members in a letter of his own, which read:

"Let me first say that I do appreciate your sensitivity about research done at Villanova in the light of the University's Mission Statement. I wish that all in the Villanova Community shared your concern. I agree with you that a statement of policy should be developed which would clarify the type of research that is consonant with our mission. To this end, I will shortly be in touch with Dr. Downey in order to establish an ad hoc committee which will propose such a policy.

"In the case of Dr. Zajac, however, I do not agree with your recommendation. Dr. Zajac's research is basic work in organic synthesis which I see as being free from any moral implication. What basic research may eventually lead to does not color the moral quality of the research itself. If this were true, we could not do basic research in particle physics, genetic engineering, high speed computers, etc.

"How the basic research is used is, of course, another question. All the above examples have far reaching possibilities for good or evil — the basic research itself should not be colored by how society might choose to apply it.

"In the case of Dr. Zajac's research, the application also has possibilities for good or evil. I see no reason for assuming that the latter will be the choice.

"I do admit, however, that some basic research would seem to be immoral in itself. In my mind, it is this type of research that we as a community should address ourselves."

In an interview on Wednesday, Zajac said he was unaware of the research committee's objection to his proposal, as well as Gallen's March 16 letter. "I was never aware of the objections," he said.

After reading a copy of Gallen's letter, provided by a reporter, Zajac commented, "I think what Fr. Gallen has to say is how most people doing research would feel."

Concerning his research, Zajac said, "If people read the proposal carefully, high energy compounds can be used for propellants, as well as explosives." He also pointed out that nowhere in his proposal does the word "explosives" appear, adding that "anytime you do science, there will be implications down the road." But he questioned whether that in itself should inhibit basic research.

According to Beck, "[Zajac] proposed to investigate some chemical compounds that are described as having a high energy density. They are therefore useful as explosives or as rocket fuels. He is not proposing to investigate how they can be used for such applications; he is only investigating methods of being able to synthesize them."

"My [personal] position was that the research was fundamental, basic research, and at this stage there was no relationship between the application of the product for military purposes and the research," Downey commented. "Therefore, I recommended to Fr. Gallen that the research be supported."

But Dr. Miriam G. Vosburgh, a sociology professor and a research committee member, said that "the committee is concerned with the funding where the obvious reason for the research is to make explosives. We feel this is not in line with the mission of the University. Making more weapons of war is against the sentiment and Mission Statement of the University.

"We've devoted very serious thought to this," she said. "I can see two sides to this. It is an enormously important issue."

Other members of the Faculty Research Committee include Dr. Vito L. Punzi, an assistant professor of chemical engineering; Dr. Mary M. Ziemer, an associate professor of nursing; Dr. Fritz Nova, a political science professor; and Dr. Francis W. Wolek, the director of research for Commerce and Finance.

The research committee set a Nov. 15, 1983, deadline for this year's Faculty Summer Grants Program applications, according to Beck. He said the committee began working on the proposals at the start of the second semester.

Dr. Bernard J. Downey, chairman of the faculty research committee.

"Our recommendations for the past several years have been in the form of taking the proposals and presenting them in rank order," he explained. "As far as I understand, the practice has been to fund as many as possible."

Plagiarism Rules Clarified

By BRIAN D. WEBB

Plagiarism is a form of dishonesty that has concerned the Villanova administration for several years. Although it has not been a serious problem at Villanova, it is an offense that the administration and students need to become more aware of, according to several administrators.

"We need to elaborate something a lot more clearly to students about what constitutes plagiarism and what does not," said the Rev. John P. O'Malley, O.S.A., dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences. O'Malley added that the College intends to set up a committee to write a specific statement clearly defining the act of plagiarism.

The Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., vice president for Academic Affairs, however, does not believe that such a statement is needed. "Anyone who doesn't know what plagiarism is does not belong in college," said Gallen.

The official Villanova definition of plagiarism, as it appears in the Blue Book, states, "Plagiarism — dishonesty in any assignment, test, or examination." It also states that first-time offenders will receive a grade of "F" and subsequent offenders will be expelled from the school.

According to Gallen, there have been [illegible] plagiarism cases in the past two and a half years. In these cases, some of the students received an "F" in the course and some were given a reprimand.

Gallen said he sees his policy to give accused students a second chance. "Plagiarism is not black and white — it is hard to define," he said. He added, however, that he found it hard to believe that a student could copy an entire paper and not realize he was doing something illegal.

The Rev. John P. O'Malley, O.S.A., dean of Arts and Sciences.

"We always talk to the [accused] student," said Gallen. "When it is quite evident, we move." Gallen added that the accused students can appeal the sentence, but that he is the one who makes the final decision. "I am the final arbitrator," said Gallen.

O'Malley believes that many students commit plagiarism without really intending to. "I suspect that they learn in high school to go to the encyclopedia and copy a lot of material. It is maybe even encouraged on the secondary school level to use resources without adequate use of quotation marks."

Although professors are required to report all cases of plagiarism to Gallen, there is a suspicion among the administration that many cases are not reported.

"I suspect that there is much plagiarism that is undetected," said O'Malley. "In the academic community there is a certain measure of trust . . . faculty are not policemen."

According to O'Malley, one example of plagiarism that is difficult to detect occurs when a student turns in the same paper to satisfy two courses. Another instance involves the fabrication of information for use in one's paper. Obviously, in both these cases, it would be almost impossible for a professor to realize what a student is doing, he indicated.

"Plagiarism is an offense against justice . . . it penalizes every other student — particularly where grades are marked on a curve," said O'Malley. He believes that when a student is dishonest and receives a grade higher than he deserves, it might "tip the balance" in his favor and all the honest students will suffer.

Contemporary Films Course

Contemporary Films Course

THE 2011, a new course on contemporary films, will be taught this fall by Dr. Joan Lynch of the Theater Department. The course, which will meet Tuesdays form 3 p.m.-5:30 p.m., will explore various approaches to the analysis of contemporary films, with an emphasis on interdisciplinary study. Students will analyze such films as The Big Chill, The Right Stuff, The Return of Martin Guerre, Vertigo, and others included in the Fall 1984 Cultural Film Series, "Myths, Memories, and Obsessions," THE 2010, "Film Analysis," is a prerequisite for this course.

Campus Safer for Pedestrians

By JOE ALESSANDRINE

Is the Villanova campus safe for pedestrians?

Patrolman Robert H. Adams of the Radnor Township Traffic Safety Unit said recently, "Villanova is reasonably safe."

And, Dr. Richard Neville, vice president for Student Life, noted, "I think students are safe if they observe the traffic signs."

During the 1984 spring term, there has been only one incident in which a pedestrian was struck by a car. This occurred on March 3 at the intersection of Lancaster and Ithan Avenues.

But Adams senses the worst is yet to come for campus pedestrians as construction of the two new dormitories and the new field house continues. Pedestrian traffic will increase as will the safety risks, he said.

Neville remarked that the new fences erected along the two parking lots on Lancaster Avenue were mandatory for final zoning approval of the new field house by the Radnor Township Council.

Adams and Neville both agreed that the fences should consolidate pedestrian traffic to the traffic lights located at either end of the lots. Thus, jaywalkers — who run the biggest risk of being struck by cars — would be decreased in number.

But both men are aware of the likelihood that the fence will be pried open before too long.

Adams is also pleased to see the new traffic light placed by the state in front of St. Mary's Hall on Route 320. He noted that the idea was right to do so since by next winter, when the conditions on the SEPTA overpass bridge will again be hazardous, drivers will "be familiar with the light" and be able to stop despite the icy roads.

The Radnor Traffic Safety Unit was recently called to the bridge to direct traffic away from students who were crossing over as a result of the excessive flooding in the pedestrial tunnel beneath the rail lines. "There were even two SEPTA policemen to keep students from crossing the tracks," said Adams.

Adams offered a few suggestions on improving safety in the southeast portion of the campus, which will soon see a larger number of pedestrians as a result of the new construction. He proposed that a sidewalk be placed on the west side of Ithan Avenue from Lancaster Avenue down to Alwyn Lane (directly across from Stanford Hall), which designates the end of University property in that area. In addition, Adams said there should be a cross-walk in front of Stanford Hall.

"We're very concerned about student welfare," said Neville. He remarked that Adams' idea for a sidewalk is a "reasonable suggestion," but noted that many ideas have been explored to decrease the risk of crossing such dangerous intersections near campus as Lancaster and Ithan Avenues.

Council Sets Guidelines

By ANTHONY EDWARDS

Villanova's Council of Deans, consisting of all six academic deans, the registrar, the director of Admissions, director of the Library and the vice president for Academic Affairs, meets once a month to discuss areas of mutual academic interest.

The purpose of the Council is to facilitate communication and cooperation among the separate colleges and to set guidelines for other such academic issues as orientation, parents day and some of the library issues, including the noise problem.

Dr. Angelo Armenti, dean of the University College and a professor of physics, said that the Council "discusses issues and occasionally certain resolutions come out. These are usually administration decisions. It usually concerns implementation of existing policy."

The Council can also recommend certain plans to the vice president for Academic Affairs, the Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., so that he can implement them or pass them on to President John M. Driscoll. "The vice president is the chairman of the Council; that is the reason, in fact, why his position exists," said the Rev. John O'Malley, O.S.A., dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences.

Although the vice president is chairman of the group, everyone is considered an equal. "Yes, everyone has an equal vote. The only way to convince [the council members] that you are right is by your arguments," noted Armenti.

Dr. Angelo Armenti, dean of the University College.

Items for the agenda are written up as inter-office communcations or notes and sent to Gallen. He then places the items on the final copy of the month's agenda.

"The Council's main function is one of coordination. Even though each school is autonomous, there is still a great deal of interdependence between the individual schools; for example, Arts and Sciences depend on Commerce and Finance for economics classes," said O'Malley.

Both O'Malley and Armenti stressed that, although everyone on the Council takes his job seriously, there is still a lot of joking and needling done. "Each dean is proud of his college, but it is a civilized and forthright group," said O'Malley.

"We look forward to the meeting every month. We work hard, but still manage to get along and have some fun along the way. We have a bunch of enormous egos in there, but we all get along and get our work done."

A Lebanon Crisis Review

By MARK HOPEMAN

"Lebanon is the victim of international conflicts," said the Rev. John O'Malley, O.S.A., dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, who opened the April 16 program, "A Seminar on Lebanon: Crucible or Crossroads," and welcomed six experts who presented their views on the situation.

George Siam, counselor of political affairs at the Embassy of Lebanon in Washington, D.C., and Marius Deeb of Georgetown University's Center for Contemporary Arab Studies, explained Syria's role in Lebanon; Rashid Khalidi, also from Georgetown University's Center for Contemporary Arab Studies, presented Palestine's involvement; Judith Kipper of the American Enterprise Institute in Washington, D.C., and William Stanton, Lebanon desk officer of the Bureau of Near Eastern and South Asian Affairs, U.S. Department of State, addressed the topic, "United States Policy in Lebanon: Two Perspectives;" and Bruce Stanley of the University of Pennsylvania Middle East Center, made the closing remarks.

Siam said Lebanon became a Republic in 1943, and until the 1975 war, was the only stable country modeled after democracies among the Arab nations. "It was not perfect," he said. "Now it is part of the Arab conflict.

Deeb said that Syria had intervened in a civil war in Lebanon and has stayed there since the mid-seventies. They were supposed to disarm the militias, but they never did. Since Hafez Assad took power in a coup in Syria in 1970, his foreign policy has been one of making a policy and enforcing it. According to Deeb, Assad wants to make Lebanon a client state.

Khalidi said that Palestine's role in Lebanon might not have been as important as many believe. "Now they're not there and the fighting still goes on," he said. "Which might mean they weren't responsible in the first place.

"The Palestinians were not there of their own volition," Khalidi said, referring to the initial displacement of the Palestinians following Israel's reestablishment. When the Palestinians moved into Lebanon, they brought to Lebanon Israel's aggression against the PLO. From 1968 to 1982 there were an increasing number of attacks on Lebanese targets — civilians."

There have been 20,000 Palestinians killed in Lebanon and 40,000 wounded. Four Palestinian refugee camps have been totally destroyed, others bombarded. Khalidi said, "Both the Lebanese and the Palestinians have been victimized. Both fell into a trap that has harmed them both."

Connelly Center Will Stop Selling Shirts

By PAULA SOLLAMI

The Connelly Center will not be selling articles of clothing any longer due to the unnecessary competition this creates with the Villanova bookstore, according to the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., president of the University.

The decision was made by the administration upon consultation with the bookstore, said Dr. Richard Neville, vice president for Student Life, and will go into effect upon the sellout of the Connelly Center's clothing inventory.

Many Connelly Center staff members are upset about this discontinuation of dry good sales. According to Tom Botte, an information booth employee, "The College of Commerce and Finance stresses the importance of free enterprise. Competition promotes better quality and lower prices for the students — a monopoly [illegible]."

Driscoll refuted this comment, stating, "[illegible] is a [illegible] a good sense move."

A petition originated by the Connelly Center staff members, written by Mike Cusack, is being passed among the student body. It states that the Connelly Center should have the right to sell clothing articles to visitors to the school for the sake of convenience. The bookstore is not open on the weekends, nor in the evenings, when many people visit the University.

Driscoll stated that when the petition is presented to him he will consider it and any appeals that will be made regarding this subject. However, "the administration will make sure that the bookstore is open on the weekends when visitors to the University come in greatest numbers," he added.

The Connelly Center will continue to sell candy and the other items it currently sells, according to Marc Tuchman, director of Connelly Center. The [illegible] pertains to articles of clothing.

Villanovan Wins Contest

The Villanovan has been awarded first place with special merit by the American Scholastic Press Association for the third consecutive year in the annual nationwide contest.

In the annual review and contest awards, the Villanovan received 985 of a possible 1000 points. The newspaper scored perfectly on general plan, page design, editing and art. First place with special merit is awarded to a publication that scores over 900 points.

Additionally, two individual prizes were awarded to the newspaper. Editor-in-chief Leonard J. La Barth won a Best Editorial award for the Dec. 10, 1982 "Covenant II" editorial, and Best Sports Coverage was awarded to the Villanovan sports editors and staff for the Jan. 28, 1983, issue.

In the judges' evaluation, "The Villanovan is a truly excellent publication. Your staff has included a number of features that speak well of a dedicated and hard-working staff. Your paper has a very professional appearance. You have done an outstanding job."

According to contest rules, first place with special merit is awarded in recognition of an outstanding example of a student publication in format, content and presentation.

In the editing category, the Villanovan scored perfectly for presenting facts "accurately, avoiding suppositions and misstatements of data and presenting material in good taste."

The 985 score is the highest ever received by the Villanovan; the newspaper scored 920 and 970 the past two years. Additionally, of the 19 colleges and universities that won first place with special merit this year, the Villanovan was the only repeat winner from last year. More than 500 schools participated in the contest.

U.N. Speaker on Disarmament

By DIANA K. SUGG

John Martensen, the United Nations (UN) undersecretary for disarmament affairs, discussed the role of the United Nations in the prevention of nuclear war. The presentation was held April 11, in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall.

Martensen, a Swedish lawyer and career diplomat, explained that the U.N. has done extensive studies on nuclear war and concluded that if one is started, "civilization as we know it will cease to exist." In 1978, this and other conclusions were brought before a special session for disarmament — the first the U.N. ever held. It was at this session that the group decided by consensus that mankind is confronting a choice: "disarmament or annihilation."

A second special session, held in 1982, achieved unanimous support for the launching of a world disarmament campaign. Its main purpose is to inform and educate people in an "objective, factual, and neutral" way. Martensen stressed that the idea was not to "apportion blame" to any one country, but rather to "bring awareness to the people and spread the facts."

It is felt that by creating a "constructive, realistic, and well-informed" opinion, the public will be able to generate a political environment conducive to the disarmament issue.

Martensen commented that this campaign should be done in all countries throughout the world. He said that once people discovered that the nuclear arms issue concerned themselves and their grandchildren, things started happening. He pointed to the fact that in the last few years, the issue has received much attention, especially from the media, and one of the consequences has been a much safer environment.

Although Martensen quoted such statistics as the fact that, at the present time, if a nuclear war starts, 1.1 billion people will be killed immediately, he maintained that "we have to be realistic." Every country has a right to its freedom and independence, Martensen said. He commented that we should try to halt the arms race in a "mutually balanced way." "We should seek our national security on lower instead of higher levels," he added.

Currently, the arms race is costing eight hundred billion dollars a year. Martensen feels that, in view of the other contemporary serious economic problems countries will not be able to maintain such a high level of spending for arms. He also commented that his view of the future is "less pessimistic" than many others. In addition to the economic factor involved, he expressed faith in "human rationality" and said that the leadership in the world realizes that nuclear war is not possible.

Unjust Law

A law denying federal aid to male college students who refuse to register for the draft has been challenged recently by Swarthmore and Haverford Colleges — and rightly so.

These two schools, along with Oberlin in Ohio and Earlham in Richmond, Ind., claim that the federal law known as the Solomon Amendment discriminates against such students, depriving them of their right to education and violating First Amendment rights of freedom of speech and of association.

"The legislation is an example of the inappropriate use of government power by linking unrelated issues," said Haverford President Robert Stevens. "It is bound to have a chilling effect on academic freedom."

The four liberal arts colleges made their arguments in a "friend-of-the-court" legal brief delivered to the United States Supreme Court.

Previously, in June 1983, U.S. District Judge Donald Alsop in St. Paul, Minn., ruled that the law was unconstitutional in that it singles out non-registered students for punishment without trial and forces students to incriminate themselves, in violation of their Fifth Amendment rights. However, the judge's order was stayed by the Supreme Court until it could review the case. The high court started the process this week and will likely announce a decision sometime this summer. Until that time, the law will remain in effect.

In their brief, the schools noted that the Solomon Amendment "isolates particular groups of male students for special, adverse treatment in an area — education — totally unrelated to the objective of military conscription that the statute is designed to advance."

Additionally, the brief states that the law "interferes with the colleges' ability to determine whom they will enroll . . . with the academic process itself by disrupting the atmosphere of free exchange between the student and the administration/faculty . . . [and] may affect the First Amendment rights of some faculty and administrators by imposing legal duties, enforceable by criminal penalties, to assist in the process of conscription."

If the Solomon Amendment were to stand, according to the brief, "Congress could then require, as conditions for student assistance, that . . . students [certify] that they had never engaged in any act of civil disobedience . . . that they had never unlawfully received medicaid funds or food stamps, or that they had never obtained unlawful abortions."

How does Villanova University feel about the Solomon Amendment?

According to Vincent Femia, the school's director of financial aid, "Our position is the same as Swarthmore and Haverford's: we're against it . . . I hope the Supreme Court knocks it out. I don't like to be a policeman."

Those fighting the Solomon Amendment should be commended for their efforts. As the legal brief shows, the law is wrong on all accounts. Let's hope the Supreme Court agrees.

Plagiarism

"Anyone who doesn't know what plagiarism is does not belong in college," the Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., vice president for Academic Affairs, said recently. Probably any college student could tell you that passing off a published work as your own is plagiarism, but Villanova needs a clear policy statement on plagiarism, one which would define its boundaries and penalties.

How many professors give their students any guidelines for the attribution of material? Not too many. Plagiarism is not always clear-cut; the knotty point is usually whether the person intended to deceive or made a simple mechanical error.

The Rev. John P. O'Malley, O.S.A., dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, said, "It is maybe even encouraged on the secondary school level to use resources without adequate use of quotation marks." When the penalties are so high, the responsibility to clear up this sort of ignorance belongs to the University.

O'Malley stated recently that he plans to have a committee prepare a statement which would define the act of plagiarism. That action should be encouraged, in the hope that such a statement could be given to students as a University policy that he felt could be [illegible]

Villanova's New Bomb Fund

To the Editor:

Villanova University recently decided to fund basic research for the development of a more efficient explosive for use in bombs. The decision represents a clear departure from the mission of the University. In fact, the faculty committee appointed to study this proposal reached the unanimous conclusion that this research is not appropriate for a university and should not be undertaken. This research, despite its "basic" nature, contributes to a technology that has only one purpose — destruction. However, the committee's recommendation was rejected by Father Gallen, and the research is now slated for next year.

Any university whose purpose is to effect positive change in society should not sanction research that contributes to the destruction of human beings. Since Villanova is a Christian university and since a Catholic priest approved this research, a person may well wonder how this research can be considered in light of the Church's most central tenet: regard for human life.

Historically, the Church has strongly condemned actions that destroy innocent human life. Its position on abortion is a prime example. The result of both abortion and the technology for an improved explosive is the same: destruction of innocent human life. Although basic research conducted in a Mendel laboratory is far removed from the battlefield, the blood will be on the hands of the university that enhanced this technology when the bombs start to fall. The purpose of this research is known from the outset. This new explosive will be used to make a better bomb.

The Church also condemns what it calls "unjust wars" and the bombing of non-military targets. Once this technology for this improved explosive is available, decisions about when it should be used cannot be controlled by the university. Hence, it is unleashing a monster by making available to any dictator or demented leader in the world able to negotiate an arms deal or buy in the black market a technology useful in satisfying any despotic decree or irrational whim to wage war.

What contributions will a more efficient explosive make to society? Proponents of the research may argue that an improved explosive will aid in deterring war. But it is the nuclear arsenal that acts as a deterrent because of a global fear of annihilation should these weapons ever be used. However, conventional bombs are still considered usable technology. Thus, it is very likely that this research could be put to use on some battlefield, anywhere in the world, as soon as the end product becomes available.

Perhaps some day a Villanova alumnus will return to the campus in a wheelchair, a victim of a new, more efficient bomb. Then Father Gallen and the administration can take pride in the fact that a bomb this fine Augustinian university helped design is the reason the former student no longer has legs.

New Problem

To the Editor:

In case you haven't heard — Bryn Mawr Trust and Company is removing their branch from the Villanova campus before the next school year begins. Isn't that the Villanova way? Give a convenience to the students and then take it away from them.

So, where does that leave the students? Well, for those of us who have cars, there is no problem in getting to a bank. But, one might think of the incoming freshmen and sophomores who will have no access to a car or a bank. Did the University feel the need for its students to have yet another reason to travel off-campus? Presently, the students only leave campus to have a social life and to go to their respective apartments, acquired after they were kicked off-campus after freshman year because the University does not provide adequate housing. Now students can leave to deposit and withdraw money. Well, we're all good hitchhikers by now anyway, I guess.

It's also nice to know that there will be two bank machines on campus. That is generous of the bank, in collaboration with the administration. Now, instead of the banking machines being twenty minutes long on a Friday afternoon, they will be an hour long. I wonder how often these will be "temporarily out of service." I would hope that another two or three machines will be installed in Kennedy Hall.

Not that I'm down on Villanova. It's a great academic institution. I cheer at the basketball games and everything. But, some of the policies which seem unimportant to the administration are very important to the students. Something positive must be done in order to make up for the loss of the bank next year. It's an inconven-

Consistent Discipline

Did you know that if you wanted to start a fire in your dorm that it could be done scot-free of any disciplinary punishment? Sure, a fire isn't too serious; the most that could happen to you is probation, but you can always appeal it and most likely get out of it. Now, if something more serious occurs, like dumping ice in the hall or pulling down a bulletin board, this is totally inexcusable. Probation is overlooked and off-campus residency is considered as the desired punishment. This makes sense, since somebody could have stepped on the ice, which would lead to getting their feet wet, and that individual might catch a cold. Somebody also could have kicked the bulletin board and sprained their toe. These outcomes are much more serious in nature than a fire which can jeopardize one's life. It's incredible how ironic this sounds, but unfortunately it has occurred, and it has become a growing dilemma at one of the dorms here at Villanova.

Sometimes in life, we as individuals make mistakes or engage in a wrongdoing. Unfortunately, when these bad or unjust things occur, there is a certain disciplinary action that must be forwarded. The extent of this disciplinary action depends on the extent of the wrongdoing. The main idea here is that authority must be created and its effect should set an example for others. If wrongdoings override the authority, then disruption and chaos will become imminent.

Corr Hall, a highly standard and proclaimed academic residence, has had some problems lately. It seems that this dorm has been the center of vandalism, disruption and total chaos. Residence Life has stated that this particular dorm is the No. 1 problem that is dealt with in their department. They are sick of hearing the daily reports of fires, kegs, TV's and refrigerators thrown out of the windows (and the list goes on).

The question was raised: "What has Residence Life done to handle this situation?" Well, they can use the old probation punishment. There are two types of probation and disciplinary action. This punishment was the most commonly used, but its effect was minimal. Now, the harsher punishment was off-campus residency, but it was only used as a threat, instead of the real thing. It seems Residence Life felt it was [illegible] of the year that the majority of the problems occurred, and since the people involved were freshmen, it was almost understandable that these crazy and wild actions might happen. So a kind of break was always provided. The drastic punishment was "expulsion" which sort of stayed back in the wings. It was never looked into as an aid in disciplinary punishment.

So, Residence Life submitted the several types of probationary punishments, but the problems progressed and Residence Life was continually troubled on what decisions had to be made on the punishments.

As the problems got worse, so did the so-called "image" of Residence Life. The problems that were occurring in the dorm were greatly overriding the assessed punishments.

Residence Life decided that a meeting of the students who lived in the dorm was necessary. At the meeting, the head of Residence Life, spoke of how the problems that have occurred during the year have not been taken lightly and that they are sick of hearing reports of vandalism and disruption that occur constantly.

He stated it is most likely that the individuals who are the cause of the problems might not be caught, but action will be taken. My reaction to this was, why would they talk about taking action now, when it should have been done at the beginning of the year?

What this whole passage comes down to is: Residence Life did not stay consistent in their use of authority. If one is going to state in the beginning of the year: "If a person is caught in any vandalism actions, the person will be thrown off-campus, then this action must be upheld and carried out from day one. If it isn't, then inconsistency of authority develops and Residence Life ends up in a difficult position. If a problem occurs and punishment is submitted, that problem can be compared to another problem which was worse in nature and was given a lighter punishment. This is where inconsistency catches up to you.

So, the result is Residence Life is trying to do their job, but since it wasn't done correctly in the beginning, it's hard to do correctly near the year's end. Residence Life can be characterized by the aphorism: "All bark and no bite."

University's Role

To the Editor:

In "The Idea of University," David Poma presented a narrow-minded, and incorrect opinion of the function and duty of the university in society. Quoting a text 130 years old, Mr. Poma expressed the opinion that a liberal education is the primary means for universities to exist, being the best way to open-mindedness and knowledge. He focuses on the arts and humanities, which he feels are neglected in certain engineering and science curricula that cater to "profit-seeking firms and students chasing the almighty dollar."

It is my contention, though, that Mr. Poma fails to understand the complexity of society and the means which universities use to teach the great diversity of skills and knowledge needed in society.

Liberal education is one special method of and reason for college, but there are many others — some concerned with knowledge in and out of the classroom, others with social activity and athletics. In fact, each person has his own reasons for attending or not attending college, and the university seeks to meet as many needs as possible, because society is enriched by people whose needs are cultivated and special skills honed.

In case of engineering and "hard" sciences, the knowledge and skills sought by students and needed by society are very specialized and well-defined, and the university must reflect this situation in its curricula. The quality of and progress in technological craftsmanship, which provides to a great degree the architecture of our environment, depends on special skills which will be applied in specific ways upon graduation. Other areas of knowledge do not have such specific application in society, and their college curricula may be more "liberal." The reason for curricula being so different — yet so specific in themselves as to what constitutes successful completion of a Bachelor degree — is careful thought by the curricula makers in light of society as it exists today.

If a degree in an engineering field requires no humanities, but 20 credits in the major per semester then so be it. There will always be those who seek the liberal education, David, because it is needed as well. But to my mind, the only "measure" of the success of a university, with its students, teachers and society, is that each is satisfied after four years that their time was well spent and their goals realized, whatever they are.

To the Editor:

I would like to take this brief opportunity to publicly thank everyone who supported me through out my campaign for student body president. You deserve a great deal of credit despite the loss.

As well, I would like to congratulate Luke Nolan on his victory, and wish him and his administration the best of luck in the upcoming year.

Political Consequence

To the Editor:

Luke Nolan, coach of the women's rugby team, has won the election for student body president. Mike Ryan, Commerce and Finance senator and former vice-president of the student body, has lost. I think this says something about Villanova. Something that isn't too positive. We choose our leaders on something other than experience. Not that I don't like Luke Nolan; I'm sure he is a very nice guy and a great friend. But as far as I'm concerned, a student body president should be more than a "nice guy."

On the other hand, I'm sure the administration is delighted with our choice, for now they can continue their omnipotent rule over a weak student body led by a "nice guy" president. They can continue their antiquated policies that negatively affect all of our lives and continue making unpopular decisions that reflect out to society how second-class Villanova continues to be.

It doesn't have to be that way, though. If we had a strong student government filled with intelligent, dedicated individuals, led by a strong president, we could indeed influence the course of this university's policies. We could bring about a positive change. We really could be a school that is funded by students for students,

I hope, in the future, we think about the consequences of our political choices instead of just hopping on the popularity bandwagon.

Burke Aims to Educate VU Students

By JOE ALLESSANDRINE

Where are the bad little Villanova boys and girls sent? The answer is to Joseph A. Burke in the judicial affairs office in Dougherty Hall.

Now don't get the wrong idea. Joe Burke is not Snidley Whiplash or Simon Legree reincarnated, contrary to what some who have been "referred" to him may claim. "I realize that I'm not Mr. Popularity," jokes Burke.

Burke's job involves handling individual disciplinary cases that the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, issues to him. These include incidents such as violations of the school's alcohol policy, violation of visitation privileges and even student arrests.

For example, if an underage student is found with a case of beer in his dormitory room, he is sent to Burke. If a male student is caught in a female dormitory after visiting hours, he soon sees him. And, if a student steals, he is soon Burke's property. He then procedes to decide the penalty. Burke's jurisdiction includes students living off-campus and commuter students as well.

"I'm in an awkward position at times, but I realize I've got to do the job in the fairest and most just fashion I can," Burke explains.

Burke is in his third year at Villanova. He graduated from St. Francis College in Loretto, Pa., with bachelor degrees in political science and history. He also holds a master's degree in guidance counseling and student personnel administration from Ohio University.

He is a member of Amnesty International, a world-wide human rights organization concerned with the rights of all mankind, regardless of a person's race, color, sex, ethnic background, religion or other beliefs. "It provides an opportunity to get involved with cases in other countries in which someone has been imprisoned, tortured or even put to death for their ideas," Burke explains.

Burke is the coordinator for Amnesty International Group 288, which consists of over 500 members. He also coordinates the new Villanova campus group.

Amnesty International was started in 1963 and won a Nobel Peace Prize in 1977. Its headquarters are in London.

Burke took over as adviser of the Villanova College Democrats last spring. Since then, the organization has sponsored four major events and a number of voter registration drives on campus. "Something is in the works for this spring, around primary time," he hints.

Burke feels that a "common thread runs throughout" his work with judicial affairs, Amnesty International and College Democrats. His involvement in each suggests that, as Burke puts it, "One person does make a difference, if the time and energy are put into the effort." He adds, "Success is measured in incrimeters."

Presently, Burke is a candidate for the Democratic Committee in Upper Darby. In 1976, he ran for a delegate spot to the Democratic National Convention. Though he was defeated, Burke says, "At least I had a lot of fun campaigning."

It's hard to think of Burke as a hardline disciplinarian, but that's his job. "I see my role in a disciplinary setting as being more of an educator rather than just a disciplinarian. It's a real challenge, he declares.

From all indications, he can handle that challenge. His colleague, Stack says, "I am very appreciative to have someone on my staff who is so keenly aware of the problems of social justice in our world, and who has shown many times over his commitment to solve these problems."

"I'm not interested in being popular — what's important is that I'm merely respected," notes Burke.

Health Awareness Promoted

By ROBERT O'MALLEY

How's your health? That is just one question that three senior nursing majors were asking Villanova students this semester as part of their course in health promotion.

The course, for second semester nursing students, is interested in, as the title implies, promoting the health of people, specifically high risk students.

"What it is, is you're just promoting the health of individuals who are already well, but are going to be at risk for some problem," explained Gina Dunleavy.

Dunleavy, along with fellow seniors Kathy Smith and Pam Zuchowski, was among a group of nursing majors chosen to run programs to help promote the health of people.

"Kathy, Pam Zuchowski and myself were cited on Villanova's campus because we are resident assistants, and therefore, we know a lot of people on campus. [Being a resident assistant,] we have a lot of connections that help us run our programs," said Dunleavy.

As part of a program run throughout the Philadelphia and suburban areas, these three nursing majors had to first make a survey to discover what health problems there are on campus. Only then could they create programs designed to counteract the problems they found.

"We really had to go around and find out a little bit about the Villanova community, as far as health is concerned," noted Dunleavy. "One of the ways we did that was we had a survey in all of the women's dorms on women's health issues," she said.

"We had previously targeted women's health as a very weak issue," said Smith. But they decided to research the problem by sending surveys to all of the women's dorms on campus to see what specific areas needed to be talked about. The survey also asked women if they were willing to come to programs discussing women's health issues.

"There was a very good response to that, and there was very positive feedback as far as whether they would come to the program," noted Zuchowski.

"There was a definite desire to learn more [but] unfortunately, it's very hard on a college campus to ask people to come to something extracurricular, even something they may find as a need. We need to find another alternative other than programming," commented Zuchowski.

One of the main problems that was found through their survey was a lack of knowledge in the area of health. "One of the things we really looked at was a lack of body awareness, and I think that's something that was a theme throughout everything that we did," explained Dunleavy.

In addition to women's health issues, these students also ran a program on first aid for RA's, which was designed to give the resident assistants an idea of what the body can and cannot do, as well as eliminate some myths about first aid. In addition, the three were also involved in Wellness Week, in which they ran a life expectancy game at the fitness festival.

"That was good, because it told us a little about the Villanova community. It showed us that most of the people on the campus are basically fit and are in fairly good health," noted Dunleavy. Most of them have very low risk factors, and it showed most of these people that they were going to live long lives. It also showed us that these people are physically able to do a lot of things and it's our job to help them do it," commented Dunleavy.

Their rather busy semester spent promoting health has brought them into contact with the administration many times, including Residence Life and the Rev. John Stack, O.S.A., who were helpful in carrying out their programs.

The three nursing students have already made their recommendations for next year's group, and if we're lucky, we should all benefit from their semester of

Sophomore Captures the Miss Villanova Crown

By N. JOHN CAVUTO

If one carefully examines the requirements that must be met in order for a female to run for Miss Villanova, it should be noted that sanity is not a prerequisite. Which is what the new Miss Villanova, Vicki Liotta, was definitely missing.

The reign of Banita Wilson, the women who popularized kneecap sex, finally came to an end last Tuesday before what can only be called a less than enthusiastic audience.

The audience, which acted as if they came solely as an alternative to doing their laundry, watched the five contestants compete in three categories — evening gown, bathing suit and talent. Points were awarded on a one-to-ten basis in each of the categories, with 10 points being the best. A fourth category, the dreaded intangibles, was also included.

The evening gown competition saw such diversity as a good old-fashioned white gown with matching gloves, worn by Annette Laurio, to a jungle outfit complete with attachable monkey, which was worn, of course, by Liotta. During this portion of the contest, emcee Tom O'Mara questioned the contestants on their answers to questions on the Miss Villanova application. Here, there were several original responses given: For instance, when Amy McGovern was asked why "I Know What Boys Like" was the song which [illegible] but, she coyly responded, "I know what boys like; I know better than to give it to them."

To the same question, Liotta responded in what was soon becoming her normal manner for the night. When asked to comment on why she chose "If I only had a brain," she screamed, "I'm a vegetable." Very nice Vicki. Next.

On to the bathing suit competition where the women had to display their wares to the now slightly-amused audience. Gabrielle Glennen, the eventual first runner-up, was the only one to deviate from normalness, coming out in a hula skirt and white nose, looking more like an American tourist in Guatemala.

Finally, there was talent, a word which should be taken very loosely. Debbie Young, who was named second runner-up, did what she had done the whole night, and for all we know is all that she can do — dance. Thank you Debbie, and on to McGovern, whose Carnac the Magnificent act caused more than a few shocked faces in the room. And where did she get that Ed McMahon look-a-like? Glennen sang next, doing her own impression of Pearl Bailey shattering the crystal glass. Unfortunately, it was live and not Memorex.

And what more can be said of Liotta, a tremendous dancer who showed that if you don't have a partner, a chair will do just fine? Lauria ended the night's agony by singing songs from such different artists as Stevie Nicks and Led Zeppelin. In between she changed the pace by performing the classic ballad "I Wanna Be Loved by You."

The saddest part of the evening followed as Banita — much to the disappointment of a now bored crowd, who wished they had done their wash instead — relinquished her crown. When Liotta was announced as the new Miss Villanova, it came much to the delight of her cheering section, which began affectionately calling her "psycho." A better description could not be found.

And the best thing of all [illegible] the Miss Villanova [illegible] happens once a year.

Did You Know . . .

● That Fernand J. St. Germain, D-RI, recently announced that his House Banking Committee will serve as a "clearing house for information" as part of an extensive investigation into bank service fees?

St. Germain has called on consumers, regulatory agencies and public interest groups to forward to the committee any specific information about fees charged by financial institutions. "We want to know from as many customers as possible how these services are provided" noted St. Germain.

Specifically, the banking committee wants information on fees for cashing checks, delays in crediting salary checks and the cost of checking services. The banking fee system "is a silent, almost underground activity that shifts millions of dollars from consumers to the banks," St. Germain charged.

All interested parties should send any information on fees and charges to: The Honorable Fernand St. Germain, chairman, Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs Committee, Rayburn House Office Building, Washington, D.C. 20515.

● The Consumer Federation of America is pushing forth a new campaign which will inform the consumer of possible savings options. With the deregulation of the banking industry, there have appeared many new savings alternatives. Many years ago, the consumer had but one option, the passbook savings account. Today, however, there are many higher interest accounts

The savings option campaign is described in a pamphlet which shows different alternatives. This pamphlet may be obtained by sending a stamped, self-addressed envelope to the Consumer Federation of America, 1314 14th Street N.W., Washington, D.C. 20005.

The editorial staff of the Consumer Affairs Research Board would at this time like to thank all contributing, associate and assistant editors for their contributions during the past school year. Extended appreciation is given to Dr. A.S. Butkys, our adviser. To next year's editorial staff, the best of luck.

GREEK NEWS

LXA and PBD are Winners in Greek Week

On March 30, 1984, Villanova's annual Greek Week began and ran until April 7, 1984. Greek life was heightened with competition more serious than ever. All of the six sororities and 13 fraternities had several opportunities to test their athletic abilities in competition against each other. This year proved to be Villanova's best ever.

On Saturday the competition began with tennis matches. Sunday, the pie eating, tricycle races and Volkswagen stuffing were held. Events continued throughout the week with Tuesday's six-man relay and obstacle course. Wednesday the Greek God and Goddess contest was held. Winners were: God — Mark Holtzman of Lambda Chi Alpha and the Goddess — Kelly Deegan of Kappa Alpha Theta. John Hughes of Tau Kappa Omega and Lisa Kelly of Tau Kappa Delta were the winners of the triatholon.

The swimming and boat races were held Thursday, with Tug of War and the well-known chariot races following on Friday.

The winners of the week-long baby picture contest were Bo Minogue of Lambda Chi Alpha and Anne Calvin of Delta Delta Delta. The final winners of Greek Week were as follows: Fraternities — 1st place, Lambda Chi Alpha; 2nd place, Pi Kappa Phi and 3rd place, Sigma Phi Epsilon. Sororities — 1st place, Pi Beta Delta; 2nd place, Tau Kappa Delta and 3rd place, Kappa Kappa Gamma.

All of the winners from the events were announced at the Greek Cocktail party which was held in the Villanova Room. Mike Rodey, from the Miller Brewing Company, assisted with the award ceremony. All in all, the week was one of good times shared among fellow Greeks and others of the Villanova community.

Greeks Grow In Popularity

Under the auspices of President John McGee, Vice President Joe Brady, Treasurer Jim Hines and Secretary Peter Wynne, the Inter-Fraternity Council has completed yet another very successful semester. As of now, the Greek population is the highest it has been, and the IFC has certainly become more established and prominent on campus. The IFC deserves a lot of credit for providing the Villanova community, as well as the Greeks, a number of well-planned and well-run events. Tara Austin and Gary Bonas also deserve praise for their outstanding guidance throughout the year.

The individual committees of the IFC have several significant accomplishments. Led by Pete Gerhart of TKO, the IFC now has a sound Code of Ethics (see following story), giving the IFC an improved framework in which to work. The constitution has been updated and it now clearly states the objectives of the present IFC, the credit going to Tony Voci of Delta Tau Delta. Through the efforts of Mike Rourke of Pi Kapps, Nova Greeks have become a much more visible part of the community by the use of this page sponsored monthly in the Villanovan.

John Hartner of LXA headed the Programming Committee and has set precedents to be followed for years to come. The Easter Egg Hunt was a tremendous success again this year, giving the community a chance to come and share Villanova's campus. Parents and children alike had a great time, and a very positive image of Nova Greeks was presented. The Senior Greek Farewell Party had a great start with a huge turn-out and promises to be a tradition continued in future years.

Also, Rob Smith of APO put together a terrific fund raiser in the Atlantic City trip. To continue the growing trend in the Greek population, Rodger Van Allen of DKE is working on an outdoor event for the fall. Hopefully, this will give the fraternities and sororities improved visibility to incoming freshmen. The Rush booklet will once again be published and be part of the freshmen's orientation packets.

The executive board and the committee chairmen and all Nova Greeks are to be praised for an improved image presented to the community. All have worked hard and are to be commended for their fine efforts.

Greek Code Established

The ad hoc Greek Ethics Committee recently completed the final draft of the Greek system Code of Ethics. The code is the official statement representing the values and purpose of all fraternities and sororities at Villanova.

The ethics committee, a joint committee of members from the IFC and Pan hel, has met regularly since October in order to develop this document. The first draft was presented to all fraternity and sorority presidents and faculty advisors in early February. It was well-received and their input was considered in the preparation of the final draft.

The document expresses the ideals of brotherhood and sisterhood along with other primary goals of Greek life, such as academics, social, athletics, service and leadership in their relation to the Villanova community. An underlying theme of the document is the development of the "total person" through participation in fraternities and sororities.

The following people served on the Ethics Committee: Rita Bagnick (Delta Delta Delta), Susan Berg (Kappa Kappa Gamma), William Cranney (Sigma Phi Epsilon), Peter A. Gearhart chairman (Tau Kappa Omega), Susan Gunnery (Tau Kappa Delta), Dr. Oliver Ludwig (Sigma Nu Faculty Advisor) and Kathleen Walsh (Alpha Chi Omega). Members of this committee plan to formally present this document to the Student Life sub-committee on the University's Board of Trustees before the end of this school year.

One of the goals of this year's IFC and Pan hel was the development of such a code of ethics to represent the entire Greek body which is close to 20 percent of the undergraduate student population at Villanova. The code of ethics is regarded by both of these bodies as a positive step in the development of Greek life at Villanova.

Alpha Chi Omega Welcomes New Colony

The Villanova chapter of Alpha Chi Omega is very excited and proud to be the Big Sister School to a new colony of Alpha Chis at Muhlenberg College. Thirty Alpha Chis from Villanova travelled to Allentown, Pa. and participated in Muhlenberg's rush. The colony is off to a great start with over 70 pledges. Joni Walsh of Villanova is working with Muhlenberg's pledge advisor Nancy Fullford in planning activities for the colony. The pledges are planning to visit Villanova. At this time, the pledges will be matched-up with Big Sisters from Villanova.

Alpha Chi's Cathy Poillon worked very hard as Greek Week chairperson. Much time and effort went into planning and organizing the week. It was a great success and a lot of fun.

Charter Members Inducted

Twenty-three fraternity and sorority men and women were initiated as "charter members" of the Villanova Chapter of The Order of Omega on April 8, 1984.

The Order of Omega is the national honorary society among the fraternity and sorority world. Its purposes include the recognition of those men and women who have attained a high standard of leadership in interfraternity activities, thus inspiring them to continue along this line and to inspire others to strive for similar attainments.

Those Greeks who were initiated include: Tara Austin, Lynn Constandy, Julie Dougherty, Niki Eliades, Amy Murray, Sue Perella, Cathy Poillon, Cathy Rahab, Tricia Ring, Suzanne Schwind, Lori Smith, Kelly Ziegler, Dave Arbach, Joe Buggy, Jim Condolff, John Fitzpatrick, Bob Gamble, Bill Gray, John Hartner, John Hughes, Sil Lutkewitte, John McGee and Paul Steidler. Two other charter members, who will be initiated at a later date, are Pete Gearhart and Dr. Oliver Ludwig.

The initiating and chartering ceremonies for the Epsilon Pi Chapter were preceded [illegible] members of the Order of Omega [illegible] were Vic Collazo, assistant dean of students at Susquehanna and student member Doug Freer.

In addition to being an honor society, the Order of Omega is active in helping to mold a positive sentiment throughout the University community on matters of local and intercollegiate fraternity and sorority affairs. The Order further presents an opportunity to bring together faculty, alumni and student members of the University's Greek community on a basis of mutual understanding and helpfulness.

The Order of Omega was founded in 1959 at Miami University in Oxford, Ohio. The Epsilon Pi Chapter at Villanova becomes the 121 chapter of this rapidly expanding national organization.

The newly elected officers of the Villanova chapter include Sil Lutkewitte, president; Joe Buggy, vice president; Suzanne Schwind, secretary; and John Hartner, treasurer.

Jackson Has Lots of Body and Soul

By BOB SMITH

Joe Jackson's career has been characterized continually by its flux and development. From the hard-rocking, angry-young-man persona of his first two LPs, to the more layered feel of his last release, "Night And Day," Jackson has traversed a rather broad musical spectrum, incorporating several classical or jazz recording. In order to accomplish this, Jackson recorded "Body And Soul" in a classical recording hall, using vintage instruments and recording equipment. The L.P.'s concept is one of human emotion and simple down-to-earth optimism, hence the title "Body And Soul."

Indeed, "Body And Soul" is

"Every step of the recording process is nothing more than a step towards the ideal presentation of what really matters: the songs."

—Liner Notes of 'Body and Soul'

several diverse styles. His latest effort, "Body And Soul," continues this development.

According to the liner notes, the purpose of "Body And Soul" is to convey the personal feel of a '40s Jackson's most personal work to date. The songs deal with everyday situations and emphasize the ability to make the best of what's available. Two standouts on this theme are "Go For It" and "Happy Ending." The former cut speaks of beating the odds in life and coming out on top. Jackson cites as examples Babe Ruth and Ray Charles, ending the song with the challenge, "If they could do it, so can you." "Happy Ending" looks at two people in love who are at a movie, and comparing their future to the theme of the picture. A guest vocal appearance by Elaine Caswell, gives the song a fresh, innocent air similar to many of the sixties' girl-group anthems.

The instrumental arrangements are more varied than on Jackson's previous releases, including classical as well as horn arrangements. This brings along an added depth to the music, which is most evident on "The Verdict" and "Heart Of Ice." This comes across with a strong surge of warmth and feeling.

The production on "Body And Soul" is at least as clear as that of "Night And Day," with Jackson playing a more involved role in this area than on previous albums. As a result, the hollow sound that is characteristic of co-producer David Kershembaum which had robbed much of Jackson's previous works of depth and feeling is not evident on "Body And Soul."

Joe Jackson's music has gone from new wave to swing to no-guitars, and now he has adopted a classical sound.

"Body And Soul" seems almost to be a reconciliation when held up next to Jackson's previous LP's. The optimistic air of the record is one that listeners will appreciate. Perhaps most importantly, in an age when albums are recorded with an excess of money and gadgetry, "Body And Soul" shows that real emotion can go further than any amount of technology.

'Police Academy' is Arresting with Laughs

By MIKE MATHIS

"Police Academy" is a refreshing new comedy that lies somewhere between the audacity of "Animal House" and the parodesque humor of "Stripes."

The film is set in the Metropolitan "Police Academy," where a feeble-minded commandant and a power-hungry sergeant preside. The story revolves around Cadet Maloney, a stereotypical Sergeant Max Klinger whose persistence to be dropped from the enrolled cadets is defeated by a hometown police chief who wants nothing better than to make an officer out of him.

Nevertheless, it is Maloney's goal to be thrown out of the academy at any cost. Among the many childish pranks he pulls, Maloney gawks at the female cadets while they are showering and he coats the sergeant's megaphone with shoe polish.

As the film's antagonist, Maloney captures the audience's sympathy as being a man whose life is alienated by those in authority. Through his pranks, as childish as they may seem, Maloney demonstrates his desire for individualism and the ideals of the non-conformist. Thus, it is truly heartening to see someone revolt against a system in which authority is prevalent in every aspect.

Commandant Lassard, played by George Gaynes, is the stereotypical "Old Stoneface." He strolls around the campus in a golf cart and is generally out of touch with everything around him. More importantly, as a pillar of the existing order, he is the vehicle for many of Maloney's practical jokes.

Lieutenant Harris is a man whose aim is to make the cadets hate him for the rest of their lives. Harris accomplishes his aim, but more importantly, he seizes the thing that he is really searching for: respect, although this is not realized until the end of the picture. As the commander of the "D" squad, ("D" for dirtballs, rightly named because they were the worst training platoon at the academy), Harris' job is to make these sorry excuses for cadets into respectable police officers, a job he is convinced will be impossible.

The film falters with the presence of one actor, Bubba Smith, one of the premier defensive tackles in the N.F.L. during the 1970s, is great in winning his arguments with Harris, but unfortunately posesses practically no acting ability. His acting is simply too predictable and he fails to generate any surprises in the film. He barely has any dialogue and his only worthwhile spot in the film is his constant ability to scare those he comes in contact with. But who's going to tell him that he can't act? Not me, that's for sure!

"Police Academy," though not unique in plot structure or setting, has succeeded in showing that lesser-known actors can provide the talent needed for a successful comedy film. "Police Academy" flows well; the jokes, though sometimes stale, are delivered quiet effectively as to give them a new dimension. This is surely a film where one's laughter won't arrest.

Rickie-Boy Holds Up Well

By KAREN GOTTFRIED

Rick Springfield is well known as Dr. Noah Drake on the soap opera "General Hospital." He did not renew his contract, in order to pursue his musical career. Now, he combines acting along with his music to star in the movie, "Hard to Hold."

Springfield fans may have seen him on the screen as Zack in the movie version of "Battlestar Galactica." "Hard to Hold" is Springfield's movie debut as the leading man. In this fine performance he has demonstrated his ability to be a good actor in a movie, as well as in a soap opera. The combination of acting and music is well-blended to produce "Hard to Hold."

The popular rock and roll star Jaime Roberts (played by Springfield) is ending a concert as the movie begins. He is performing one of his songs to an audience of hundreds of screaming young girls. After the concert, Jaime dashes to the back room where the other members of the band join him after the performance. While he is taking a shower he hears the voice of Nicki (played by Patti Hansen). Not wanting to confront her, Jaime sneaks out a backdoor only wearing a towel. As the door closes he realizes that he has locked himself out and runs through the back of the concert hall to escape screaming girls who are chasing him as his towel falls off. Finally he is able to get away, and he borrows pants from a member of the band who is rather large. He also borrows his car and is driving back to his hotel when he side swipes a car crossing the intersection. The driver, Diana, who is played by Janet Eilber, jumps out of the car and demands his insurance card and driver's license. He says he will buy her a new car. The new car is accompanied by roses, which she refuses to accept. From this scene on, Jaime keeps pursuing Diana despite her unwillingness to see him.

The two characters in the movie are opposites who are brought together by their undying love for each other. The character of Jaime Roberts is that of a spontaneous, fun-loving man who realizes he is able to take a chance and commit himself to a relationship. Diana is an independent intellectual who has never even heard of Jaime Roberts. She is reluctant to take such a chance. These character traits not only affect her own actions, they also affect and interfere with Jaime's songwriting and performance.

"Hard to Hold" is an example of Springfield's talent not only as an actor but as a singer and songwriter. The soundtrack to the movie is Springfield's current album. Six songs from this album are played throughout the movie, featuring the hit single "Love Somebody." The timing was appropriate when the music entered the storyline. Although the storyline was somewhat predictable, the movie moved at a fast pace. No doubt, any Rick Springfield fan would especially enjoy this movie.

No Pretending at Tower

By BOB BROWNE

Back after two years of tragedy and change, The Pretenders returned to the Tower Theatre last week with three dynamic, sold-out shows. The band is currently on the tail end of its U.S. tour which began back in January and ends up at Radio City Music Hall in early May. Their current album, "Learning To Crawl," is holding on to the third position on the charts, backed by its latest single, "Show Me," as well as the previous hits "Middle Of The Road" and "Back On The Chain Gang."

This is a different Pretenders than the one we saw back on the '82 tour, as tragedy forced Chrissie Hynde and drummer Martin Chambers to seek out two new band members. The firing of bassist Pete Farndon (who died within a year) and the death of guitarist James Honeyman-Scott just two days later, burst the bubble The Pretenders were enjoying with the success of their first two albums. Rather than pack it up, though, Martin and Chrissie decided to go on with the band and searched for new recruits. After recording the single "Back On The Chain Gang," a tribute to Honeyman-Scott, with Big Country bassist Tony Butler and guitarist Billy Bremner of Rockpile fame, two permanent replacements were sought. Bremner suggested a guitarist he knew, Robbie McIntosh, who in turn brought along a friend of his who played bass, Malcolm Foster, and thus the new lineup was formed. This new foursome retained the original Pretenders sound on vinyl and blended together well in concert.

The Alarm opened things up at the Tower with a powerful ten-song set which had people rushing the stage and unrelentlessly getting into the show. More than a couple of fans were hauled away from the stage, by Security, as the Alarm put on an intense performance.

Chrissie Hynde of the Pretenders

The main attraction came next and The Pretenders took the stage after being introduced with Sinatra's "That's Life." Chrissie and company were all business, starting off with the fast, sensuous rocker, "The Wait." Surrounded by streaming dry ice and a well-equipped light show, the band moved right in to "Message Of Love" and "The Adultress," and things were off to a great start.

The new album was then introduced with the pulsating rhythm of "Time The Avenger," accompanied by Chambers' ferocious drumming and constant supply of drumsticks he was sending out into the crowd.

The band slowed things up in the middle of the show, the highlight being "Thin Line Between Love And Hate," from the new album. The show got rocking again, but the fast beat of "Bad Boys Get Spanked" was a bit sloppy and hard to follow. "Mystery Achievement" was next, and Hynde got into some crowd participation as she offered the mike to some front-rowers whose singing prompted her to comment: "That's why I'm up here and they're down there." She played her trademark blue Telecaster up until the encore and mingled with the crowd the whole show, at times sitting on the edge of the stage.

The Pretenders closed with the favorite "Precious" and came out for one encore. The band surprised everyone with its first encore song, "Room Full Of Mirrors," a freaky Jimi Hendrix tune featuring some unique impressions by McIntosh on slide guitar. Their big hit "Brass In Pocket" was next and the band closed with the thrusting "Tatooed Love Boys."

The Pretenders did a good job covering their material (they played 19 songs) and were good visually, moving all over the stage thanks to cordless units for the guitars. Hynde was at fault, at times missing lyrics, but her voice and stage presence more than made up for these little mistakes.

The new Pretenders' lineup carries on the musical and theatrical traditions of the old. They are a very good live act, especially in a small theatre such as the Tower.

Looking Ahead to the Summer

By NICK ANASTASIO

Well, since this is the last issue of the Villanovan for the year, I decided to devote some space in this column to fill you in on what's going on this summer. I decided on doing this for two reasons: 1. I'm a nice guy, and 2. it's past deadline and I don't know what else to write about. So here goes.

First off, there is the Bruce Springsteen tour. Yes, The Boss has announced plans for a tour this summer. No dates have been set yet, but there will be a tour. Whether or not Springsteen's new album will be out by then is another story.

As for movies, the big story here is the summer release set for "Star Trek III: In Search of Spock." When we last left the crew of the Enterprise, Spock's lifeless body had been jettisoned to a new-born planet. Will the crew find Spock, and if so, as what? Leonard Nimoy, who played ol' Pointy ears, directed this one, and he's not telling anyone what happens to Spock.

Another interesting summer release is Cheech and Chong's "The Corsican Brothers." This movie is interesting because drug jokes are not part of the movie. This is a first for Cheech and Chong. The movie is set in the 17th century, and is based on the original novel of the same name.

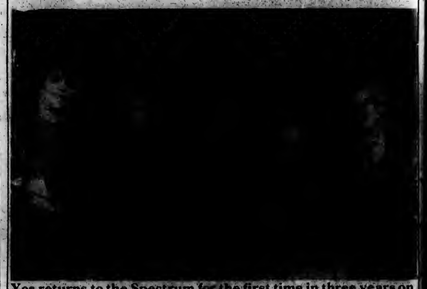
Yes will be at the Spectrum Monday night, for their first concert in Philadelphia since they reformed. Much has been said about the 10 personnel changes that have taken place in the band since its formation in the 1960s, but actually, this is not a record. Jethro Tull, for example, has gone through 13 personnel changes (without ever breaking up), and Roxy Music has experienced at least a dozen personnel changes. Interestingly enough, Eddie Jobson, who almost became the 11th personnel change in Yes (he almost replaced Tony Kaye), was a member of both Jethro Tull and Roxy Music.



Yes returns to the Spectrum for the first time in three years on April 30. Left to right: Trevor Rabin, Alan White, Chris Squire, Jon Anderson and Tony Kaye.

Turning Moods Into Music

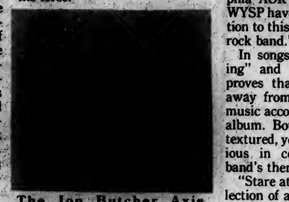
By MIKE MATHIS

On their new album "Stare at the Sun," The Jon Butcher Axis, a Boston-based guitar-oriented trio, proves that rock-and-roll isn't merely muscle, but, more importantly, mood.

Too many of today's rock bands emphasize muscle over mood. Unfortunately, all of the music that these bands produce eventually sounds the same. Jon Butcher, the group's lead vocalist and guitarist, avoided the ego-indulgence of flashy guitar solos commonplace in guitar fronted bands and established what he prefers to call "atmospheric playing," accenting his songs with haunting melodies and successful interaction with his fellow bandmates, drummer Derek Blevins and bassist Chris Martin.

This spirit is extended on "Stare at the Sun," the trio's second Polydor/Polygram LP. Butcher views the album as a reinforcement of the ideas that were presented on the debut album. "Our lyrical and basic musical stance is still the same, though my guitar playing is decidedly more aggressive."

The first single released from the album is a song called "Don't say Goodbye," a composition molded with Butcher's rock and soul vocals and steady rock-and-roll guitar playing. "Wind it Up" is the same thing; a forceful rocker with the tune's mood outmuscling the force.



The Jon Butcher Axis. Butcher is in the middle.

Yet unlike John Butcher Axis' previous single, "Life Takes a Life," neither of these songs have been given ample airtime in the Philadelphia area. For a band whose musical influences are vast, varied, and not particularly coherent in the songs, the Jon Butcher Axis formula is certainly one of a kind. Boston radio stations WBCN and WCOZ, the first AOR stations in the country to air the group's songs, continue to play the band's songs, yet the translation seems to have been lost between the miles. Philadelphia AOR stations WMMR and WYSP have paid little or no attention to this emerging "alternative rock band."

In songs such as "Eros Waiting" and "Victims," the group proves that it has not strayed away from the focused style of music accomplished on their first album. Both songs are roughly textured, yet mellow and harmonious in concordance with the band's theme.

"Stare at the Sun" is a fine collection of alternative rock music. It provides the listener not only with good music, but also inspires philosophical reflection in the lyrics. It is not a "listen and pass the time" record; instead, it is a "think, theorize, and reflect" record, meant for those who take the out-of-the-ordinary seriously.

D-Train in Alley Cat

By MICHAEL HEALEY

Little did Alley Cat Tournament founder Eddie Wallace (V.U., '81) know that one day his basketball brainchild would assume a niche among sports premier events, ranking right up there with the U.S. Mud Wrestling Championships. Yet, under the methodic madness of the Rev. John F. Stack, O.S.A., current tourney coordinator, the Alley Cat Hoop Tourney, the social-athletic event of the spring, has done just that.

Begun by Wallace in 1981, Alley Cat had an original field of 16 teams. With live television coverage, amazing undergraduate athletes and Stack's unique ability to promote events that he is sponsoring, however, this year's extravaganza attracted some 40 teams, its largest draw ever.

The tourney final, delayed until yesterday because of rain, pitted perenially tough D-Train versus the very tall Jello Pudding Pops, featuring the likes of Harold Pressley, Dave Torrez, Eric Holzer, Andy Wozniak, Mike Bacha and Tim Brussnock. With offensive guns Dwayne McClain et al, though, D-Train assuredly deserves its first seed billing, although the squad found the going to the final a bit rougher this time than in years past. Oh, the beauty of Alley Cat.

For one thing, D-Train actually lost a game in this year's tourney, an unprecedented occurrence. In a matchup, Fr. Jack Stack termed "the biggest upset in four years," the Hosers, a team comprised of no varsity athletes, derailed D-Train en route to the finals.

Other Alley Cat highlights included Stack's own Stackers dropping a close one to unheralded Aahh ("definitely an upset when my team goes down," said Stack); a hasty tourney departure by traditional powerhouse, the Buzzcocks; countless untethered spacewalks by the Cream Team's senior leaper Mike Koribanics; and the performance of And One, a Cinderella team that, according to Stack, "went far and had nothing, and I mean, had nothing."

Villanova Hockey Results

Paul Critchley, a sophomore who will captain the Cats next year, was placed on the first team defense and was also the winner of the Best Defenseman award.

Senior Captain Frank Segreto was recently awarded the league's MVP.

Fred Christie, a departing senior, won as the first team goalie.

And finally, Captain Frank Segreto was awarded both the first team forward and the Most Valuable Player award.

When asked to comment upon the results, Segreto said, "It's good that Huston and Critchley will be back, we can definitely use them. And winning the Best Defenseman award is a good sign. As for my awards, I'm excited about it, and it came as a surprise. But, the big one is still winning the Cup. Given the choice of an award or the Cup, I, and I'm sure the others would agree, the Cup would definitely be the choice."

On The Tee-Off on Golf

By [illegible] AGNES [illegible]

[illegible] Villa[illegible] lesser-known [illegible]raity B[illegible] squads is the [illegible]cat golf team.

The coaches for the squad are Rick Collins, head coach, and Henry Leszczynski, his assistant. So far this season the team boasts a 10-3 record. The season began on March 26 with a home opener against Army and Townshend State at the Aronimink Golf Club, (West Chester was also scheduled to compete, but later forfeited the match).

Evaluation of points is based on a judging system which takes the best five of seven scores. Nova shot 395, Army 400, and Townshend State had 414. Ken Dardis and Chet Walsh both shot low with scores of 77.

On April 3 the squad traveled to Drexel to play at the Edgemont Country Club. The Cats shot 380, and Drexel turned in a 386. Low-shooting players included both Mike McKenney with 75 and Bill Davis with 76.

In the Franklin and Marshall encounter, at the Media Heights County Club, Nova came out on top with a score of 408, ahead of Franklin and Marshall's 413, and Widener's 470 points.

Recently, Villanova hosted Delaware and once again, low-scoring for the Cats were Walsh with 74 and Dardis with an 81.

An outst[illegible] player on the Nova squa[illegible] Walsh, who [illegible] the age of six, [illegible] seven boys in a family of 15 and originally became interested the sport by watching his brot[illegible] and his father play. Moreover, his father was the captain of the Wildcat squad in 1943. In addition, this talented athlete is seriously considering turning professional. According to Walsh, "I have a long way to go. I am inconsistent; I have to fix that. Also, I have to keep my temper — you can lose a lot of shots if you lose your temper."

Another player, junior Bill Davis, just joined the team this year. He only began to play golf seriously last summer and already he has contributed greatly to the squad, scoring low in several key victories. With regard to the team, Davis said, "I think the program has a lot going for [illegible] They're buliding up [illegible] and trying to be very [illegible] in the Big East. The m[illegible] really easy to get along with [illegible] we're pretty well-balanced ability wise."

Looking at the season in general, Walsh summed it up by saying, "The team has been marred by inconsistency. No one's been playing really solid; all have had a few bad rounds. We're still waiting for when everyone plays well together."
